Mr. HARRISON. I introduce a bill, to be referred to the Committee on Finance, declaring a policy relative to benefits for veterans of the World War, and providing for optional conversion of adjusted-service certificates. I ask that the bill may be printed in full in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2605) declaring a policy relative to benefits for veterans of the World War, and providing for the optional conversion of adjusted-service certificates, was read twice by its title, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill declaring a policy relative to benefits for veterans of the World War, and providing for the optional conversion of adjusted-service certificates

Be it enacted, etc., That in view of the generous benefits accorded by the Government to veterans of the World War, in the form of insurance, compensation, disability allowances, hospitalization, vocational rehabilitation, adjusted compensation (as liberalized by this act), preference of various kinds under legislation of general application, and other benefits and allowances, many of which have not been granted to veterans of prior wars, it is hereby expressly declared to be the policy of Congress that there should not be any general pension laws enacted for veterans of the World War or their dependents; and nothing in this act shall be construed as indicating a tendency toward a contrary policy, or as implying that favorable consideration will be given at any time to a change in the policy hereby declared.

SEC. 2. Section 507 of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended, is hereby further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 507. All amounts in the fund shall be available for payment by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs of adjusted-service certificates upon their maturity or the prior death of the veteran; for payment under section 502 to banks on account of loans to veterans; for the repayment of loans made by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs out of the United States Government Life Insurance Fund on security of adjusted-service certificates, in which case the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall pay interest to such fund to date of maturity of the loan at the rate such fund is authorized to receive under the provisions of subdivision (m) of section 502, as amended; and for payment by the Secretary of the Treasury to veterans of the amount of the cash payment authorized to be paid by this act upon the surrender of their adjusted-service certificates."

SEC. 3. Title V of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended, is further amended by adding at the end thereof a new section, to read as follows:

"SEC. 509. (a) At the option and upon the application of any veteran to whom there has been lawfully issued an adjusted-service certificate under the provisions of this act, as amended, and upon the complete surrender of such adjusted-service certificate, together with all rights and privileges thereunder (with or without the consent of the beneficiary thereof), the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount of the adjusted-service credit and interest at 4 percent per annum compounded annually from November 11, 1918, to January 1, 1945, or to the 1st day of the January or July next succeeding the date of the filing of the application with the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, whichever is the earliest date, less any indebtedness of the veteran on account of any loan or loans made under the provisions of this act and interest, if any, accrued to the date settlement is made: Provided, That if at the date of the maturity of any certificate such certificate has not been surrendered, and if at the time of application for payment the amount of the adjusted-service credit and interest at 4 percent per annum compounded annually from November 11, 1918, to the date of payment or to January 1, 1945, whichever is the earlier date, exceeds the maturity value, then such amount (in lieu of the maturity value), less the amount of any indebtedness required to be deducted under this act shall be paid immediately by check drawn on the Treasurer of the United States.

"(b) No payment shall be made nor bonds issued under this section until the certificate is in the possession of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs and all obligations for which the certificate was held as security have been paid or otherwise discharged.

"(c) If at the time of application to the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs for settlement under this section the principal and interest on or in respect of any loan upon the certificate have not been paid in full (whether or not the loan has matured), then the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall (1) pay or otherwise discharge such unpaid principal and so much of the unpaid interest (accrued or to accrue) as is necessary to make the certificate available for payment under this section, and (2) deduct from the amount of any settlement the amount of such principal with all interest to date of settlement under the provisions of this act: Provided, That as to any loan on an adjusted-service certificate, properly made, which is unpaid and held by a bank at the time of filing an application under this section, the bank holding the note and certificate shall, upon notice from the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, present them to the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs for payment to the bank in full satisfaction of its claim for the amount of unpaid principal and unpaid interest; except that if the bank, after such notice, fails to present the certificate and note to the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs within 15 days after the mailing of the notice, such interest shall be paid only up to the 15th day after the mailing of such notice.

"(d) Upon the filing of an application for benefits under this section the certificate and all rights and privileges thereunder shall be canceled.

"(e) A veteran may receive the benefits of this section by application therefor filed with the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs during the lifetime of the veteran. Such application may be made and filed at any time (1) personally by the veteran or (2) in case physical or mental incapacity prevents the filing of a personal application, then by such representative of the veteran and in such manner as may be by regulations prescribed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs. Application made by a person other than a representative authorized by such regulations shall be held void.

"(f) If the veteran dies after the application has been filed, the settlement authorized under the provisions of section 509 of this act shall be made to the estate of the veteran.

"(g) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed, upon receipt from the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs of a statement in a form to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, to issue, in settlement of the amount certified to be due, negotiable bonds, with coupons attached, bearing interest at the rate of 3 percent per annum payable semiannually, up to the highest multiple of $50 represented in the amount certified. Such bonds shall be dated from the 1st day of the January or July (whichever is the earlier date) next succeeding the date of the filing of the application with the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, and shall be redeemable in lawful money of the United States at a date to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury. The difference between the net amount certified to be due and the amount represented by the bonds issued shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury by check drawn on the Treasurer of the United States. For a period of 6 months from the date of issuance, no bond issued under the authority of this act shall be negotiable or assignable, or used as collateral security for a loan, by the person to whom the bond is issued, for any consideration less than the amount shown on the face of the bond as the redemption value; and any person or persons entering into any agreement either on behalf of themselves or others to procure by purchase, exchange, or otherwise any bond in violation of this provision shall be guilty of a fraud and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both.

"(h) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to redeem from the United States Government Life Insurance Fund all adjusted-service certificates held by that fund on account of loans made thereon, and to pay to the United States Government Life Insurance Fund the amount of the outstanding liens against such certificates, including all interest due or accrued, together with such amounts as may be due under subdivision (m) of section 502, as amended. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to make such payment by issuing to the United States Government Life Insurance Fund bonds of the United States which shall bear interest at the rate of 4½ percent per annum, and no such bonds shall mature or be callable until the expiration of a period of at least 10 years from date of issue."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Georgia what action was taken by the conferees with reference to the appropriation for the eradication of what are known as "noxious weeds"?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the Senate amendment on that subject was offered in the committee, I believe, by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON]. It appropriated $100,000 for scientific investigation concerning the control and eradication of weeds. When the bill reached the floor of the Senate, on motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], that amendment was amended to make it apply to binderweed, bindweed, and other noxious weeds. In the conference the appropriation was reduced from $100,000 to $25,000, and that is the amount carried in the report of the conferees.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask what was the idea of the conferees in cutting down that amount, when the amount which was appropriated was exceedingly small?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senate conferees insisted on that amendment perhaps more strenuously, with one or two exceptions, than they did on any other amendment in the bill. The House conferees, however, took the position that there was no Budget estimate for the appropriation; that the Department had not sought the appropriation; and that there was not sufficient justification therefor. I read to the committee of conference part of the statement of the Senator from Nebraska on the subject which was made on the floor of the Senate. That statement, in my opinion, was some justification for the appropriation, but the House conferees were adamant; and believing it to be the province of the committee of conference to agree on legislation and secure the passage of some kind of an agricultural appropriation bill rather than to defer it indefinitely because of items which, while important, do not affect the larger sphere of the entire bill, the item was compromised. So $25,000 was finally arrived at by the conferees as the amount of that item.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand correctly that the conferees on the part of the House took the position that the Department did not ask for the amount provided by the Senate?

Mr. RUSSELL. They did.

Mr. BORAH. The Department informed me that they not only desired that amount but even a larger amount.

Mr. RUSSELL. It was stated in the committee of conference that the Department had not asked the House committee for the amount and that it made absolutely no showing to sustain the item before the subcommittee which conducted the hearings in the House.

Mr. BORAH. How much is provided for the item in the bill as it now stands?

Mr. RUSSELL. As it stands, the bill contains the original appropriation of $36,675, with an increase of $25,000, which makes $61,675, "of which $25,000 shall be expended in connection with State agricultural colleges for scientific investigation concerning control and eradication of bindweed." That is what the amendment provides as set forth in the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. BORAH. I have no doubt the conferees on the part of the Senate did what they could to maintain the appropriation, but I desire to place in the RECORD my opinion that it is exceedingly unfortunate that a larger amount has not been provided. This is one of the most important matters with which we have to deal in certain parts of the West. It is a problem known as the "noxious weed problem", composed of a number of weeds which are literally destroying large portions of fine agricultural land. To begin the eradication of the bindweed with $61,000 is to my mind a mere pretense. I urge we send the report back and let us remedy this mistake.

Mr. RUSSELL. In connection with the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho, I will say that the Senate conferees did not think the $25,000 was wholly adequate and insisted strenuously on $100,000. However, I wish to point out to the Senator from Idaho that the original amendment did not propose a campaign to eradicate the bindweed, but merely a scientific investigation in cooperation with agricultural colleges to determine methods of combating and eradicating the bindweed. It did not propose any campaign other than a scientific investigation in conjunction with agricultural colleges. Of course, the amount of $100,000 carried in the Senate amendment would be wholly inadequate to attempt to eradicate the weed where it may be found on the farms.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, there would have to be something in the nature of an investigation in order to determine upon methods to eradicate the weed before it could be eradicated. I still maintain the amount here provided is not sufficient in any sense whatever for the purpose of eradicating the weed.

Mr. RUSSELL. The amendment as adopted by the Senate provided for a scientific investigation concerning control and eradication of the bind weed, but not for any campaign of eradication. That question was not before the conference committee. It was never proposed in the Senate to provide for anything more than a scientific investigation of methods of control.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I wish I could have Senators understand the importance of this appropriation and the necessity of doing something with regard to this matter.

Let me say in the beginning that in opposing the conference report I want it distinctly understood that in no sense am I trying to cast any reflection upon the conferees on the part of the Senate. I think they did everything they could and only yielded because it was necessary to yield in order to obtain any report whatever.

I wish also to say that, if the report shall be rejected, it will not mean the killing of the appropriation bill. It will mean only a very short session of the conferees to ascertain if the Senate conferees can induce the House conferees to take the question to the House and let the House vote upon it. If the House shall vote it down, then I will be ready to concede, I will say to the Senator from Georgia, that the Senate has done everything it can. It cannot, of course, expect to get an appropriation without the consent of the House. However, the House has never voted upon this item.

I have no interest in this item, I am sure, that every other Senator and every Representative does not also have. I am perfectly satisfied to take the judgment of the House if, after considering the amendment, they shall vote upon it. It is extremely important, although on its face it may not seem so. I desire to convince the Senate, if I can, that it would be almost an economic sin if we do not embrace this opportunity to have the matter go back to conference with a view of getting the House conferees to submit the question to the House and let the House vote on it.

The bindweed is something comparatively new, although its qualities and the weed itself, of course, have been known for a great many years. There are parts of 20 States in the Union which are now infested with this destructive weed. Our scientific experts do not now know of any method for its destruction that is not so expensive as almost to take the land in order to obtain sufficient funds to eliminate it when it is once thoroughly started in the soil.

I think the House conferees probably, without casting any reflection on them, did not know just what this weed really is, but thought it simply a weed. They do not realize that if its ravages are not suppressed, if some cheaper method of destroying it is not devised and put into practical operation, it will be only a comparatively short time until a large area in the great Middle West now available for the production of agricultural crops will be absolutely destroyed.

The appropriation bill passed the House, and while it was pending before the Senate Committee on Appropriations there was held in Washington a meeting of delegates from farmers and farmer organizations from most of the Western States, including Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, South Dakota, Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas, Wyoming, and I think one or two other States. They had no opportunity to appear before the House committee, because the bill had already passed the House. I was invited to attend the meeting, as were several others. Although most of the invited Senators did not attend, there was a large number of Members of the House at the meeting. There were very extensive explanations made of the nature of the bindweed. There was a moving-picture display showing the weed in all its peculiarities; and the sentiment there, particularly on the part of the House Members who were present, was, "This bill has gone beyond the control of the House. If you can get an appropriation for investigation by the Department in conjunction with the money that will be gladly furnished by the States for the purpose of determining some cheaper and more effective method of destroying this weed, there will be no trouble in the House of Representatives. If you can secure that kind of an amendment in the committee, and have it adopted by the Senate, the House will at once agree to the amendment."

When the bill went to the House it evidently went through the usual formality of a request for unanimous consent that all Senate amendments be disagreed to and that the bill be sent to conference. That is the ordinary procedure. So far as I know, the attention of the House was never called to the real condition affecting agriculture and land infested with the bindweed. So the bill went to conference, and probably the House conferees naturally thought—I am not complaining even of the House conferees—that this was just a step to get some more money to fight a weed, thinking of the bindweed as an ordinary weed.

That is not the case at all. We have spent millions of dollars on behalf of the cotton industry to exterminate the bollweevil. When that campaign started no one knew how to meet the ravages of the bollweevil; but the Agricultural Department, after the expenditure of a great deal of money, devised practical methods for its extermination. Unless exterminated, the bollweevil meant the ruin almost of a large number of States which depend mainly upon the production of cotton.

We have now a very similar problem before us. This weed affects the States that produce corn, potatoes, wheat, barley, and rye, all farm crops that grow in the latitude of the great Middle West; and, unless we take some steps to eradicate a weed that we do not now know how to eradicate, unless we expend too much money for the purpose, it begins to look now as if this weed will destroy agriculture in a large number of States.

The bindweed is spreading. Its spread is not so rapid, for instance, as that of the bollweevil was, but it is just as sure. It is progressing all the time, until the people in the West who have had to do with it now recognize that it is a terrible menace to agriculture.

In appearance, the bindweed is something like a morning glory. It spreads under the ground through its roots. Its seed is carried in various ways, so that gradually the territory it covers is extended. One seed dropped on one farm will not hurt anything for a year or 2 or 3 years; but gradually the weed will cover a little more area, and a little more, and a little more, until before the farmer knows it the weed covers the entire farm.

Even at the present time not all the farmers of the West understand the danger of the bindweed; but where it has once started, where it has commenced its ravages, they realize that they are contending with a real enemy to agriculture. We desire to devise some better method for its extermination. We desire to do as we have done with other pests; we wish to have the Federal Government, in cooperation with the States, try to devise some practical method of destroying the weed.

Land infested with bindweed is practically worthless. Where it once has obtained a strong foothold, it costs more to exterminate it than the land is worth. At the present time the Federal land bank, backed by the Government of the United States, will not loan money upon land that is known to be infested with bindweed to any great extent. Gradually the weed reduces the crop, and when it thoroughly covers the ground it entirely destroys the crop.

Under any method now known, it costs from $25 to $35 an acre to exterminate the weed. It takes 2 years' time to do it, and the farmer loses the use of the land during all that time. That means that for practical purposes the ordinary farmer who has to make a living and something besides, if he can, from his farm, cannot resort to the known methods now in use.

One of the ways of exterminating bindweed is by the application of sodium chlorate. Sodium chlorate, when the farmer gets it in the West, costs about 8 cents a pound, bought in carload lots. A great deal of it is imported. I understand that the farmers in Norway, where they have the bindweed, get sodium chlorate for about a cent and a half or 2 cents a pound. There is a tariff on it, for one thing, which increases its cost here. All of this is added to the cost.

There is another way of exterminating the bindweed, the only practical way left for the farmer except where he is going to exterminate it along hedgerows, or along the roadside, or along fences, where he can use sodium chlorate; but in the field, out in the open, he exterminates it mainly by cultivation. He has to have a particular kind of cultivator. The ordinary cultivator will not serve for this purpose, so he has to invest in another kind of cultivator. He has to keep the land out of cultivation. He has to cultivate it on an average once a week for the first year, and nearly as often as that for the second year. How successful he will be depends somewhat on the weather; but, ordinarily speaking, the bindweed grows in all kinds of weather. It can stand drought; it can stand floods; its roots have been known in some instances to reach a depth of 15 feet. It will go out with its twining vines for 15 feet in each direction from one plant, and all along the vine there will be new buds, new plants growing.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. Has there been developed any method of eradicating or checking this weed?

Mr. NORRIS. That is just what it is sought to do by this amendment. So far no practical way has been devised. The weed can be exterminated, but it costs too much money to do it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. If I did not misunderstand a person in the Department of Agriculture to whom I talked—and I do not think I did misunderstand him—the Department does not feel that this is a sufficient amount with which really to undertake this great task. There must be a misunderstanding somewhere if the House conferees received the impression that the Department is satisfied with this amount.

Mr. RUSSELL. Oh, no; Mr. President, I did not intend to create that impression by my answer to the Senator's question. I meant that the House conferees stated that the Department, in the presentation of the regular supply bill, made absolutely no showing of any necessity whatever for an appropriation for this specific purpose. I did not undertake to convey the idea that the Department did not wish the appropriation, or that they thought the amount provided in the conference report was sufficient. I stated that there was no Budget estimate for it, and that the matter was not submitted to the House committee in the first instance when the bill was prepared, nor to the Senate committee, for that matter, by any evidence or hearing of any kind.

Mr. BORAH. On that statement, then, perhaps there was not a misunderstanding; but I think I am perfectly justified in saying that the Department believes that it ought to have a larger amount of money in order effectually to deal with the investigation of this weed. I think I can state with certainty that I am correct in my construction of what they said.

Mr. RUSSELL. That thought was not made manifest through the regular channels by which appropriations are sought, by having estimates submitted to the Bureau of the Budget, or by the Bureau of the Budget to the Congress; nor was there any hearing before the House Committee on Appropriations, a subcommittee of which conducted very exhaustive hearings—over 1,800 printed pages in length—or before the Senate subcommittee on the agricultural supply bill. The amendment was offered by a member of the committee from information which had come to him, from some farmers, and was supported by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] in a very able explanation on the floor of the Senate when the bill was pending here. That statement constituted the only record we had before us.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Georgia states the facts. There have not been any hearings on the subject. That is conceded. Before I sit down I shall read a letter on the subject from the Secretary of Agriculture. The explanation is that the farmers of the great West are just awakening to the terrible dangers that are confronting them at a time when their crops are very much reduced from other causes.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator how many States are affected by this weed?

Mr. NORRIS. Twenty States, as I understand.

Mr. SMITH. Does the Senator know where the weed originated?

Mr. NORRIS. I think some of the literature I have here states the origin of the weed. It has been known for a great many years, but its ravages have not been fully realized. I think as a rule the farmers have had this matter brought to their attention particularly because of the drought that has existed in most of the part of the country infested by the weed. Heretofore, they had plenty of land; and while they had some land that was infested with the bindweed, they did not realize its danger, because they had enough land left for raising their crops.

At the present time it is brought to our attention, almost suddenly, although some of the experiment stations have been studying it a good many years.

I want to read from literature which some of the States have issued, showing not only the destructive nature of the weed but the practical impossibility of getting rid of it by known methods.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Will the Senator for the RECORD enumerate the States in which the weed is found?

Mr. NORRIS. A short time ago I gave the names of most of the States which I thought were infested with the weed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I merely desire to observe that it has just come to my attention that the conference report strikes out not only a portion of the appropriation, but also a portion of the amendment which was added by the Senate; namely, that which authorized the expenditure of the fund proposed to be appropriated not only for a study of the bindweed, but of other noxious weeds. The result of the amendment, if it is permitted to stand, will be that this added appropriation can be used only for a study of the bindweed, and in the public-land States, in the State of Idaho, for example, and in the State of Wyoming, there are other noxious weeds which constitute a serious peril to agriculture. I feel that it would be a grave mistake for the Senate not to stand on the amendment as it was originally adopted by this body.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I hold in my hand bulletin no. 269, issued by the Kansas State College of Agriculture. Most of the Senators can see the picture of the field I exhibit, a field covered with bindweed. Then there is a picture of a field which was covered with the bindweed, but later eradicated by the use of sodium chlorate. I explained a few moments ago why that was not a practical method of extermination. It costs too much money. I think that one of the results of the study we desire to have made will probably be the cheapening of the manufacture of sodium chlorate, and bringing the price down to a point where that chemical may be used.

I have here also photographs of the different instruments used in the killing of this weed. Here [exhibiting] is a picture of a spray by which sodium chlorate is applied. Here are pictures of sprays upon trucks, for larger areas of country. Here also are pictures of the different kinds of farm implements which must be used in the cultivation of soil for the extermination of bindweed. It will be noticed, if Senators will look at these pictures, that such cultivators are entirely different from those the farmer usually employs; so he must procure a cultivator particularly adapted to this kind of work if he wishes to exterminate the bindweed by that method.

Let me say that one of the experiment stations in Iowa has conducted extensive investigations into the eradication of this weed. The stations in Nebraska have made some experiments, but perhaps more work has been done in Kansas in that line than in any other State. I have here a statement prepared by the College of Agriculture of Kansas, from which I quote the following:

> Field bindweed is by far the most dangerous and destructive weed found in Kansas. It is dangerous because of the rapidity with which it spreads, the ease with which the seed may be distributed over the State, and because of its influence on the yields of crops and land values.

I call attention to the fact that States are not able to deal with this problem except in conjunction with the Federal Government. Portions of Wisconsin are infested with the bindweed, and that State has some very good legislation respecting seeds, and they are very careful, proceeding under their laws, that noxious seed shall not get a start in Wisconsin. But the strict inspections result in raising the price a little in the case of seeds tested and passed on by the proper officials.

We find that bindweed has been bootlegged into the State of Wisconsin, not for the purpose of spreading bindweed, it is true, but because the seed that was approved by the officials of Wisconsin would be a little higher in price, and so other seed containing bindweed has been trucked in. Different kinds of seeds, in which there was some bindweed, came from Illinois. It would not have passed inspection under the laws of Wisconsin, but it was sold at a lower price. The man who sold it might have been innocent—the man who bought it, of course, was innocent—of any knowledge that it has a little bindweed seed in it. The result was that in parts of Wisconsin the area of bindweed-infested soils has been greatly increased, although the State itself has passed proper laws and has been enforcing them to the very best of its ability.

This Kansas bulletin says further:

> It has been estimated that 350,000 acres of farm land in Kansas are infested with bindweed and that the infested acreage is increasing at the rate of about 10 percent annually. Conservative estimates indicate that the cost of eradicating bindweed that exists in Kansas at present would be approximately $8,000,000, extended over a period of 10 years. This estimate includes the cost of all labor and materials.

The bulletin discloses further the character of labor and materials which are necessary. It is necessary not only that a farmer who has bindweed on his farm should exterminate it for his own benefit, but it is necessary for the protection of other farmers in the community, in the same township, or in the same county, because the seed is carried by the wind, or, if the weed occurs in a field of wheat and the wheat is threshed, the threshing machine will carry some of it all over the surrounding country. It is carried also by hogs and cattle, which, in eating their feed, eat some bindweed with it. It will go through cattle and hogs and grow afterward.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I have observed that the able Senator has commented upon the fact that this destroying agency, whatever it is, came by way of Illinois into Wisconsin, also that Wisconsin had passed such laws as were necessary to protect itself. May I ask the Senator whether the State of Illinois has any law upon the subject which would have protected the State of Illinois?

Mr. NORRIS. It may have; I am not informed as to that.

Mr. LEWIS. Was there any method by which Illinois could have prevented the departure of this seed to the State of Wisconsin?

Mr. NORRIS. O Mr. President, I am not blaming the State of Illinois for what happened.

Mr. LEWIS. Knowing that many things in different portions of this country are attributed to Illinois, much to the affliction of certain parties, I was anxious to redeem it as to one.

Mr. NORRIS. This bulletin continues:

> Field bindweed is a long-lived perennial belonging to the morning glory family. The plant produces a trailing or twining growth of vines which climb up any support such as other weeds and stems of crop plants, or if such plants are not available, the plant will spread over the ground. The root system is very extensive and penetrates the soil to a depth of 4 feet or more, and roots have been found to reach a depth of 15 to 25 feet. The main roots are long, whitish cords about one-tenth of an inch in diameter, with many branches. These roots may form buds and give rise to new plants anywhere along their length. The bindweed spreads rapidly by underground root stocks, surface runners, and seed.
> Bindweed has become widely distributed throughout Kansas, and it is known to exist, at least to some extent, in every county in the State. The heaviest infestation occurs in central Kansas—

And so on.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask whether the bindweed of which the Senator speaks, and the morning glory weed are the same?

Mr. NORRIS. Bindweed is not the same as the morning glory, but it is of the same family, and is something like it.

Mr. BORAH. I was advised by farmers in my State that the most serious weed they have to contend with is the morning glory weed.

Mr. NORRIS. They were referring, evidently, to bindweed. It is known as morning glory weed in some places.

In the bulletin which I have been exhibiting to the Senate there are photographs of the leaves and of the roots of the bindweed, and also of the morning glory. There is some difference, but they are of the same character. The weed is called by different names in different localities.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator just read a statement to the effect that the weed springs from formations of buds on the root, and that the root is sometimes found as deep as 15 feet.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. That would indicate that there would be very great difficulty in eradicating it.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator on that point that the cultivators which have been devised and which probably will be much improved as further studies of the problem are conducted, have lateral extensions made very sharp so as to cut off this weed 3 or 4 inches below the surface. The weed is not killed until it is cut off several times. Cultivation is begun on a piece of ground, the weeds are cut off once, and in a few weeks they will appear to be just as bad as they previously were. They are cut off again and the cutting is continued all summer. That is done for 2 years.

Usually not much of a result will be apparent until the beginning of the second year. The cutting is done completely over the field as often as necessary, so that the weed never goes to seed. When it comes up, it is cultivated again. Depending on the weather, the cultivation will average once a week, and after the weed is cut off several times it is killed.

I now desire to read from the bulletin about the reduction of crops in Kansas due to this weed:

Studies made by the Department of Agronomy of the Kansas Agricultural Experiment Station in 1934 show that the average yield of oats on bindweed-infested land was 16.6 bushels per acre, while on adjoining land free of bindweed the average yield was 30.9 bushels per acre. The yield of wheat on bindweed infested land was 13.8 bushels per acre, while on adjoining land free of bindweed it was 20.9 bushels per acre.

That has reference to land which is not completely covered by bindweed. Where the bindweed has completely taken possession of the soil the land will not produce anything else. The weed will kill any crop which is growing. This bulletin states what would probably be the loss to the farmers of Kansas due to this weed. I am using Kansas as an example because Kansas has probably done more and has gone further in experimenting with methods of eradication of bindweed than any other State in the Union, and has spent more money in doing it. It is very commendable of Kansas that it has done so. What I say about Kansas, therefore, is in no sense a criticism.

I heard farmers from Kansas say at the meeting of which I spoke a while ago that where a piece of land had become infested with the weed so that its effect was beginning to be felt, the farmer could not sell his land; and I heard men living in such a community say, "I would not pay a dollar an acre for land which was covered with it. It would cost more to get rid of it than I would have to pay for other land which has no bindweed on it."

On this basis it is apparent that if bindweed is not controlled, and is permitted to spread throughout the State, it would reduce the yields of farm crops to such an extent that it will be impossible to farm economically. If all of the land in Kansas that is normally seeded to wheat was infested with bindweed, and the yields were reduced the same percent as were the yields in the fields where the determinations given above were made, the annual loss to Kansas farmers would exceed $40,000,000 when a price of 90 cents a bushel is placed upon the wheat.

Reduced yield of crops resulting from bindweed is reflected in land values.

Of course, it is apparent to anyone that this kind of weed infesting a farm would practically destroy its value. It is known that unless it is exterminated it will in time cover the entire farm, and when it does the farm is worthless.

The bulletin continues:

Estimating that the total cost of eradication of field bindweed in Kansas will amount to approximately $8,000,000, extended over a period of 10 years, it is evident that, as the program progresses year by year, the annual cost will correspondingly decrease, especially for such items as material, number of sprayers needed, number of local supervisors, local laborers, and number of days employed.

In this bulletin there is given what I consider a very conservative estimate of the cost. The bulletin tells what equipment is necessary. It says that 270 sprayers would be required, at $400 each, which would cost $108,000. If we were starting out to exterminate this weed in a community, we should have to exterminate it along the roadsides, fence rows, and pasture lands which one would not want to plow. That would have to be done with the use of sodium chlorate, for instance. It could be done with salt, if enough salt were put on the land. That would eradicate the weeds, but it would also destroy the land. The land in such case would have too much salt on it.

The estimate specifies 200 cultivators at $125 each, making a total of $25,000. The estimate continues:

Maintenance and operation of equipment: 270 sprayers at $40 per year, $10,800; 200 cultivators at $5 per year, $1,000; oil and gas, $1.50 per day, 270 machines, $40,500.

Materials: Chemicals for spray treatment, 270 cars, 40,000 pounds each, at 8 cents, $864,000—

And so on. The estimate is made on the theory of exterminating bindweed in Kansas and the costs are all itemized. When the items are added up the total cost is over $8,000,000.

The expenditure of that amount would save the land which is not infested, just as it would save the land which is infested; and the object of the appropriation under discussion is to devise some method by which it can be done without an expense which would mean the ruin of the farmer if he had to use the methods which are now known.

I will say again, Mr. President, that I am asking that the conference report be rejected without casting any reflection upon the conferees of the House or of the Senate. The conferees of the Senate have stood nobly by the action of the Senate. The conferees of the House evidently have not understood the seriousness of this problem. What we have a right to ask is that the conferees on the part of the Senate shall say to the conferees on the part of the House, "Take this measure back to the House. Let the House vote on it. If the House votes us down, no matter how badly we feel, we shall have to be satisfied."

That is as far as I want to go, and so far we ought to be allowed to go. If we delay this experimentation, the result will be increased expenditures if, in the future, we shall undertake to eradicate the bindweed; and unless we shall eradicate it, millions and millions of acres of the best agricultural land in the United States will be destroyed. States such as Kansas, for instance, have already spent a large sum of money on this weed. This amendment provides that the money appropriated for the Agricultural Department shall be used in conjunction with the State experiment stations. The States are going to put up some money, probably more than the Federal Government will put up, in order to bring about this experimentation.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I have listened to the speech of the able Senator from Nebraska, and I also heard his address when the amendment was before the Senate. Should we not, as a service to the people, treat this menace as if it were some invading army?

Mr. NORRIS. I think so, Mr. President.

Mr. ASHURST. We should spend money, and properly so, if one particular portion of our country were invaded by an army, in order to repel that army. I see nothing unreasonable in treating the bindweed pest in the manner proposed by the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly, Mr. President, we should treat it as we did the bollweevil, for instance.

Mr. ASHURST. It is certainly not unreasonable, unjust, or unconstitutional to take the action proposed in order to save sections of the country from the baneful effects of this weed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, there never was a complaint against the expenditure of money to exterminate the boll-weevil. The bollweevil was conceded to be a national problem. The extermination of the bindweed is a national problem. Its importance is increasing every day.

I desire to discuss another point in this connection. This year of drought all kinds of farm products were shipped from one portion of the country to another. We do not know now whether or not in such shipments there was included any large amount of bindweed; but it is fair to assume that in shipping alfalfa hay from one State to another, in shipping straw from one State to another, in shipping wheat from one State to another, some bindweed was also shipped.

Probably one of the evils of the drought is one we know not of now, but which will crop out in a year or two, when we discover that when we were sending, perhaps gratis, food crops for animals and for man into sections which were terribly affected by the drought, we unconsciously and unintentionally spread this dangerous weed, and brought to those people to whom we were giving charity a curse which will plague them a few years later, when the real situation is realized.

Mr. President, therefore, in behalf of the great bread basket of the Nation, I ask that the conference report be rejected and be sent back in order that the House may have an opportunity to vote on this proposition. From my conversations with the Senate conferees, I am satisfied that they will not feel aggrieved if the report shall be rejected. They realized what they were up against. They did the best they could. They realized the situation.

In my judgment, an appropriation of $25,000 to conduct experiments with respect to this great problem is really nothing. The appropriation ought to be more than $100,000. There is no doubt that $100,000 is the minimum with which it could be expected to conduct experimentations on a plane which would be sufficient to bring results.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I join heartily in the views expressed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], and I do not feel that there is anything that I can add thereto. I do wish, however, to call attention to a statement which has been furnished to my colleague and myself signed by a number of the Grange masters in our State which sets forth the situation as they see it. This statement reads:

> By this resolution, which has been adopted by the undersigned grangers, we hereby respectfully call your attention to the fact that the agricultural resources and land values of the United States are attacked by a very dangerous and destructive element in the form of noxious weeds; namely, Russian knap weed, Canadian thistle, white top, wild morning glory, quackgrass, and others of like nature, which are making inroads on farm lands to the extent that thousands of our best farms are about ruined by them. All of which is caused by no other reason than gross neglect of the farmers and agricultural departments of the States and Nation to destroy them before they got so wide-spread. * * *
> Said weeds are now a national menace, and, in addition to destroying the usefulness and values of our best farming land, have gotten into out-of-way places, such as river and canal banks, timber-lands, pastures, and along highways and there they mature and seed. * * *
> Said seed get into grain, hay, seed, and other agricultural products, and are hauled all over the United States, and are scattered by flood waters, winds, and many other unavoidable ways, which makes it impossible for farmers, counties, or States to destroy their individual weeds and remain immune from them.
> * * * Said weeds are spreading very rapidly and have already caused depreciation in land values in many farming districts. As proof we refer any investigation to the Snake River Valley of Idaho, the Milk River Valley of Montana, all the best farming valleys of Wyoming, the Cache Valley of Utah, the Ellensburg district of Washington, and many more if necessary.

Mr. President, there is no necessity of which I know for speedy action in regard to this conference report; nothing will be lost by sending it back to conference and much might be gained. If the House conferees may come fully to understand the situation, I cannot believe that they will continue to oppose this proposed appropriation, but certainly there ought to be a vote in the House upon the question before we conclude that we can do nothing further. It is too serious a matter to be disposed of in this way. Every possible effort must be made to deal with this problem.

As stated by the Senator from Nebraska, of course, if the House shall vote against the proposition, we shall have done all that we can do; but I sincerely hope that the conference report will be sent back and the House be given an opportunity to pass upon the question.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I join with the Senators from Nebraska and Idaho relative to the appropriation for which they contend because the matter is of great interest to my State.

In addition to this, I call attention to the fact that the Senate conferees receded on another item which I will mention. The matter in which I am particularly interested has to do with the appropriation for the Food and Drug Administration.

I have carefully read the House hearings on this subject, and I find that Dr. Strong, who is the head of the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine, in his testimony, on pages 450 and 451 of the House hearings, was specifically questioned regarding the dangers arising from spray residues, particularly from insecticides which contain arsenic and lead. These chemicals destroy the insects which make impossible the successful operation of the orchards of the country. In his testimony on the pages to which I have referred, I find that Dr. Strong was asked certain questions about the possible dangers of spray residue to human health and life.

The comment made by one member of the House committee, according to the record, on page 450, is this:

> But in the entire United States you have been unable to produce a single case in which it was shown that method of protecting fruits had any deleterious effect on human health. As a matter of fact, the residue remaining is so small and so harmless that there is no occasion for any such regulation.

The same Member then spoke of his own experience in his home county, saying that children have been eating apples from the time the apples are "as big as marbles until the culls drop in the frost."

Further, on page 451, the same member of the committee said:

> No physician, to my knowledge, has ever certified to that effect—
> That is, to the harmful effect—
> and there is hardly a child in the United States who has not eaten apples where no such stringent requirement was met.

Shortly thereafter Dr. Strong in his testimony said in effect that he was not able to testify because he was not a physician, and that the problem was outside the particular province of his Bureau.

After this discussion with Dr. Strong, and with these various comments in mind, Mr. Jump, of the Department, said:

> When we bring up the representatives of the Food and Drug Administration we will let them state the basis they have for considering that these residues are poisonous.

Mr. President, I myself have had a few, a very few, unfortunate experiences of the failure of the Printing Office to include in my remarks material which I regarded as very important, though, perhaps, no one else thought so. By an unfortunate accident, undoubtedly in the Printing Office, the material which was presented by the Food and Drug Administration to bear out the charge that spray residues may be unsafe was not included in the printed hearings.

I requested the Food and Drug Administration to give me the material which they put in the record. I find here included in that, material from medical reports—I will not mention the States from which they come—three cases where death was caused by the consumption by unfortunate persons of fruit which had not been properly treated to remove the residue.

I have before me an almost endless array of material which I have gathered from various medical works of great authority to justify the request of the Bureau of Food and Drugs for the sum of money for which they asked. I hope it will be unnecessary for me to go into the matter in detail. I do not wish to do so, because I do not desire to alarm the American people.

For a great many years I have posed—I believe that is the right term to use—as a medical teacher. I have tried to popularize medicine and to teach the American people how to live. Health has been my hobby. As a result, I may say in all modesty, I have thousands of letters every week from citizens of the country asking health questions and about hazards to health. I wish to be able to say to them about this health hazard, as I had expected to be able to say, that our Government is proceeding vigorously in the direction of the discovery of harmless sprays. This is being done in order that the fruits and vegetables may be protected against insect pests and at the same time no remnant of poison may be left upon them which, when taken by human beings, might result in illness or death.

It is because of my reluctance to say things which might excite alarm and incidentally have a harmful effect upon the sale and consumption of such products that I hesitate to proceed. I want this item to go back to conference. I assume we are going to yield to the request of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] that amendment numbered 16, relating to noxious weeds, shall be recommitted. I am going to ask that there be linked therewith the amendment numbered 53, which has to do with the appropriation I have been discussing. I think probably amendments numbered 54, 55, and 56 should also go back to conference, as they represent the totals which would be involved in case the increase of appropriation should be made.

Mr. President, let me state why the request was made by the Department, and let me endeavor to make clear to the Senate and to those who read its RECORD the significance of the deletion which has been made. This great division of our Government, the Bureau of Food and Drugs, which has to do with the protection of the public health against the sale and use of harmful foods and drugs is, in my judgment, one of the most important in the entire Federal organization. There was a misapprehension on the part of the Senate conferees as to the purpose of the request. It was felt by them, because they had not followed the course of this item quite so closely as I have, that money was being asked to provide for the administration of a new food and drug bill, the one now upon the calendar of the Senate. This is not the case. That proposed law does not take effect until a year after it is passed.

The Food and Drug Administration determined that they needed $1,000,000 more to carry on their work. They outlined specifically what they were going to do with the money. They took the request to the Budget. The Budget reduced the amount to $500,000. When the item came from the Budget to the House, the House reduced it by a quarter of a million dollars, so when the bill came to us the amount which had been allowed by the Budget for the additional work proposed had been decreased by one-half. After some discussion the Senate Committee on Appropriations restored the Budget figure. As a result of the conference we find that in the conference report before us the amendment adopted by the Senate had been deleted and consequently the Department loses $250,000.

That particular part of the appropriation asked for was to be used to carry on the investigations in the Department on a larger scale in an effort to find harmless insecticides in order that the food and vegetable producers of the country might have harmless agents for use as insecticides, and then the people would be protected by procuring food and vegetables which were free from any possible harmful substances.

Mr. President, I do not need to say, I am sure, that there could be no greater boon to the orchardists or to the commercial gardeners than to be free from the necessity of the inspections which are carried on, even incompletely by reason of small appropriations. The health of our citizens would be promoted.

We have had a great change in our transportation system. Millions of tons of fruit are now carried by motor truck. That fact imposes a new duty upon the Food and Drug Administration, because there must be patrols to make certain that such products sent in interstate commerce are free from harmful substances.

I am glad to testify that the great States of Oregon and Washington, practically all of whose fruit is shipped by rail, have conformed 100 percent to the standards set up by the Food and Drug Administration and to the standards which make our fruits acceptable abroad. They are two States which stand out above all the rest in almost perfect observance of those degrees of tolerance which are permitted under the law.

I do not wish to go into the matter further. I think perhaps there are reasons why it is desired that the Senate shall adjourn before long; but perhaps I have said enough without saying all I have in my heart and all I am prepared to say on this subject. So I beg the Senator in charge of the bill not to resist our effort to have recommitted not alone the item mentioned by the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Idaho, which I believe is amendment no. 14, but also amendments nos. 53, 54, 55, and 56, which are linked together to cover the one item I have mentioned.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I merely desire at this juncture to suggest that if the bill should be sent back to conference further consideration should be given to amendments nos. 12 and 25.

Amendment no. 12, as adopted by the Senate, provides an appropriation of $25,000 for dealing with swamp fever. It appears that this disease afflicts the work stock in certain areas, and that in some sections as much as 45 percent of the work stock is afflicted with the disease. The position of the Bureau, as I am informed, is that the $10,000 carried in the conference report would not be sufficient adequately to carry on investigations and to do the work that is believed to be necessary. It is of very great importance that this disease be studied, otherwise great loss will be experienced by the owners of work stock in certain States.

Amendment no. 25 relates to the investigation of naval stores. In that case there was an appropriation of $25,000, which was likewise reduced to $10,000 in the conference agreement. It is said by the Department authorities that the amount carried in the conference agreement is inadequate to investigate and demonstrate improved methods or processes for preparing naval stores, and so forth, as contemplated by the amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I move that the bill be recommitted to the conference committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURPHY in the chair). The Chair will state that a motion to recommit is not in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. The question is on agreeing to the conference report, as I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas has correctly stated the motion.

Mr. McNARY. A negative vote would return the bill to conference.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I feel quite certain that a negative vote is obtainable. There seems to be an almost unanimous feeling that the bill should go back to conference. I desire to say to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], who is in charge of the Senate part of the conference, that I hope he will consider particularly the appropriation for the Biological Survey. There have been wicked and drastic cuts in those items, particularly with regard to the control of predatory animals and rodents.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the report brought back by the conferees contains the largest appropriation ever made in the history of the country for the control of predatory animals and rodents. It was stated by the Chairman of the House Appropriations Committee that $590,000 was the highest amount ever before appropriated, and the conference report carries $600,000.

Mr. McNARY. The Senate authorized an appropriation of a million dollars, did it not?

Mr. RUSSELL. It did.

Mr. McNARY. I think I have served longer on conferences over the agricultural bill than the Representative to whom reference has been made. I am quite familiar with these items in the agricultural bill. I personally know that the appropriation for this particular item has been increased from time to time, and splendid results have followed the expenditure of the money. In the great intermountain country, where we have sheep and other livestock, there is no item that is more protective of the interests of the sheep and cattlemen and the citizens and pioneers generally than the item for the extermination and control of predatory animals and rodents, and I am confident that no amount of money, even though it should reach a total of $1,000,000, could be better expended than could the full sum appropriated by the Senate for this fine work. I simply suggest to the Senators in charge of the bill, who are to represent this body in conference, that they give careful consideration to the various items which have been chiseled from what the Senate Appropriations Committee recommended.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire merely to make the observation, in repetition of what I stated earlier in the day, that in eliminating from the Senate amendment the phrase "and other noxious weeds" the conferees unconsciously did a great injury to the far Western States.

The appropriation as it now stands in the conference report would practically confine these particular investigations to the Middle West. It seems apparent that the measure is going back to conference; and I hope that if the bill should go back to conference, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] will give consideration to the suggestion that the phrase "and other noxious weeds" should be included, because it seems to me that to do otherwise would be altogether unfair to a large portion of our country.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, the Senator, of course, is aware of the fact that the original appropriation is available for work with any weed anywhere that the Department might see fit to use it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes; but the Western States Quarantine Board has laid down this program, which the Department of Agriculture is willing to carry out, and which cannot be carried out without this appropriation.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, any committee of the Senate, of course, is answerable to the Senate, and is the servant of the Senate. The Senate conferees on this bill insisted on all the Senate amendments. We engaged in two rather lengthy conferences with the House, and I feel that the bill as submitted is a reasonably fair compromise.

I am sure some Members of the Senate do not appreciate the disadvantage at which Senate conferees are often placed by amendments which are offered on the floor of the Senate. I have been much impressed with the importance that is attached to the scientific investigation of noxious weeds, bindweed, and others referred to by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and other Senators who are familiar with the ravages of these plants. It is quite remarkable to my mind that anything that is so imminently threatening to the future of the agricultural interests of this Nation should be permitted to run on from month to month and from year to year and entirely escape the attention of the Department of Agriculture; that there should be no estimate whatever made to the Budget, or submitted by the Budget to the Congress; that no single witness appeared before the House Committee on Appropriations to point out the necessity for this appropriation; that no witnesses were brought before the Senate Committee on Appropriations, which conducted hearings on the bill. The Senate conferees, therefore, found themselves in the position of supporting an amendment which was offered on the floor of the Senate with a brief statement of one Senator at interest as to its purport and necessity and without any record of justification of the item.

I have no objection whatever to taking the bill back to conference if the Senate thinks the Senate amendments have not been sufficiently regarded by the House. To exonerate myself and my fellow conferees from any inference of negligence, I wish to state that we engaged in two lengthy conferences on the subject, and insisted on all the Senate amendments. It was impossible, and I think it will be impossible when this bill shall be finally enacted into law, if an appropriation bill for the Agricultural Department shall in fact be enacted at this session to get the House to yield to every Senate amendment. An examination of the report will show that the Senate at least secured recognition in principle, if not the full amount appropriated, of practically every amendment adopted on the floor of the Senate.

In regard to the statement made by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], concerning the appropriation for the Food and Drug Administration, the Senator from New York is familiar with some of the difficulties we encountered on that item. The conferees held a special conference with particular reference to the appropriation referred to by him. The Senator is correct in saying that some of the Senate conferees at the outset were under the misapprehension that the appropriation in some wise related to the pending bill to amend the Pure Food and Drugs Act, in which the Senator from New York is so deeply interested. I am frank to say that unless the House votes that amendment into the bill on the floor of the House, I do not believe the conferees will ever be able to agree to any increase on that particular item.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6718) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, OF THE UNITED STATES,
April 15, 1935.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 8 and 58 to the bill (H. R. 6718) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes", and concur therein;

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "$339,729, including not exceeding $15,000 for control and eradication of the Mormon cricket"; and

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"SEC. 2. The processing tax authorized by Public Act No. 10, Seventy-third Congress (48 Stat. 31), when levied upon cotton, shall be payable 90 days after the filing of the processor's report: Provided, That, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, the time for payment of such tax upon cotton may be extended, but in no case to exceed 6 months from the date of the filing of the report."

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I think it would be unwise for the Senate to concur to the amendment of the House to amendment numbered 29. I believe that amendment should go back to conference. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to Senate amendment numbered 60. I have conferred with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], who offered on the floor of the Senate the amendment which the House has amended, and it is agreeable to him that the House amendment be concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia to concur in the amendment of the House to Senate amendment numbered 60.

The amendment was concurred in.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 17, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thy mercy, O Lord, is not confined to the heavens; it reaches over the vanished past, the undimmed yesterdays, and abideth forever. At the inner shrine of the sanctuary of the soul we breathe our tributes of praise and thanksgiving. Thou art the rose of Sharon and the flower of eternal hope; be Thou to us the fountain whence flow the sweetening streams, the sun out of which pours the immortal radiance, and the giver of life that is life indeed. Persuade us that the hour of our worth to the state and the social order is the hour of our self-forgetfulness. Assist us mercifully with Thy help, O Lord God of our salvation, that we may enter with joy upon the meditation of those mighty acts whereby Thou hast given unto us life and immortality. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL, 1936

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 3973) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. CANNON of Missouri, Mr. BLANTON, and Mr. DITTER.

PROTECTING AND PRESERVING PERMANENT SEAT OF GOVERNMENT AS CONTEMPLATED BY THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing a House joint resolution to create a new standing select committee of the Senate and House, and I would like to have the Members read this resolution because I believe it will appeal to every one of them. Many Members do read the RECORD. Therefore I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a copy of the resolution in connection with an extension of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent from the House I print in the RECORD a copy of my new House joint resolution to create a special select standing joint committee so that Members would have access to it in the RECORD.

This joint committee is to protect and preserve the seat of government as contemplated by the Constitution of the United States, and to repeal the archaic and abandoned provisions in earlier appropriation bills and the law generally known as the "50-50" and the "60-40" providing annual Federal contributions out of the Public Treasury to the District of Columbia civic expenses.

Unfortunately, during the last 50 years, the burden of fighting the selfish and aggressive demands of the Washington people, in their constant and untiring efforts to get large contributions from the United States, has fallen upon the shoulders of just a few Members of Congress.

During such 50 years the newspapers have taught Members of Congress that any Senator or Representative who would make a fight for the demands made by Washington people would have his picture and eulogy carried on the front page, praising and extolling his many virtues, followed by repeated favorable comments from the horde of special-feature writers the Washington newspapers employ to reward their friends and to punish those who do not obey commands; and that any Senator or Representative who dared to go against the wishes of the Washington newspapers and to disobey their commands would be crucified and pilloried by the Washington newspapers and by them be hounded, harassed, misrepresented, with none of their important work ever mentioned except in an incorrect and derogatory manner. Such abuse and attacks have made Members seek the path of least resistance and hesitate to actively oppose the newspapers and their demands.

But it has been absolutely necessary that some Member should actively and vigorously from the floor oppose the annually recurring, selfish, unjust, inequitable, wasteful, extravagant, and arrogant demands upon the Federal Treasury, made by the people of Washington and the Washington newspapers.

When I came here in 1917 I then learned of the unjust and infamous treatment the Washington newspapers had accorded Hon. Ben Johnson, of Kentucky, and the vicious attacks they had made upon him while he was Chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and of the attacks Washington newspapers had made on every other Member of Congress preceding Ben's service as chairman who had dared to oppose them on their demands for the District.

So, when I was placed on the District Committee, I was determined that at all times in every way I would be just and sympathetic to every proper demand made by Washington people, and by the Washington newspapers, but that I would fearlessly and uncompromisingly oppose and fight against every improper, unjust, and arrogant demand made by Washington and the Washington newspapers.

I have never at any time or in any way been unjust to the Washington people or to the newspapers of Washington. I can look back over the past 18 years, and with God as my witness, I can truthfully say from the depths of my heart that I have always given Washington people and the newspapers of Washington a fair, square deal, just and fair in every particular, with any possible doubt on every question resolved in favor of Washington.

But because I have dared to oppose them, and have been one of those who has been active on the floor in fighting their unjust demands, I have been abused, maligned, misrepresented, attacked, caricatured, maliciously libeled, hit under the belt, and waylaid by the Washington newspapers, and for 18 years they have tried to ruin me and get me out of Congress. They have incited and aroused opposition against me in my district, and have done everything within the power of their money and influence to defeat me. But they have not succeeded. There are no constituents in any district of the United States more intelligent or more loyal than my own. In the last Democratic primary held in July 1934, with two influential, formidable opponents, one a circuit judge and the other a State legislator, I carried every one of the 30 voting precincts in my home county of Taylor against them both, receiving a clear majority over both of them in all 30 precincts, and likewise carried all of the voting precincts against them both in my former old home county of Shackelford.

The above is of public importance only to show these Washington newspapers that they cannot hound and harass out of Congress a Member by making vicious and malicious attacks upon him, simply because he refuses to think as they want him to think, act as they want him to act, vote as they want him to vote, and servilely obey their every command.

It is very important and necessary that the burden of protecting and preserving the seat of government as contemplated by the Constitution, and in upholding the interests of the overburdened taxpayers back home in the 48 States, should rest equally upon the shoulders of the 96 Senators and the 435 Representatives.

The joint resolution I have introduced, which is House Joint Resolution 253, will do much to accomplish this end desired.

I am, therefore, deeply grateful to my colleagues for granting me unanimous consent to print this resolution in the RECORD. I hope that my House colleagues will read it and give it their earnest consideration. I hope that every United States Senator will read it and give it his earnest and careful consideration.

The following is the resolution:

[74th Cong., 1st sess., H. J. Res. 253]

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
April 19, 1935.

MR. BLANTON introduced the following joint resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Rules and ordered to be printed

Joint resolution to create a special select standing joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives, to be known as the "Joint Committee to Protect and Preserve the Seat of Government as Contemplated by the Constitution of the United States; to repeal the archaic provisions of law generally known as the "50-50" and "60-40" acts relating to a Federal contribution to the civic expenses of the District of Columbia; to discontinue future Federal contribution to said civic expenses of the District of Columbia, and to require the taxpayers of Washington, D. C., through reasonable taxation to pay their own civic expenses, and not longer require the overburdened taxpayers of the 48 States, after paying their own civic expenses, to make contribution to the civic expenses of the people fortunately living in the seat of government, and for other purposes

Whereas during the War of the Revolution, Congress was surrounded and greatly mistreated by a body of mutineers of the Continental Army, which led to the removal of the seat of government from Philadelphia to Princeton, and later for the sake of greater convenience to Annapolis; other removals being to Baltimore, Lancaster, York, Trenton, and New York; and during the 10 years our Government was last located in Philadelphia, preceding its removal to its own permanent seat, although Philadelphia furnished free the use of the Capitol Building at Sixth and Chestnut Streets, and housed the Senate and House of Representatives wholly without charge, and demanded nothing of the Government in the way of taxes or contribution to civic expenses of Philadelphia, yet during the period of our numerous removals of the seat of government, Members of both Houses of Congress were continually importuned and harassed by citizens and local organizations to such an annoying extent that when the Constitution of the United States was promulgated, provision was made therein for our own permanent seat of government forever to be controlled absolutely by the United States; and

Whereas clause 17 of section 8 of article I of the Constitution of the United States provides that the Congress shall have power "to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such District" after it is ceded "and becomes the seat of the Government of the United States"; and

Whereas Watson on the Constitution, page 698, says: "This clause confers upon Congress absolute control and authority over the District of Columbia", stating that the necessity for it "probably grew out of an unpleasant episode in the history of the Continental Congress while it was sitting in Philadelphia"; and

Whereas in construing the above clause of the Constitution in the cases of Loughborough v. Blake (5 Wheat 321); Kendall v. United States (12 Peters 619); Shoemaker v. United States (147 U. S. 300); Parsons v. District of Columbia (170 U. S. 52); Capital Traction Co. v. Hof (174 U. S. 5); and Gibbons v. District of Columbia (116 U. S. 404), the Supreme Court of the United States held: "By this clause Congress is given exclusive jurisdiction over the District of Columbia for every purpose of Government, national or local, in all cases whatsoever, including taxation, and that the terms of the clause are not limited by the principle that representation is necessary to taxation"; and

Whereas in a speech delivered at a banquet tendered him on May 8, 1909, by leading citizens of Washington, President William Howard Taft, who in later years became Chief Justice of the United States, in explaining this clause of the Constitution, and why persons choosing to reside in the District forming the permanent seat of the Government are not permitted to vote, and why Congress should exercise absolute control and authority over the District of Columbia, said: "This was taken out of the application of the principle of self-government in the very Constitution that was intended to put that in force in every other part of the country, and it was done because it was intended to have the representatives of all of the people of the country control this one city, and to prevent its being controlled by the parochial spirit that would necessarily govern men who did not look beyond the city to the grandeur of the Nation and this as the representative of that Nation"; and

Whereas in an article prepared by George W. Hodgkin, who made an able but losing fight to relieve residents of the District of Columbia from the above-mentioned provisions of the Constitution, published on June 25, 1910, as a Senate document, he quoted the above speech of President Taft, and himself admitted that "Congress exercises over the District of Columbia, in addition to its national powers, all the powers of a State, including the power to control local government; that local officials are either directly or indirectly appointed by and are responsible to the National Government; there is no room for doubt that the Constitution, without amendment, does not permit the participation of the District in national affairs; several attempts have been made so to amend the Constitution as to give the inhabitants elective representation in Congress and participation in Presidential elections", and he quoted Madison as follows: "Madison argued 'The indisputable necessity of complete authority at the seat of government carries its own evidence with it. Without it, not only the public authority might be insulted and the proceedings interrupted with impunity but a dependence of the members of the General Government on the State comprehending the seat of government, for protection in the exercise of their duty, might bring on the national councils an imputation of awe or influence equally dishonorable to the Government and dissatisfactory to the members of the Confederacy'"; and

Whereas in the First Congress of the United States, in an act approved July 16, 1790, entitled "An act for establishing the temporary and permanent seat of the Government of the United States", provided that the seat of government should remain in Philadelphia until the first Monday in December 1800, after which it should be removed to the permanent seat, and for the erection of suitable buildings for the accommodation of Congress; and

Whereas, when ceding its part of the permanent seat to the Government, the State of Virginia, by its act approved December 23, 1788, provided that same "shall be, and the same is, forever ceded and relinquished to the Congress and Government of the United States, in full and absolute right and exclusive jurisdiction, as well of the soil as of persons residing or to reside thereon, pursuant to the tenor and effect of the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States"; and

Whereas the removal from Philadelphia to Washington of our own permanent seat of Government was completed on June 15, 1800, and the Government rented a building in Washington near the corner of Ninth and E Streets NW., about where the south wing of the present old Post Office Department building is situated, at an annual rental of only $600, being only $50 per month, and the owner permitted the Government to spend half of the rental for renovations and improvements, which rented building, so renovated and improved, housed the Post Office Department of the United States and the local post office for Washington and quarters for the family of Hon. Abraham Bradley, Jr., the Assistant Postmaster General, all three provided to the Government for a rental of only $50 per month, which clearly depict conditions then, before the Government had spent hundreds of millions of dollars in attractive permanent improvements now attracting thousands of visitors to Washington every day, and before the Government had established its present $200,000,000 per annum pay roll here in Washington, which injures to the financial benefit of every fortunate person living in the Nation's seat of government and which, when considered with the fact that Members of Congress are now charged from $75 to $250 per month for apartments and that department employees are charged from $35 to $100 per month, and the further fact that whenever the Government needs any private property here for its own use it is charged by residents of Washington, and determined in condemnation proceedings by residents of Washington, two or three times its value, and in instances several hundred percent increase over its assessed value, conclusively demonstrates that Washington residents in the Nation's seat of government are constantly reaping a tremendous financial harvest and are enriching themselves off of the Government; and

Whereas, after continual harassing and hammering of Congress year after year by the residents and newspapers of Washington, it was induced in 1871 to pass an act giving the District a government of its own and allowing the District to elect and send a Delegate to Congress (which, of course, was unconstitutional), but providing that the tax rate in Washington should be $3 on the $100, but Congress soon recognized the unwisdom of such act and of its affront to the Constitution, and in 1874 Congress repealed such act, and abolished said unwarranted position of Delegate to Congress, and eventually liquidated the debts incurred by said spendthrift so-called "local government", and by the act of June 11, 1878, the seat of government was designated as the "District of Columbia"; and

Whereas, under continual harassing and hammering of Congress by residents and newspapers in Washington, an act was passed whereby the Government paid out of the Public Treasury 50 percent of the annual civic expenses of the people of Washington, which began in 1878, and excepting a period during the nineties, continued to 1920, so that from 1878 to 1920, excepting said period during the nineties, the United States paid one-half of all the civic expenses of the people who reside in its permanent seat of government, and during this 40 years the local tax rate for Washington residents most of the time ranged from 90 cents on the $100 to $1.20 on the $100, and from 1920 to 1925 the United States paid 40 percent of the annual civic expenses of the people of Washington, and thereafter the United States has contributed a lump sum each year toward paying the annual civic expenses of Washington people, beginning with $11,000,000 lump sum per year ranging downward, until the lump-sum contribution which the United States made to the civic expenses of the people of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, was $9,500,000; and

Whereas during the last 50 years every Member of Congress who has raised his voice against the selfish demands of the residents and newspapers of the District of Columbia, has had a concerted fight waged against him by the Washington newspapers, forcing many to abandon key positions on the District of Columbia Committee, and said newspapers of Washington have incited opposition against such Members in their district, and caused many of such Members to be defeated, and have through selfish malicious persecutions been instrumental in hastening the death of some very valuable Members, such as was the Honorable Ben Johnson, of Kentucky, who at one time was the able Chairman of the Legislative Committee on the District of Columbia, and who resisted many District raids on the Federal Treasury; and

Whereas in February 1933 the House passed the bill making appropriations for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and properly reduced the above-mentioned lump-sum contribution, but the Senate amended it and attempted to restore said lump-sum contribution to $9,500,000, and the Senate added 173 other costly amendments to said bill, and in conference with the House, Senator Bingham, then United States Senator from Connecticut, arrogantly told the conferees that unless they agreed to said $9,500,000 there would be no bill, although said conferees had practically agreed upon all other controversial matters, and the conferees broke up in disagreement over said lump-sum contribution about dark on the evening of March 3, 1933, which was the night before Congress was forced by law to adjourn sine die the next day; and later that evening Senator Bingham induced a majority of the House conferees to raise the said lump-sum contribution from the $6,500,000 offered by the House conferees to the sum of $7,600,000, and when said conference report was submitted to the House that night for approval Representative BLANTON, of Texas, who was the dissenting conferee, led the fight against same, on the ground that it was unjust to the taxpayers of the 48 States, and after debate, and despite the cogent argument used that unless it were adopted Congress would adjourn the next day sine die without making any appropriations for the District of Columbia, and with Senator Bingham present on the House floor, by a decisive defeat of only 14 votes for with 102 votes against (see p. 5618, RECORD for Mar. 3, 1933), the House rejected the conference report and thereby killed the bill for that Congress, and that ended the service of Senator Bingham in the United States Senate; and

Whereas following the inauguration of President Franklin D. Roosevelt on March 4, 1933, when the new Seventy-third Congress was called into special session, and the President and his Budget had reviewed the entire matter, and patiently heard all of the demands of Washington people for a big lump-sum contribution, and withstanding the arrogant demands of Washington newspapers, President Roosevelt and his Budget recommended to Congress that only $5,700,000 be contributed by the United States, instead of the $9,500,000 which the Senate had placed in said previous bill by amendment, and for that year and the succeeding year the House conferees upheld the President's annual Budget and resisted all attempts made by the Senate to increase such contribution, and only allowed the $5,700,000 recommended by the President and his Budget; and

Whereas in his last Budget for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, President Roosevelt recommended that Congress allow a lump-sum contribution from the Federal Treasury of only $5,700,000 toward paying the annual civic expenses of the residents of the District of Columbia, and as recommended by his Bureau of the Budget the President specified the maximum sums that should be appropriated for the District of Columbia; and

Whereas the able, just, and highly efficient chairman of the District Subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, Hon. CLARENCE CANNON, of Missouri, and his subcommittee patiently held hearings during the month of December 1934, before the Seventy-fourth Congress met in January, hearing all District officials who felt dissatisfied with the President's Budget, and said printed hearings show that before said hearing on December 12, 1934, Hon. Melvin C. Hazen, president of the Board of Commissioners for the District of Columbia, testified and admitted the following: "That with a total tax rate of only $1.50 on the $100 paid by the Washington residents of this seat of government the District had a cash surplus left over last fiscal year of $4,600,000, and that next July 1 he expected another cash surplus of $2,450,000; that during the years when the United States paid half of all the civic expenses of the Washington residents there were built most of the fine bridges, including the million-dollar bridge on Connecticut Avenue, most of the 170 public-school buildings in Washington, most of the hospitals, and that most of the 1,200 parks and the numerous playgrounds had been acquired and purchased; that most of the trees fronting residences which are furnished, pruned, and sprayed free had been planted; and most of the streets and sidewalks had been paved; and the sewer system and the water system had been acquired and perfected, the United States owning outright the original water conduit; that the Municipal Building, jail, court buildings, prison, hospitals, and asylums had been constructed; that during the last fiscal year they had arbitrarily reduced the assessed valuation of real estate to the extent of $80,000,000, which was a saving to the Washington property owners of $1,200,000; and that for the present fiscal year they were going to further reduce the assessed value of real estate another $50,000,000, which was an additional saving to Washington property owners of another $750,000, showing that during this and last year the assessed value of Washington property had been arbitrarily reduced $130,000,000; that for water service they had given a 25-percent reduction in water rates and had increased the meter allowance from 7,500 to 10,000 cubic feet, which meant another saving to Washington residents of $600,000 per annum on their water, plus the increase of meter allowance, and that the average cost of water per family was $6.75 per year, or about 50 cents per month, with the minimum allowance increased from 7,500 to 10,000 cubic feet; that the tax on intangibles is only $5 on the $1,000, and that millions of dollars of intangibles were hidden away in lock boxes in bank vaults untaxed, and that they had no way of reaching same until people died and wills were filed, and that of the wills filed last year one listed $115,000 intangibles, another $82,000, another $335,000, another $1,064,400, another $96,652, another $68,878, and another $105,480 of intangibles; that the District gasoline tax is only 2 cents per gallon in Washington, while in some cities it is 4 cents, some 5 cents, some 6 cents, and some 7 cents per gallon, in addition to the 1-cent Federal tax; that the District license tax for automobiles in Washington is only $1, whether it is a Ford or a Rolls-Royce, which is another of the many special privileges Washington people enjoy; that there is no charge made for gathering ashes, or trash, or garbage from residences; that there is no monthly service charge made for sewer connection; that there is no District income tax for the people of Washington; that there is no District gift tax for the people of Washington; that there is no District inheritance tax for the people of Washington; that every family library in Washington, whether worth $100 or $1,000,000, is exempt from taxes; that, in addition to exempting libraries from taxation, every family is allowed an exemption of $1,000 of household furniture that can't be taxed; that, in addition to the enormous sums of money spent in previous years for permanent buildings and improvements, that the United States Government during the last 20 years had spent over $200,000,000 in Washington for beautiful attractive buildings, to see which crowds of people come to Washington daily from the States; that, in addition to its regular appropriations, the District of Columbia had received from the F. E. R. A. and the Civil Works Administration $15,114,227 for emergency relief, and had received from the Public Works Administration $8,880,461, with an additional grant and loan of $1,500,000 for a tuberculosis sanitarium; that it is a valuable and pleasurable privilege to the people of Washington to enjoy the Congressional Library, the privileges of the Capitol, the 1,200 public parks, the public golf courses, the public tennis courts, the polo grounds, the public playgrounds, the museums, the art galleries, the boating facilities on the improved Anacostia and Potomac Rivers, the beautiful Key Bridge, the Lincoln Memorial, the Washington Monument, the swimming pools, the skating pools, the $15,000,000 Memorial Bridge, the wonderful Government boulevards, including the one from Washington to Mount Vernon; the Japanese cherry blossoms, internationally known; the Government rose gardens, the Government pansy beds, the Government Botanic Gardens, the miles of Rock Creek Park public picnic grounds, the wonderful Zoo, which furnishes entertainment for the 85,000 Washington children; the beautiful White House and Grounds, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, the $18,000,000 Commerce Building, the new Department of Justice Building, the new Department of Labor Building, the new Post Office Department Building, the Agricultural Department buildings, grounds, gardens, and farms, the new Archives Building, the Pan American Building, the beautiful foreign embassy buildings and grounds, the new $10,000,000 Supreme Court Building, and the scores of other enjoyable sights and privileges our permanent seat of government affords free to residents of Washington, which the citizens of the 48 States cannot enjoy; and page 18 of the hearings shows that Commissioner Hazen admitted that Washington people are better cared for, are least taxed, and have greater privileges than any other people in the United States; and

Whereas when the United States established our permanent seat of goverment in Washington, our Government then owned 10,136 city lots which it did not want to reserve for its own use, and it sold these 10,136 lots to residents of Washington for the paltry sum of only $741,024, yet the printed hearings on the pending District bill show that under condemnation proceedings where the Government now needs property, it was forced to pay $37,500 for one piece that had recently cost the owner only $16,500, and was forced to pay $28,500 for another piece that had recently cost the owner only $11,000, and for the site for the Jefferson School the first jury (of Washington residents) tried to require the payment of $105,000 for such site, but which fell through, and when the second condemnation proceedings were perfected so as to insure acquiring the site, the new jury (of Washington residents) assessed the value of same at $294,000, forcing that sum to be paid, which was almost half of the total amount the United States received for the 10,136 city lots it sold to Washington residents; and

Whereas the officials and employees of the District of Columbia are the best paid, best treated, and receive higher salaries than any other employees in the whole world; that they work only 7 hours per day, enjoy a generous vacation and sick leave, have generous retirement privileges, work under pleasant surroundings and environments, and can't be discharged except for cause proven on trial; and

Whereas in the District public free school system, the superintendent of schools receives a salary of $10,000, 13 department heads receive $3,700, 15 directors receive $3,500, 2 presidents receive $6,000, principals receive for senior high $4,500, junior high $4,000, assistant principals $3,700, and of the 569 high-school teachers and 57 teacher-college teachers, there are about 150 who receive salaries of $3,200, and the 3,068 teachers and employees in the Washington public free schools during all of the depression years have never had to wait one minute for their salary checks, but have always received their money promptly; and

Whereas in the Metropolitan Police Department, the superintendent of police receives $8,000, his assistants receive $5,000, his inspectors receive $4,500, his captains $3,600, and his patrolmen (who have been in service 5 years) receive $2,400 each, there being 1,306 uniform men in said Metropolitan Police Department; and

Whereas in the fire department of the District of Columbia there are 870 uniform men, the chief receiving $8,000, his two deputies, fire marshal, and machinery superintendent receiving $5,000 each, his battalion chief $4,500, and 46 captains $3,050 each, and the men (who have been in service 5 years) all receiving $2,400 each; and

Whereas the three District Commissioners receive $9,000 each, and are furnished automobiles and their upkeep; the auditor receives $9,000; the corporation counsel $9,000; and his 15 assistants receive salaries ranging from $2,600 to $7,000; the head of the Board of Public Welfare $8,000, and his 9 assistants receive salaries ranging from $2,600 to $5,600; the municipal architect $7,500, and his 40 assistants receive salaries ranging from $2,600 to $5,600; the city health officer receives $7,000, and his 20 assistants receive salaries ranging from $2,600 to $5,600; the director of city highways receives $7,500, and his 25 assistants receive salaries ranging from $2,600 to $5,600; the register of wills receives $6,400; the recorder of deeds receives $5,500; the director of the sewer department receives $7,500, and his 17 assistants receive salaries ranging from $2,600 to $5,000; the head of the water department receives $5,800, and his 15 assistants receive salaries ranging from $2,600 to $4,800; the head of the Zoo receives $6,500, and his assistants receive salaries ranging from $2,600 to $4,800; the chief of buildings and parks receives $5,000, and his 22 assistants receive from $2,600 to $4,800; the playgrounds supervisor receives $4,600; the refuse supervisor receives $6,000, and his 13 assistants receive salaries ranging from $2,600 to $5,000; the man in charge of tree planting receives $5,200 and his assistant $3,200; the chief librarian receives $8,000, and his 15 assistants receive salaries ranging from $2,600 to $4,600; the surveyor receives $5,000, and his 9 assistants receive salaries ranging from $2,700 to $3,500; the traffic head receives $7,500, and his assistants from $2,600 to $5,400; the juvenile judge receives $7,000; the penal head receives $6,000, and his 12 assistants receive salaries ranging from $2,500 to $6,000; the head of Gallinger Hospital receives $7,500, and his 11 assistants receive salaries ranging from $2,600 to $5,600, and the hundreds of other employees receive proportionate salaries, and no employees anywhere else in the world are better paid, or receive more generous consideration; and

Whereas in his annual Budget message to the present Congress, President Roosevelt recommended that not over $5,700,000 be contributed by the Federal Government on the civic expenses of the District of Columbia, and the House of Representatives passed the appropriation bill with that sum contributed to the Washington people's civic expenses, and refused to comply with the many arrogant demands made by the Washington newspapers, and after the bill left the House and went to the Senate there was a concert of action on the part of Washington newspapers to get Congressman BLANTON out of the way, and to prevent him from serving as a House conferee on said bill, and in explaining the matter to a citizen of Washington, one of the representatives of said newspapers said: "BLANTON is in our way. We can get anything we want put in the bill in the Senate, but we cannot get it by BLANTON on the House Appropriations Committee, because he works with Mr. CANNON, and Mr. CANNON knows these conditions, but BLANTON is the one who takes the floor and fights like he did when he killed our conference report back in March 1933. We must get him out of the way." And when asked, "How are you going to do it?" the reply was "Through continual hammering", stating: "There is not any man on earth who can withstand continual hammering. If you will just continue hammering him, you will finally get his nerve, and we are going to continue to hammer BLANTON until we get his nerve and get him out of the way"; and

Whereas from March 14, 1935, until April 3, 1935 (when from the floor of the House BLANTON exposed the plot), the five newspapers of Washington made daily attacks upon Congressman BLANTON, playing him up on their front pages in scary headlines printed in large black-faced type an inch high in instances, and, with the exception of the Washington Star, which did not confederate with said other plotters, daily tried to incite the people of Washington en masse to march on the Capitol and demand that Congressman BLANTON be removed from the Committee on Appropriations, and did incite rump meetings of irresponsible associations of certain citizens to hold meetings and to pass resolutions against BLANTON, and some of said newspapers published editorials demanding that BLANTON resign or be removed from said Committee on Appropriations, and representatives of said newspapers went to the Speaker of the House and tried to induce him to meet a mob on the east steps of the Capitol to receive their demand, but the Speaker refused to have anything to do with it, and then they tried to get the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to act with them, and he refused, and then they tried to get Hon. James G. Yaden, who is president of the Federated Citizens Associations of Washington, to take charge of said newspaper movement to have the Washington people march on the Capitol, but being a high-class gentleman of honor and integrity he refused to have anything to do with their malicious movement, and to show the extent of this arrogant movement to interfere with the orderly processes of government, and which in effect was a challenge to Congress respecting its right to function, the following excerpts are quoted: (1) From Washington Post, March 20, 1935: "Drive to oust BLANTON begun by District of Columbia group. Demonstration is planned to force him off of the District of Columbia Committee. The executive committee of the Federation of Business Men's Association last night voted to stage a city-wide demonstration to persuade Congress to remove Representative THOMAS L. BLANTON, of Texas, from the House District Appropriations Committee. The protests will be presented to Speaker JOSEPH W. BYRNS, of Tennessee, on the east steps of the Capitol." (2) From the Washington Herald, March 20, 1935: "Mass meeting to ask BLANTON'S ouster at once. Protest planned for March 28 on Capitol steps by federation of men's group. Headquarters for the arrangement committee for the mass meeting has been established at the Smith Transfer Co. Organizations and citizens desiring to participate have been asked to communicate with the committee." (3) From the Washington Times, March 20, 1935: "A sentiment has grown among civic organizations to punish the Texan for interference. The executive committee of Business Men's Associations has planned a mass meeting at which the removal of the Texas Representative will be demanded." (4) From the Washington News, March 20, 1935: "Mass meeting called to denounce BLANTON. A demonstration will be held by local citizens on the east steps of the Capitol. The Federation of Business Men's Associations last night issued a statement calling a mass meeting to present to Congress a demand for removal of BLANTON from House Committee on District Appropriations. An invitation was extended to all interested citizens to participate." (5) From the Washington Star, March 20, 1935: "Fight on BLANTON planned by citizens. Plans for a proposed demonstration March 28 to request the House to remove Representative BLANTON, Democrat of Texas, from his assignment on the House Appropriations Committee were discussed at a meeting last night. A march on the Capitol, where petitions would be presented to Speaker BYRNS, demanding BLANTON'S removal from the committee, were proposed. Every civic organization in Washington, it is stated, is to be invited to participate. Smith also called a meeting in the Lafayette Hotel at 6:30 o'clock tonight to further plans for the proposed demonstration." And from the Washington Times, March 29, 1935: "Business men flay BLANTON. Members of the Northeast Business Men's Association last night voted to demand removal of Representative BLANTON, of Texas, from the House Subcommittee on District Appropriations. Heated debate marked the meeting, and the matter was not decided until Dr. James J. Greeves, president, voted in favor of the measure to break the tie vote. James Farmer, association secretary, shouted: 'We want BLANTON out, and we are not going to stop until we get him out'"; and

Whereas not until Congressman BLANTON took the floor of the House on April 3, 1935, and exposed the concerted plot, and denounced such unwarranted mob interference with Congress, did said newspapers stop such persecution; and

Whereas this attempt on the part of Washington residents in the seat of government of the United States to make unreasonable money demands upon Congress, and to browbeat, bulldoze, intimidate, and attempt to coerce Congressmen into complying with their unreasonable demands, is an outrage on decency, and an interference with the constitutional prerogatives and functions of the Congress of the United States, and cogently exemplifies just what the framers of the Constitution had in mind when they provided of a seat of government absolutely controlled by Congress, and what President James Madison had in mind when in explaining clause 17, of section 8, of article I of the Constitution, he said: "The indisputable necessity of complete authority at the seat of government carries its own evidence with it. Without it, not only the public authority might be insulted and the proceedings interrupted with impunity but a dependence of the Members of the General Government on the State comprehending the seat of government, for protection in the exercise of their duty, might bring on the national councils an imputation of awe or influence equally dishonorable to the Government and dissatisfactory to the members of the confederacy"; and

Whereas their only foundation for a trumped-up excuse for such unwarranted interference, was that in the exercise of his inherent and inalienable prerogatives Congressman BLANTON tried to get appointed as an assistant superintendent of police, Inspector Albert J. Headley, who for 39 years has been a faithful, efficient, active, dependable police officer, working his way up through the ranks from a private, and who is a high-class gentleman, strictly honest and reliable, and a strict law enforcer, and who was a ranking officer in line for such position, it being the silly and ridiculous contention of certain Washington citizens and Washington newspapers that Congressmen must not have anything whatever to do with the selection or appointment of any officials or employees of said District; and

Whereas Washington residents of the permanent seat of government of the United States may just as well understand now as at all times in the future that pursuant to the provisions of the Constitution giving Congress absolute control over the District of Columbia, that Congress is going to exercise that control, whether they like it or not, and if it doesn't suit them, they had better move and live somewhere else, and that each and all of the 435 Members of the House of Representatives and each and all of the 96 United States Senators are going to exercise their prerogatives at will, and recommend when and whom they choose for positions in the District of Columbia, and that the Washington people choosing to reside in the Nation's permanent seat of government of the United States must cease to expect and demand better treatment and greater consideration than the citizens of the 48 States receive and must cease to expect the already overburdened taxpayers of the 48 States, after paying their own civic expenses, to then contribute any part of the civic expenses of said Washington people; and

Whereas there are many cities in the 48 States that would gladly pay the United States many millions of dollars to move its permanent seat of government there and gladly agree that they would never ask that the United States pay a single dollar on their civic expenses; and

Whereas chambers of commerce in big cities all over the United States are annually spending millions of dollars to get new people there, and to obtain pay rolls, and every piece of property owned by the Government of the United States is a valuable asset for the Washington people and forms the source of attraction for the hundreds of thousands of visitors constantly coming here, and it is silly and childish for Washington people and Washington newspapers to contend that the United States should pay favored residents of Washington taxes on the streets of Washington owned by the United States and which are daily used by Washington people, or to pay them taxes on the Government property here that is annually worth many millions of dollars to the Washington people, and, but for which, they would be an unimportant small town, with their real property practically worthless; and

Whereas the Washington Star for December 16, 1934, under the headlines, "$50,000,000 spent here by visitors during the past year", stated: "The Greater National Capital Committee estimates that visitors to the city will have spent in the neighborhood of $50,000,000 in Washington by the end of 1934"; that $50,000,000 coming to Washington people during 1 year spent by the people of the 48 States came to them because of the Government institutions here attracting such visitors to Washington, and Washington people are being enriched by this annual gift of $50,000,000 to them by visitors the Government's institutions attract here, which costs Washington people nothing; and

Whereas the Washington Post for April 8, 1935, under headlines, "City jammed as 150,000 see blossoms", stated: "The States came to the Japanese cherry trees yesterday. An estimated 150,000 persons moved into the city from every section of the Nation. They jammed themselves into long motor busses. Capital hotels overflow. Their number exceeded the capacity of the city's hotels. They packed the highways in all directions. The railroads did a land-office business. The Pennsylvania ran eight extra sections from New York and put on three additional special trains. The C. & O. and the B. & O. ran 22. Interstate bus lines did a great business. The airplanes sold out and put on extras"; and Washington people should appreciate this financial bonanza, for just how much would the big cities of this Nation pay in order to have 150,000 visitors come in 1 day to spend money in their midst; and

Whereas the Washington Post for February 3, 1935, stated that there are now 94,050 employees of the United States Government in Washington, and that the number of field employees of the United States now total 672,273. Many of these field employees make headquarters in Washington; the pay roll of the Federal Government for its local employees has now reached the stupendous sum of $200,000,000 in Washington, and practically all of this $200,000,000 annually is spent in Washington; moreover, the President spends much of his $75,000 per year in Washington, and much of his expense allowance here, and the Cabinet members, and Supreme Court judges, and Senators and Representatives in Congress, and their clerical help, all spend most of their annual income in Washington, and the Washington people are constantly enriched by it; and

Whereas the Washington Post for April 3, 1935, said that the Senate committee had increased the Federal contribution to local civic expenses by $2,600,000, stating: "The Appropriations Subcommittee, under the chairmanship of Senator THOMAS (D.) of Oklahoma, practically rewrote the House bill, paying little or no attention to recommendations of the Budget Bureau or the House"; and

Whereas the Washington Herald for April 9, 1935, stated: "District budget passed by Senate fixed at $42,785,619. Senators, who increased the budget to the point requested by the District Board of Commisisoners, after the House had cut it to $39,308,404 will have to overcome a determined opposition already announced by Representative TOM BLANTON, of Texas"; and

Whereas the Washington Times for April 9, 1935, stated: "Six stanch friends of the District of Columbia today were appointed as the Senate conferees on the 1936 District supply bill. The Senate conferees who were delegated to fight for the increased lump sum and the additional items put in the bill by the Senate, are Senator ELMER THOMAS, of Oklahoma; Senator CARTER GLASS, of Virginia; Senator ROYAL S. COPELAND, of New York; Senator WILLIAM H. KING, of Utah; Senator GERALD P. NYE, of North Dakota; and Senator HENRY W. KEYES, of New Hampshire. The bill faces its hardest fight when the House and Senate conferees meet for its consideration. Without so much as a question, the Senate yesterday increased the lump sum from the $5,700,000 proposed by the Budget Bureau, and approved by the House, to $8,317,500. In explaining his stand against increasing the lump sum, Mr. BLANTON has declared that he is carrying out the wishes of the President"; and

Whereas the Washington Star, for April 9, 1935, said: "Under the leadership of Senator THOMAS, Democrat, of Oklahoma, the measure went through the Senate without difficulty yesterday afternoon. No opposition was raised in the Senate to the Appropriations Committee recommendation for a larger Federal payment, nor was there a dissenting voice on any of the amendments"; and

Whereas this question of a large Federal contribution out of the people's Treasury to the civic expenses of Washington people should not be a continual annual fight between the Senate and House of Representatives, for there is just as great a burden resting on the shoulders of Senators as there is resting upon the shoulders of Representatives to protect the taxpayers in the 48 States from having to pay a part of the civic expenses of Washington people, in addition to paying their own civic expenses, and this constant issue of turmoil and controversy should be finally decided and brought to an end; and

Whereas besides the appropriations regularly made for the District of Columbia, the residents of Washington annually receive large and valuable benefits from large appropriations made by Congress for Federal institutions in the District of Columbia, wholly paid for by the United States, which are carried in the Army appropriation bill, the Navy appropriation bill, and many others, the following being appropriations carried in the pending Interior Department appropriation bill, coming wholly out of the Federal Treasury, to wit, for Freedmen's Hospital, $304,400; for Howard (colored) University, $665,000; for Columbia Institution for the Deaf, $135,850; for St. Elizabeths Hospital, $1,185,840; and

Whereas the Washington Herald for April 10, 1935, reported that the District of Columbia gets $2,000,000 out of the rivers and harbors bill just passed, being "$1,650,000 for water fronts and $325,000 for channels"; and

Whereas the Washington Post for April 11, 1935, states $3,500,000 out of P. W. A. funds will be spent in Washington for a new Navy Hospital unit, and the people of the District of Columbia get the benefit of all of these huge expenditures made in Washington by the United States, just the same as if it came out of their own treasury; and

Whereas upon the hounding insistence of the people of Washington and the Washington newspapers, in attempt to increase the Federal contribution to local civic expenses, the President caused the Treasury Department to make an investigation of the tax rate in Washington, as compared with the tax rate of comparable cities, and on April 13, 1935, the President wrote a letter both to the chairman of the House committee and to the chairman of the Senate committee, submitting such report, in which letter President Roosevelt stated: "In general, the Treasury found that the actual money cost of government per capita to residents of the District is below that in other cities. Likewise the total taxes paid by each of several different examples of property owners is lower in the District than in any other city of between 300,000 and 825,000 population for which the data are available. The total taxes paid by the owner of a small house, the owner of a substantial business block or business enterprise, or the owner of a large hotel or apartment house are in each case smaller in the District than in any other of the 15 cities studied"; and

Whereas most of the cities, after paying their own city taxes, have to pay an additional county and State tax, and some have to pay a separate school or public-utility tax, none of which are paid extra by Washington people, as their tax of $1.50 on the $100, or $15 on the $1,000, is the total of all taxes paid by them; and

Whereas the Treasury report accompanying President Roosevelt's letter of April 13, 1935, giving the tax rate in comparable cities states that the survey made "clearly demonstrates that the District of Columbia general property tax rate of $15 per $1,000 is the lowest obtaining in any city of 300,000 or more population"; and it cites the following cities of between 300,000 to 825,000 population, giving their tax rate on the $1,000: Jersey City, N. J. (tax rate), $40.69 (on the $1,000); Boston, Mass. (tax rate), $37.10 (on the $1,000); Minneapolis, Minn. (tax rate), $30.10 (on the $1,000); Newark, N. J. (tax rate), $29.20 (on the $1,000); Seattle, Wash. (tax rate), $28.13 (on the $1,000); New Orleans, La. (tax rate), $27.58 (on the $1,000); Baltimore, Md. (tax rate), $26.70 (on the $1,000); Portland, Oreg. (tax rate), $26.50 (on the $1,000); Milwaukee, Wis. (tax rate), $26.26 (on the $1,000); Buffalo, N. Y. (tax rate), $25.56 (on the $1,000); Kansas City, Mo. (tax rate), $25.23 (on the $1,000); Louisville, Ky. (tax rate), $24.48 (on the $1,000); San Francisco, Calif. (tax rate), $20.09 (on the $1,000); Cincinnati, Ohio (tax rate), $18.22 (on the $1,000); Washington, D. C. (tax rate), $15 (on the $1,000); showing that Washington people pay less taxes and have more advantages than the people anywhere else in the United States; and

Whereas it is highly important that this controversial question should be definitely and finally determined at an early date: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That there be, and is hereby, created a special select standing joint committee, to be known as the "Joint Committee to Protect and Preserve the Seat of Government as Contemplated by the Constitution of the United States", which committee shall be composed of the following members: From the Senate, the Vice President of the United States, the Chairman and the ranking majority and minority members of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, and the chairman and ranking majority and minority of its District subcommittee, and the Chairman of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia; and from the House of Representatives, the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the Chairman and ranking majority and minority members of the House Committee on Appropriations and the Chairman and ranking majority and minority members of the House District of Columbia Subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations, and the Chairman of the House Committee on the District of Columbia, and the Chairman of the House District Subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations shall be the chairman of said joint committee, and said joint committee shall have jurisdiction over all matters affecting any disregard of the constitutional provisions giving Congress absolute control over the seat of government of the United States, and shall have authority to report any legislation to protect such constitutional rights.

SEC. 2. That such part of any existing law providing for what is generally known as the 50-50 or 60-40 contribution by the Federal Government to the District of Columbia, or providing for any participation by the United States in any proportion in the expenses of the District of Columbia, except as might be provided for in a current appropriation bill, be and the same are, hereby in all things repealed, as of June 30, 1935.

THE IMMIGRATION CRISIS

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a very able discussion of the immigration question appearing in this weeks' Saturday Evening Post, written by my colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article by my colleague from Texas [Mr. DIES] appearing in this week's issue of the Saturday Evening Post:

[From the Saturday Evening Post of Apr. 20, 1935]

THE IMMIGRATION CRISIS

(By MARTIN DIES, member of the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization)

Many citizens believed that the immigration problem was permanently settled by the quota restriction law of 1924. This measure was finally enacted after years of constant agitation and untiring efforts on the part of patriotic Americans. The necessity for restriction had been demonstrated beyond any question by the tragic results of our immigration policy.

The total white population found in the United States by the first census of 1790 was 3,172,444. It was all English speaking, save for the little island of Pennsylvania Dutch and for the French and Spanish on the frontiers. It was practically homogeneous, with similar political, institutional, and cultural traditions. It was this homogeneous race that produced the extraordinary group of men of talent and ability, about 55 in number, who represented the Colonies at the Convention of 1787 at Philadelphia. From 1790 to 1860 our population increased to 31,443,321. Immigration during this 70-year period was about 4,000,000. From 1790 to 1820 most of the immigrants were English and Scotch. From 1790 to 1860 there was no heavy immigration, except from two countries, Ireland and Germany, which occurred in the latter part of the period. At the end of this period the racial unity of the United States was intact.

From the conclusion of the War between the States until the beginning of the World War the great alien invasion of the United States took place. Prior to 1880 only 5 percent of the immigration was from southern and eastern Europe. Between 1860 and 1880 less than 250,000 immigrants from eastern and southern Europe came over. However, between 1890 and 1910 more than 8,000,000 immigrants reached our shores from southern and eastern Europe.

Industrial greed which subordinated the ultimate good of the country to the immediate and temporary profits that cheap pauper labor seemed to promise, combined with that maudlin sentimentality which has ever been the curse of our Nation, and the principal source of many of the ills which we have brought upon ourselves, dictated this unwise and destructive policy. Today, as a result of this policy, we have more than 40,000,000 people of foreign stock in our midst. We have 16,000,000 foreign born and about 7,000,000 aliens, according to recent estimates. Of the number of aliens in our country, it has been conservatively estimated that at least 3,500,000 are illegally here and, under appropriate laws and their enforcement, could be deported.

During the tragic days when industrial greed and legislative stupidity encouraged millions of impoverished aliens to invade our shores in hungry quest of jobs and fortunes, many patriotic people in America exerted their influence to the utmost in an attempt to obtain a reversal of this short-sighted policy and avert the social, political, and economic evils which unrestricted immigration has never failed to produce in the experiences of nations and peoples. If our Nation had awakened at that time to the perils of its immigration policy and promptly excluded the 20,000,000 or more of aliens that have since joined the competitive ranks of labor, agriculture, and business, it is reasonable to believe that the unemployment problem would never have assumed such serious and unprecedented proportions in this country. In fact, it is not improbable that a labor surplus would not have been known in our generation. It is safe to say that we invited the evils of the Old World's social, political, and economic disorders by offering our fertile lands and priceless resources which our fathers designed as a heritage for their children's children, as a refuge for the jobless and malcontents of Europe.

But, finally, the American people were awakened and the quota law of 1924 was passed. Believing the problem settled, many restrictionists turned their attention to other matters, and soon the acute economic issues growing out of the depression engrossed the public interest.

A serious mistake had been made when the quota was not applied to the Western Hemisphere. This left both side doors open, and predatory employers and profit-seeking steamship companies were quick to take advantage of this mistake. These nonquota countries, and especially Mexico, supplied the cheap labor that had formerly come from southern and eastern Europe.

The legal and illegal entries from the nonquota countries, together with the increased smuggling of aliens and the desertion of alien seamen from quota nations, have done much to neutralize the beneficial effects of the 1924 Immigration Act.

In the meantime, we began to hear about the inhumanity of denying citizenship to aliens who were ineligible on account of illegal entry or ignorance. Editorial comments, news items, vaudeville sketches, and screen plays grossly exaggerated the hardship cases and misrepresented the facts.

However, this propaganda soon had the desired effect. Numerous bills were introduced which would weaken our immigration, naturalization, and deportation laws. It is manifestly impossible, even briefly, to mention these numerous bills. Each constituted a link in the chain of legislative measures which would weaken the immigration laws.

H. R. 3519 will exempt aged fathers and mothers from the quota and put them on a nonquota basis. This bill has a strong sympathy appeal to the uninformed. The facts are, however as stated in a letter from the State Department to me, "with the sole exception of the Turkish quota, each of the 69 quotas is current at this time" (1933) "with quota numbers available for each class of quota immigrant, including the parents of American citizens." Why the bill? To make more room under the quota for new-seed immigrants.

LEGALIZING ILLEGAL ENTRY

H. R. 3522 sought to extend benefits of a record of registry under the act of 1929 to aliens who arrived prior to July 1, 1924, but who cannot prove legal entry. This is an important step toward the objectives of legalizing the entrance of thousands of aliens who are unlawfully in our midst and who came, in many instances, in defiance of our laws.

Other bills in the chain are those to remove educational requirements for citizenship, and even the obligation to defend their adopted country in time of national emergency.

A refinement of this new strategy is seen in the passage of a minor bill which, when sent to the Senate, is materially amended. The history of H. R. 6477 illustrates this. This bill, as originally passed by the House in 1932, merely extended naturalization privileges to alien veterans of the World War. It consisted of 1 paragraph and 2 pages. When it reached the Senate it was materially amended by adding seven new sections dealing with extraneous matter. Tucked away in the bill was section 7. It gave the Secretary of Labor discretion to grant an alien permission to reapply for admission after such alien had been deported.

Prior to 1934 the attempts to weaken the immigration, naturalization, and deportation laws were made by the introduction of a chain of bills. For the most part this attempt failed. However, in 1933 a committee known as the "Ellis Island Committee", headed by Carlton Palmer, of New York, and consisting of 49 members residing in New York, was appointed by Secretary Perkins to make a special study of the operation of the immigration laws. This committee submitted a comprehensive report to Secretary of Labor Perkins, which was placed before the Committees on Immigration and Naturalization of Congress. Five bills based on the report were immediately introduced. The most important were H. R. 9725 and H. R. 9760, reported to the House by Representative DICKSTEIN, of New York, and in the Senate by Senator COOLIDGE, of Massachusetts, the respective Chairmen of the Immigration Committees of the two branches. The only one to come to an actual vote was H. R. 9725.

THE 10-YEAR BILL

While the purpose of H. R. 9725, as shown by its title, is to add a few groups of alien criminals to the deportable classes and to eliminate certain hardship cases, it would give to the Secretary of Labor power to nullify the deportation laws and, to a large extent, the immigration laws as well.

H. R. 9760 would make it possible for any alien who had lived in the United States for 10 years and is not subject to deportation—or, if subject, has been allowed to remain as provided in H. R. 9725—to register and thus become eligible for naturalization. Under this bill thousands of aliens who entered the country illegally after 1921 could register for naturalization. Under it an illegal entrant this year would be eligible for registration and naturalization in 10 years, and so on, and temporary admissions of nonimmigrant aliens, such as visitors, tourists, and the like, could be changed into quota admissions for permanent residence.

On May 3, 1934, Chairman DICKSTEIN, in a letter to me, referred to these five bills as "administration bills."

In the hearings on these bills, I asked Mr. MacCormack, Commissioner of Immigration:

"Are you authorized to say to this committee that the President approves these bills?

"Mr. MACCORMACK. Certainly not. These bills were prepared in the Immigration and Naturalization Service, following the recommendations of the Ellis Island Committee and those of a group of technicians in our own Service. They were presented to the Secretary of Labor and approved by the Secretary. I told the Secretary that I did not wish these bills to be made administration measures in the sense that the President should agree to press them.

"Mr. DIES. They were taken to the President?

"Mr. MACCORMACK. I do not believe the bills themselves were taken to the President.

"Mr. DIES. The Secretary of Labor took them to the President?

"Mr. MACCORMACK. The Secretary of Labor went to the President and certainly made it clear to the President that no increase in immigration was intended."

In the same hearing, Mr. Hushing, legislative representative of the American Federation of Labor, made the following statement:

"I think that is about all I have to say, except that I want to point out that somebody circulated a rumor to the effect that the Federation of Labor favored these bills. I hope I convinced you that we do not. It was even stated that Mr. Green would appear in support of them."

OPPOSITION TO THE BILLS

The following verbal exchange between Mr. Hushing and Mr. DICKSTEIN is very illuminating. It is taken from the printed hearings:

"Mr. DIES. In my bill, H. R. 4114, it would do that very thing. cutting immigration and providing that the relatives can come in under proper safeguards to reunite families.

"Mr. HUSHING. Of course, your bill was acted on some time back—I believe March 12. By the way, the action on your bill was one reason why I did not take up these bills with the chairman of the committee, because in conferences with me, Mr. Chairman, you have many times informed me that you agreed with us on our restrictive-immigration views, excepting as to the admission of aliens to reunite families.

"The CHAIRMAN. You know my stand and everybody in the country knows it. I think we ought to unite the families.

"Mr. HUSHING. We ought to have additional restriction when that is done.

"The CHAIRMAN. We are all reasonable men, and we could sit around the table and find out how far you would go or any other organization would go.

"Mr. HUSHING. You made those expressions of opinion to me unsolicited.

"The CHAIRMAN. I certainly have.

"Mr. HUSHING. And when you had an opportunity to go through with the thing you did not do so on May 12, 1934.

"The CHAIRMAN. My dear friend, let us not get into any personal controversy as to that. I am still repeating what I told you—that I am for uniting families, and I have been for it since coming to Congress.

"Mr. HUSHING. Exactly; when there was a bill in here to restrict immigration and take care of the relatives you did not favor it.

"The CHAIRMAN. I might be able to sit down and point out to you that it was not doing the things about which you are talking. That is a matter of opinion.

"Mr. HUSHING. My opinion is that you did not keep your word with me, and that is the reason I did not come to you privately about these bills."

When the hearings were held before the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization all the patriotic and labor organizations vigorously opposed these bills. Both of them were favorably reported by the committee. The only bill to come to an actual vote was H. R. 9725, which was defeated on June 15 on a roll call.

When H. R. 9725 was before the House for consideration, Mr. BYRNS, now the Speaker of the House, made the following statement, which appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 15, 1934:

"I did not intend to say anything on this bill, but I was just called to the telephone by the Secretary of Labor, who said she understood it had been stated that these were not administration measures. The President has not said anything to me about them, I am frank to say; but the Secretary of Labor asked me to say that the President had expressed a very great interest and his very great desire to have all three of these immigration bills passed."

In reply to this statement of Mr. BYRNS, who was then the majority leader, I made these statements on the floor of the House:

"Mr. Speaker, there is not a member of the Committee on Immigration who does not know it to be a fact that Commissioner MacCormack, when he appeared before the committee and when asked if the President had seen these bills and had supported them, said he had not. If the hearings were printed, they would show that the President had not read these bills; and this effort to jam legislation through Congress by saying that the President has read it and is for it, when there is no competent evidence to that effect, I resent. * * * I challenge the majority leader, or anyone else, to prove that the President of the United States had read this bill and is for it."

Whereupon Mr. BYRNS replied, "I reported only what I had been told by the Secretary of Labor."

My reply to this was, "The gentleman has been quoting the President. The best way to convince us of the President's attitude is to bring us a statement from him. Let the majority leader find out."

In connection with the attempt to create the impression that the President favored these bills, it is interesting to read the letter of the President to Mr. Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, under date of December 8, 1933, which is as follows:

"MY DEAR MR. GREEN: I have referred your letter of September 22 to the Secretary of Labor and enclose a copy of the report submitted to me, which confirms my own understanding that there is no present proposal for relaxation of the restriction on immigration except such as have been made in favor of religious and political refugees.

"Very sincerely,

"(Signed) FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT."

GUARDING THE GATE

All these facts become especially important when it is reliably reported that the Secretary of Labor and Commissioner MacCormack are now formulating plans to reintroduce these bills in substantially the same form.

It would be a serious mistake to repose such wide discretionary power in the Secretary of Labor. One Secretary might be in sympathy with the exclusion and deportation of aliens while another one would not. Many restrictionists in this country do not believe that Madam Perkins is in sympathy with adequate restriction and expulsion of aliens. This wide-spread belief is expressed by W. C. Hushing, legislative representative of the American Federation of Labor, when he made the following statement before the committee when these bills were under consideration. Mr. Hushing said, "I think it would be especially unfortunate if she had this discretionary power, because I believe her leanings are toward the anti-restriction of immigration, and that is the opinion of the federation."

Much of this belief is based upon the action of Secretary Perkins in reversing the order of her predecessor requiring that all immigrants be fingerprinted upon entry into the United States. Fingerprinting is the only practical known method by which the identity of an individual can be definitely established. This belief was also based upon her action in withholding the deportation of 1,200 aliens mandatorily deportable under existing statute and her effort to permit aliens or their relatives to execute bonds when they were rejected on the ground that they would likely become public charges. It is also based upon her action in admitting Emma Goldman, a notorious anarchist, and Henri Barbusse and Tom Mann, two persons who the Department of Labor admits are Communists.

This belief was also strengthened by the opposition of the Labor Department to H. R. 4114, introduced by me, which proposed to reduce all quotas 60 percent and to apply the quota to the countries of the Western Hemisphere, and its opposition to the Schulte bill. This opposition was largely responsible for the committee's refusal to report these bills favorably, so that the House could have an opportunity to vote on them.

One cause for the doubt expressed by many restrictionists in regard to the leanings of the Secretary on this question is the fact that total deportations decreased from 19,865 in 1933 to 8,879 in 1934.

Statements from trustworthy sources have been frequently made that there are 100 alien-minded organizations in this country which are opposed to restriction. It is impossible to quote from the platforms and statements of these various organizations or to show how they are actively represented in Washington to weaken our immigration and deportation laws.

One leading antirestrictionist Congressman expressed in an address at one of their conferences the new strategy in the following language: "From my experiences, I have discovered that the best attack lies in the relatives' relief proposals."

THE HARDSHIP CASES

Although much is being said and printed in reference to the alleged separation of families, the facts do not show any basis for these charges. John Farr Simmons, Chief, Visa Division, Department of State, in a release dated April 30, 1934, had this to say:

"Strict as the interpretation of the public-charge clause has admittedly been, every attempt has been made to avoid as far as possible the separation of immediate relatives and to preserve the family unit. For example, a recent report from Berlin indicates that during the period October 1, 1930, to December 31, 1933, of more than 1,700 section 4 (a) relative applicants, visas were refused by our consulate general there, on public-charge grounds, to only 12. No such case is definitely closed and all these cases may be reopened for the consideration of new material evidence. It is believed that approximately the same low percentage of refusals exists in the cases of the immediate families of foreign residents of this country."

Another favorite appeal to the sympathy is in the case of refugees. In the same release just quoted, Mr. Simmons says:

"Another class of applicants deserving the most humane treatment permissible under our laws as now interpreted is what has been often described as the refugee class. By this I refer to persons who are obliged to leave or have left the country of their regular residence and who seek to escape from conditions in that country by coming to the United States either directly or through third countries. There have been many recent visa applicants of this type and the State Department has instructed its consuls to give them the most humane and favorable treatment possible under the law."

In regard to the hardship cases resulting from deportation, the Commissioner of Immigration, Mr. MacCormack, admitted to me before the Immigration Committee that not more than 5 percent of all deportation cases could be properly classified as hardship cases. When it is considered that this percentage took into consideration five-hundred-and-some-odd carry-overs from the previous year, it can be conservatively stated that not more than 3 percent are bona fide hardship cases.

We have in this country today some 10,000,000 unemployed. We have before the Congress at the time of writing a bill to appropriate nearly $5,000,000,000 to furnish employment to 3,500,000 people. And yet the facts show that there are 3,500,000 aliens illegally and unlawfully in our midst. These aliens are either on relief or are holding jobs that our own citizens could fill. Recently an official in the F. E. R. A. advised me that in Douglas, Ariz., out of 553 families on relief, 400 of such families were aliens. An important official of the city of Baltimore recently informed me that hundreds of aliens were on relief in that city. Accurate figures have shown that there are thousands of Mexican aliens in California and Texas who are on public relief.

CHARITY BEGINS AT HOME

I am advised by the Federal Emergency Relief Administration that according to their estimate 600,000 aliens are receiving relief at the present time. My own opinion is that this estimate is too conservative and that a careful investigation will disclose that in excess of a million aliens are receiving relief. However, if this figure is correct, it shows that 6,400,000 aliens are deriving their livelihood from employment in this country that would otherwise go to American citizens.

It has been well said that charity should begin at home and that self-preservation is the highest law of Nature. If this is true, why do not we exclude all new-seed immigrants and deport the ones who are unlawfully and illegally in our midst?

H. R. 5921, which I introduced, will accomplish these purposes. It will further restrict immigration by reducing the existing quotas 60 percent and apply them to countries of this hemisphere, take care of law-abiding aged parents and near relatives of foreign born in this country by reserving the quotas for them, and deport aliens engaged in smuggling and bootlegging aliens into this country. It will also deport gangsters, racketeers, and Communists.

The antirestrictionists argue that immigration has decreased so much that it is not necessary to reduce the quotas. It is true that on September 8, 1930, the White House issued a press release pointing out that the public-charge clause had a special significance in times of wide-spread unemployment, and as a result of the strict interpretation of the public-charge provision, from September 8, 1930, until recently the number of aliens entering under the quota dwindled to a low level.

By reason of the strict enforcement of this section during the 45 months from October 1, 1930, to June 30, 1934, more than 750,000 aliens who might have been admitted during normal times were prevented from entering the United States to increase unemployment. In the 4 fiscal years 1931–34, 594,776 aliens expressed their desire to immigrate. Of this number, 401,564 were denied visas principally under the public-charge provision of the law. Although it is known throughout the world that the unemployment problem is very serious in this country, 203,314 aliens have requested that their names be kept upon the waiting lists, so that they can enter the United States for residence as soon as the law permits. In spite of this administrative exclusion, only 549, or 1.1 percent of near relatives whose admittance has been requested by petitions, were refused under the public-charge provision.

The greatest registry demand for immigration visas comes from Germany, Austria, Palestine, Poland, Rumania, Russia, Spain, Turkey, and Yugoslavia, with very little demand from Great Britain, Northern Ireland, and the Irish Free State.

The greatest demand for immigration visas from nonquota countries came from Canada, while the greatest demand for immigration visas in quota countries came from Germany. Great Britain and Northern Ireland furnished the greatest demand for nonimmigrant visas.

In spite of the fact that 90 percent of the refusals by the consuls to grant visas were based upon the public-charge clause, strong efforts are being made greatly to restrict the authority of the consuls in the administration of this section.

One of the first official acts of Secretary Perkins was to direct her Solicitor Wyzanski to request the Attorney General for an opinion as to whether she had the power to accept public-charge bonds in advance, or after the refusal, of applications for immigration visas. The Attorney General ruled that she could accept such public-charge bonds, and that, after such acceptance, consular offices were precluded from refusing the immigration visas on public-charge grounds.

BONDS THAT DO NOT BIND

It must be admitted that the Secretary has not put this ruling into effect, but it is not known when she will do so. It is certainly true that the acceptance of these bonds on a large scale would destroy the restrictive features of section 3 and greatly handicap our consuls in their effort to exclude pioneer immigrants. We have the word of Commissioner MacCormack that these bonds are practically worthless. In his report to the Secretary of Labor for the year ending June 30, 1933, he said, "Many aliens arrested under warrant are released upon bonds furnished by surety companies, and in the past year numerous of these companies have been thrown into the hands of the receivers because of financial difficulties. The Bureau has submitted many claims to the State officials liquidating these corporations under court orders, but it is doubtful that much of the penalties on breached bonds will be recovered."

Section 3 of the bill H. R. 5630, introduced by Chairman DICKSTEIN, would permit a review of and appeal from the refusal of consular offices to grant immigration visas. As stated by Mr. Carr, Assistant Secretary of State, "Such a bill, if enacted, would be very expensive and would set up in this country a special aliens' court and build up a group of lawyers practicing before it."

However, it must be remembered that this administrative reduction is admittedly temporary, to last only during the acute stages of the depression. As Mr. Simmons said in his press release of April 30, 1934, "With the improvement in economic conditions, which is already setting in, the significance of the public-charge clause will proportionately decrease." In the same release he also said, "As regards quota immigration, however, we find a very interesting recent change. The total of visas issued under the quotas is now 53 percent higher than a year ago, although we must remember that we are making our comparison with an all-time low ebb of immigration into the United States. When we take certain individual quotas into consideration, however, we find interesting facts. The issue of visas under the German quota is now proceeding at three times the rate for 1932–33. Last year 1,241 visas were issued under the German quota of 25,957; 2,395 visas have already been issued for the first 8 months of the current fiscal year, or 300 visas per month."

THE THREATENING FLOOD

Last year's immigration statistics show an increase of 50 percent in quota immigration—that is, new-seed immigrants—an 8-percent increase in total aliens admitted and a 60-percent decrease in alien deportations, as well as a 50-percent increase in deserting seamen, alien stow-aways, and the like.

These facts show the necessity of permanently reducing the quota and strengthening the deportation laws. The strict interpretation of the public-charge clause is now being relaxed, and as conditions improve, literally thousands of aliens will enter under the quota. In view of the condition of our country and the difficulty we will experience during the next generation in furnishing employment to the natural increase of our population, the admission of 150,000 aliens a year will be more hurtful than the annual admission of 500,000 in the years that are gone.

In addition to this, there is a serious threat that millions of aliens will enter from those countries that are not now subject to the quota and that the quota limitation from quota countries will be more than offset by the influx from nonquota countries.

Commissioner MacCormack recognized this danger when he said, in his statement filed before the House Appropriations Committee, that, "Moreover, there is reason to believe that many thousands of aliens now resident in Mexico and Canada will attempt wholesale surreptitious entry into this country, to the detriment of our own workmen, when industrial conditions again approach normal, and to control that attempted influx an increase in personnel may be absolutely necessary."

Mr. MacCormack estimated that the value of seizures by the border patrol of vehicles used in smuggling aliens for the year 1933 was $283,744. This included 13 airships, valued at $89,500.

I cannot resist the temptation to quote one paragraph from a very able and well-prepared statement made before the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization by Mr. James H. Patten, who is one of the leading authorities on this subject and one of the most effective and consistent advocates of restriction that we have in this country today:

"According to the last annual report of the Commissioner of Immigration, published in a very abbreviated form in the appendix to the short report of the Secretary of Labor, there were legally admitted last year 23,068 aliens for permanent residence, and 127,666 nonimmigrant aliens for temporary stay, and 822,813 alien seamen examinations were held at our ports, and 20,560,826 aliens entrants' examinations were held at our borders, 'the bulk of whom', to quote the report 'were not manifested.' The steamship and transportation companies report carrying away 243,802 aliens, 80,081 of whom expected to remain abroad permanently, and the other 163,721 expected to return. Among the aliens admitted last year 'for permanent residence' were 134 farm laborers, 292 farmers, 844 common laborers, 550 servants, and many other groups of job hunters, when in every city, town, and village throughout the length and breadth of our land there were and are literally hundreds of these very classes of job hunters seeking work at any wage, on public relief or public or private charity, and in such desperate condition financially and economically and so discouraged of mind that there is scarcely a newspaper that does not contain the suicide of some person who often has first taken the lives of his loved ones on account of inability to get work and supply them with the necessities and comforts he or she thinks are necessary as life itself."

WHAT AMERICA NEEDS

The fact that there are millions of aliens illegally in our midst, including gangsters, kidnapers, such as Hauptmann, and well-known racketeers, and the fact that deportation decreased 60 percent last year should certainly convince anyone that something is radically wrong, either with our deportation laws or with their enforcement.

In my judgment, every patriotic organization and citizen in this country will support my bill and the Schulte bill. If the Labor Department is in favor of restriction and adequate deportation, it can convince the country to this effect by actively and publicly supporting this bill as well as all other restrictive measures. I am sure that there are millions of Americans who feel as I do about these important questions.

What our unhappy country needs today is more so-called "selfish patriotism" and less fatuous internationalism, more devotion to the needs and problems of our own people and less sentimental and unappreciated concern for the affairs of other countries. Not that a policy of economic isolation is either wise or desirable, but that the time has come when we must cease being made the dupes and willing victims of European duplicity, deceit, and cunning.

All other countries have adopted drastic measures in the protection of their nationals. Let us take Mexico, for instance. Under her laws, restrictions as applied to immigrants require an investment in industry or agriculture of 20,000 pesos, or a sufficient independent income. For nonimmigrants, such as tourists, the chief restriction is that they should show 500 pesos. Chinese, Negroes, Malays and Hindus, Soviet citizens, gypsies and tramps, clergymen, doctors, and professors are excluded. It is interesting to note that in 1900 there were only 103,393 Mexicans in the entire United States, according to the census. In 1930 the census showed 1,422,533, or an increase of 1,276 percent, and it is well-known that illegal entrants avoid census enumerators.

In Sweden, aliens who arrive must show passports properly stamped, and the alien's entry and departure are recorded by the police. Aliens intending to take any form of employment, whether employed in Sweden or abroad, must secure a permit from the social board, which first obtains opinions from the public employment bureau, employers and workers in the trade and locality concerned. Permits are for a definite work and time. Holders and their employers must report to the police.

Three bills have been introduced in the Riksdag to strengthen their immigration laws. A judicial committee has already considered these bills. One bill proposes that no permit to work can be issued to an alien if the trade union concerned can show the existence of qualified domestic laborers.

The immigration law of Japan provides that the competent officials shall prevent the entry of aliens suspected of a desire to act against the interest of the Empire, those who may become a danger to public order or good behavior, beggars and vagabonds. Persons likely to become a public charge may be refused admission.

On December 15, 1930, Belgium enacted a royal decree under which permission to work in Belgium could no longer be obtained after that date without the production of a labor contract procured prior to arrival in Belgium and approved by the Ministry of Labor. The unwritten rule of the ministry is to grant such approvals only if it is convinced that the alien whom it is intended to import possesses special qualifications which cannot be found in Belgium. This policy, rendered possible by the elastic wording of the royal decree referred to above, enables the Government to curtail at will the immigration of foreign labor, each individual case being considered separately, and there being, apart from very few exceptions, practically no special qualifications which cannot be found in such a highly industrialized and progressive country as Belgium, whose high schools and universities, on the one hand, and craftsmen, artisans, and farmers, on the other hand, are excellent. It is the policy of the Belgian Government to see that all available jobs are filled as much as possible by Belgians.

FRANCE FOR THE FRENCH

The policy of the French Government has changed radically in recent months, due to the number of French people unemployed. Refusals of residence permits and expulsions are becoming more frequent. The policy of France is much more rigid than it was prior to 1933. The control over aliens residing in France is so close that admission formalities are less severe than our own; however, for several years past practically all aliens, except contract laborers, obtaining visas for France have had their passports stamped with a notation, "Not to occupy any salaried position."

Immigration to Switzerland is rigorously restricted. Seasonal workers, domestic servants, skilled and unskilled laborers, and, in fact, all persons entering Switzerland for employment, are admitted for a temporary period. Permission to reside permanently without employment is rarely granted—usually only to foreigners married to Swiss citizens or to aliens who have been residents of Switzerland for a long time on limited permissions which have been renewed.

Under the immigration law of New Zealand the permanent entry of a person not of British birth and parentage is provided for by a permit, for which the intending immigrant should make application from the country where he was last domiciled. The issuance of permits is at the absolute discretion of the Minister of Customs. Permits are refused in most cases to persons not in possession of adequate funds and who are likely to become public charges. In 1931 an act was passed giving authority to the customs department to refuse admission to British subjects not possessing sufficient funds or likely to become destitute and unemployed.

On December 16, 1930, Argentina passed a restrictive decree, imposing a fee of 30 gold pesos upon applicants for immigration, in addition to the regular fee of 3 gold pesos, and required the applicant to produce a good-conduct certificate, a health certificate, and a police certificate to the effect that the applicant had not been a professional beggar. On January 1, 1933, Argentina strengthened her requirements, so that all applicants for Argentina visas must possess a current contract for employment in the land of destination. As a result of administrative discouragement of immigration and the enactment of rigid requirements, all immigration to Argentina, with the exception of close relatives of residents, returning Argentinian residents, and individuals coming to the country for special purposes, such as specialists with contracts, has practically ceased.

In the Netherlands a law was enacted on May 16, 1934, which authorizes the ministers concerned with the execution of the law to take necessary steps to require employers of labor in the Netherlands to have written authorization from the minister of social affairs to employ foreigners. An employer who employs foreigners without authorization or in conflict with the stipulations may be punished by imprisonment for 1 month or fined more than 100 florins.

HOW OTHERS CURB THE ALIEN

Under the new constitution of Brazil, the entry of aliens is subject to restrictions necessary to guarantee the ethnical integration and physical and civil capacity of the immigrant. However, the total annual immigration from each country may not exceed 2 percent of the respective nationals who fix their residence in Brazil during the last 50 years.

In 1926 the immigration to Brazil was 121,569, while in 1933 it had fallen to 48,812.

Although Great Britain has never been the goal of immigrants from foreign countries, due to the fact that there is no free land for settlers and she has a surplus of laborers, nevertheless, to protect her nationals, the aliens' order was issued. This requires a permit from the Ministry of Labor to enter Great Britain. Such permits are issued, not to the immigrant but to the prospective employer, and then only when he can show that no British subject is available to fill the particular position concerned. This means, in effect, that only highly skilled specialists are admitted.

In Germany immigration is effectually restricted by the fact that "permits to work", which are necessary for the obtainment of employment, are regularly denied the aliens. These permits are strictly controlled by the federal and state employment offices and, unless the alien workman is considered indispensable to some German industry or business, the permit is withheld. An alien coming to Germany without means of support would soon become destitute and, as a destitute alien, would be subject, under a German law, to deportation.

When foreigners have established their domicile in Germany, or when they have remained in the Reich for more than 6 months—in which case domicile in Germany is taken for granted—they must make declaration before the proper German authorities concerning their property holdings outside of Germany and they become subject to taxation on their property held outside of Germany. The alien may be required to transfer to Germany financial means possessed abroad and receive marks therefor.

A FACT WE CANNOT IGNORE

While we struggle with the intricate problems of unemployment and distress, there is one great fact that we cannot ignore. There are 3,500,000 foreigners who came to this country illegally and with utter disregard for our laws. By appropriate legislation and proper enforcement we can return them to their own lands and relieve the unemployment and distress in our midst. Among this number are hundreds of gangsters, murderers, and thieves who are unfit to live in this country and, God knows, unfit to die in any country. Driven out of Europe, they have taken advantage of our maudlin sentimentality and plagued us long enough.

Relentless war without quarter and without cessation must be waged upon them until the last one is driven from our shores.

There is no middle ground or compromise. Either we are for or against our country.

The motives which actuate these various antirestriction blocs are immaterial and beside the question.

The fact is that all of them—the internationalist, the sentimentalist, the greedy employer or the steamship company seeking quick profits, and the aliens themselves, and their relatives—are all working for the same results.

Though actuated by different motives they have the same goal.

They have hurled the challenge and thrown down the gauntlet. What is our answer? The only way to deport aliens is to deport them, and the only way to restrict immigration is to restrict it.

IMPORTATION OF COTTON CLOTH FROM JAPAN

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, in the press this morning appears an item showing a tremendous emergency that has arisen in connection with the importation of cotton cloth and bleached cotton cloth from Japan. An explanation is given as to one of the reasons for the importation. There was evidently an oversight in writing the tariff bill in connection with making a compensatory duty proper for this purpose. The importations have jumped from 3,960 yards in February 1934 to 4,347,000 yards in February 1935.

Mr. Speaker, I am introducing a bill which I feel is an emergency measure, and I hope my esteemed friend and colleague, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], will see that it is given prompt attention by the Ways and Means Committee. This bill has for its purpose the imposition of minimum specific duties on bleached cotton cloth and on cotton cloth that is printed, dyed, or colored. It will help relieve the situation existing with reference to this tremendous disparity between our manufactures and the importations from Japan and prevent some of the great increase that has arisen during the past year. I am introducing the bill at this time.

Under the Tariff Act of 1922, all cotton cloth bore specific duties, based on the thread count, with a proviso that in no case should the duty be less than a certain percentage ad valorem. These rates applied both to bleached and unbleached cloth, and to that which was printed, dyed, or colored.

In the enactment of the Tariff Act of 1930, the duty on unbleached cloth was changed to an ad valorem rate, based on the count, with a proviso that in no case should the duty be less than fifty-five one-hundredths of 1 cent per average number per pound.

The duties on bleached and on printed, dyed, or colored cloth were also changed to an ad valorem basis, but no minimum specific duty was imposed. Thus, at the present time, bleached cotton cloth having a count of 50 threads bears a duty of 30½ percent ad valorem, whereas under the act of 1922 the rate was 24 cents per pound, but not less than 25½ percent ad valorem. It so happens that with the present price of Japanese imports, the ad valorem duty is not effective, whereas if the old specific rate had been retained, it would have had the effect of equalizing the Japanese competition.

In the case of bleached cotton cloth, I propose that the minimum duty shall not be less than three-fifths of 1 cent per average number per pound. In the case of printed, dyed, or colored cotton cloth, I propose a minimum duty of sixty-five one-hundredths of 1 cent per average number per pound.

Comparison of rates

	Treadway bill	Act of 1930	Act of 1922
Bleached:		Percent
Count of 20	20 percent or 12 cents per pound.	20	9 cents per pound or 18 percent.
Count of 50	30½ percent or 30 cents per pound.	30½	24 cents per pound or 25¼ percent.
Printed, etc.:
Count of 20	23 percent or 13 cents per pound.	23	11 cents per pound or 21¼ percent.
Count of 50	33½ percent or 32½ cents per pound.	33½	28½ cents per pound or 30.6 percent.

Importation of bleached cotton cloth from Japan

	Square yards
January 1934	3,960
June 1934	179,948
December 1934	1,994,743
January 1935	2,633,295
February 1935	4,347,739

In view of the tremendous increase in Japanese importations, it is apparent that an emergency condition exists in the textile industry which requires immediate attention. I am informed that three Georgia textile mills closed this morning.

A bill to impose minimum specific duties on certain cotton cloth

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of paragraph 904 of the Tariff Act of 1930 as reads:

"(b) Cotton cloth, bleached, containing yarns the average number of which does not exceed no. 90, 13 percent ad valorem, and in addition thereto for each number, thirty-five one-hundredths of 1 percent ad valorem; exceeding no. 90, 44½ percent ad valorem.

"(c) Cotton cloth, printed, dyed, or colored, containing yarns the average number of which does not exceed no. 90, 16 percent ad valorem, and in addition thereto for each number, thirty-five one-hundredths of 1 percent ad valorem; exceeding no. 90, 47½ percent ad valorem."

is amended to read as follows:

"(b) Cotton cloth, bleached, containing yarns the average number of which does not exceed no. 90, 13 percent ad valorem, and in addition thereto for each number, thirty-five one-hundredths of 1 percent ad valorem; exceeding no. 90, 44½ percent ad valorem: Provided, That none of the foregoing shall be subject to a less duty than three-fifths of 1 cent per average number per pound.

"(c) Cotton cloth, printed, dyed, or colored, containing yarns the average number of which does not exceed no. 90, 16 percent ad valorem, and in addition thereto for each number, thirty-five one-hundredths of 1 percent ad valorem; exceeding no. 90, 47½ percent ad valorem: Provided, That none of the foregoing shall be subject to a less duty than sixty-five one-hundredths of 1 cent per average number per pound."

PUBLIC SERVICE COORDINATED TRANSPORT OF NEWARK, N. J.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 2439) authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Public Service Coordinated Transport of Newark, N. J., with a Senate amendment and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 7, after "claim", insert ": Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, was this bill referred to the proper committee?

Mr. HOEPPEL. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR APPROPRIATION BILL—1936

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6223) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. WOODRUM. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Colorado a question with particular reference to the Senate amendment creating the additional office of Under Secretary of the Interior. May I ask the gentleman whether or not he can give the House assurance that if consent is given for this bill to go to conference the Members of the House will be given an opportunity for debate and a vote on that amendment separately?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, this is legislation, and I will have to do that, I presume. I see no reason why I should not.

Mr. WOODRUM. With the gentleman's assurance, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, Mr. JACOBSEN, Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma, Mr. ZIONCHECK, Mr. SCRUGHAM, Mr. LAMBERTSON, and Mr. WIGGLESWORTH.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DUFFY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 4 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DUFFY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I just came from the Municipal Airport. I went there to welcome some 75 apple pies which were baked in the kitchen of the chamber of commerce restaurant in Rochester, N. Y., this morning. They left Rochester by the Gannett plane at 7:30 o'clock, battled fogs in the western part of New York, and were forced to a landing at Elmira. Then I received a report at 9:30 that it was very doubtful whether they would get through; but they did arrive at 11:15 and in excellent condition. They were escorted here by the general secretary of the chamber, Mr. Esser. Three of the pies were delivered to the White House and the President has promised to give his opinion of apple pies such as are made only by the Rochester Chamber of Commerce.

These pies will be in the House restaurant and on the menu today, and I hope that you will confirm the opinion we have in Rochester that these are pies such as "mother made."

This interesting event came to pass by reason of the remarks of the gentleman from Oregon when he extolled—on March 11 from the floor of the House—the apples that are grown in the Hood River Valley. His remarks aroused the self-complacency, self-sufficiency, and the self-satisfaction of the growers of apples in western New York and resulted in what has happened today.

I know there was a time in the period of rugged individualism when we had apple pie for breakfast, apple pie for lunch, apple pie for dinner, and apple pie between meals, but we have now come to a better and happier time when we emphasize not the quantity but the quality of the pie, and I want to tell you the secret of the quality of these pies.

I have been a member and a trustee of the Chamber of Commerce of Rochester for over 20 years. During that time we have held the president of the chamber responsible, and he alone responsible, for the apple pie that was served in the chamber restaurant. No complaint could be made to the manager, or to the chef. The complaint had to be registered with the president of the chamber.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUFFY of New York. May I suggest before yielding to the gentleman, we might start today to establish a reputation in this House for quality apple pies if we could make the Speaker of the House responsible for the apple pie served in the House restaurant. If this could be done the House apple pie would have not only a national reputation but an international reputation. This would help the Department of Agriculture to encourage the growing of apples and would contribute to that prosperity which is right at hand, and be in the public trust.

Mr. MILLARD. Will the apple pie be as free as were the apples from Oregon?

Mr. DUFFY of New York. The apple pie is delivered here with the compliments of the chamber of commerce and is on the menu today and will be served in the House restaurant.

Mr. MILLARD. But we will have to pay for it?

Mr. DUFFY of New York. It is on the menu and included in the special price lunches.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the distinguished gentleman yield?

Mr. DUFFY of New York. I yield to my friend from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I compliment my colleague from New York for his industry in having pies sent here made from apples in his section. He has praised these apples and the gentleman from Oregon has lauded his apples, and I must not allow this time to pass without saying to the House that West Virginia apples in my district are the most delicious in the world.

[Laughter and applause.]

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and I regret even to reserve the right to object to anything that the gentlewoman from Massachusetts may request, but we all realize how we are being urged to expedite the consideration of the pending bill. The way we are going on now we are not going to be able to finish general debate today and unless it is something very, very important——

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, if it is possible to advertise pies from the floor of the House, it is certainly possible to take care of the textile industry of the country and I hope my colleague will not object.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I believe it is a matter of personal privilege. It is not a request, but a right. The Secretary of Agriculture in a speech in Atlanta——

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from Massachusetts is stating a question of personal privilege and the Chair will hear her.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It affects the southern Members just as it does the northern Members. It is not a sectional question.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I may state that we have had considerable argument about this question, and it is a matter we can discuss with the gentlewoman from Massachusetts after the consideration of the pending bill.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am stating a matter of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from Massachusetts has the right to state her question of personal privilege and the Chair will ask the gentlewoman from Massachusetts to state it.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

I withdraw it, Mr. Speaker, if the gentlewoman from Massachusetts has been recognized.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from Massachusetts will state her question of personal privilege.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of Agriculture, in his Atlanta speech, said in part:

Those who are urging that the tax be removed—

Speaking of the processing tax—

are in many instances deliberately misleading the public about the nature and effect of the tax. All the difficulties of the textile industry are being blamed on the processing tax.

Then he goes on to say:

In a radio speech the other night, a Member of Congress discussed the distressed condition of New England mills and advocated removal of the tax and an embargo on textile imports as the remedy. It was inferred from this address that the processing tax was giving foreign spinners an advantage in the domestic market.

Mr. Speaker, as I was the only Member of the House who made an address recently over a national hook-up about the processing tax——

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that the gentlewoman from Massachusetts is not stating a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from Massachusetts has the right to complete her statement.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. What the processing tax is doing not only to the northern mills, but to the southern mills and to the cotton farmers——

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentlewoman from Massachusetts is not stating a question of personal privilege, but speaking on the processing tax.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, she is doing nothing of the sort, and I protest against these interruptions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentlewoman from Massachusetts on her question of personal privilege.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, in all my experience in Washington—and I have been here since 1913—I have never known the Secretary of any department to ask or to make an appeal for one section of the country to work against the other. I have not deliberately misled anybody, and I did not do so in my radio address. I simply stated the facts.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the rule provides that a Member may rise to a question of personal privilege where the rights, reputation, and conduct of Members in their individual capacity only are assailed.

The name of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts was not mentioned, in the first place, and the Chair fails to see where there is a question of personal privilege involved in the statement referred to by the gentlewoman from Massachusetts, and therefore must, of course, rule that she has not raised a question of personal privilege.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentlewoman from Massachusetts may be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. I move to amend that, Mr. Speaker, by making it 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FULMER. I object.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I realize I am going to be denied my request, but I ask unanimous consent to proceed for half a minute.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am sorry, but I must object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and forty Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were closed, the Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that my colleague, Mr. RANKIN, is unavoidably detained on account of illness and therefore did not answer to the roll call.

R. 6021, to provide additional home-mortgage relief, to amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, the National Housing Act, and for other purposes, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

COMPETITION OF COTTON TEXTILES IMPORTED FROM JAPAN

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter I received from the Secretary of State, Cordell Hull, on the subject of imports from Japan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter received by me from the Secretary of State:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 12, 1935.

The Honorable ROBERT L. DOUGHTON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. DOUGHTON: I have your letter of March 30, 1935, enclosing a letter of March 28, which you have received from Mr. S. M. Fessenden of the Sayles Biltmore Bleacheries, Inc., with reference to the competition of cotton textiles imported from Japan. It is very kind of you to let me see this letter, similar to many others which you are receiving. In response to your suggestion I am glad to comment upon the situation referred to.

As you know, there is almost continuous pressure upon this Government from many groups desiring increased protection against competition, whether it be from domestic or foreign sources. In my opinion it is not only unwise as a general policy to yield to the demand for greater restrictions upon imports, but would be particularly unfortunate at this time, since such action could not but weaken the leadership of the administration in the efforts that it is making to reduce the many restrictions hampering the flow of international trade. Furthermore, our international position gives us little justification for raising new barriers against imports at the present time. Although the United States is one of the principal creditor Nations we still export more than we import. The value of the excess of our exports over our imports last year amounted to nearly half a billion dollars. That excess was balanced, speaking in general terms, by our very heavy imports of gold, but this situation cannot continue indefinitely. We must import more if we are to maintain even the present volume of exports.

It is possible, of course, that very large or very rapid increases in the importation of certain commodities would prove to be not only destructive of the competing industries but also undesirable from the standpoint of national economy. Even such situation, should they arise, would not call for special legislative action, however, for the executive branch of the Government has at the present time adequate power for dealing with such situations under existing legislation, specifically under section 3 (e) of the National Industrial Recovery Act, sections 336 and 337 of the Tariff Act of 1930, and the Antidumping Act of 1921.

Action under these provisions of law would require detailed investigation, but known facts indicate that imports of Japanese cotton goods are negligible in relation to total domestic production and consumption. Imports of Japanese cotton piece goods in 1934 were the largest they had been for several years, but even then they represented only 5.6 percent of the total value of cotton goods imported, inconsequential as this total was. In 1934 these imports from Japan were 1½ percent of the value of American exports of similar goods, and they were much less than one-tenth of 1 percent of the value of cotton piece goods consumed in this country.

Manufacturers and business men frequently display a tendency to exaggerate the importance of competition from new sources—they fear that which is as yet unknown and unmeasured. Japanese competition in cotton textiles during the first months of this year affords a case in point. The statistics which your correspondent refers to were obviously not prepared by the Department of Commerce, and they greatly exaggerate the importance of the increase in the imports of Japanese cotton goods. The Department of Commerce figures show that imports for consumption from Japan in January of this year were less than one-half of the total of such imports for 1934, rather than two and one-half times that total, as reported by your correspondent. It is true that imports from Japan in the first 2 months of this year did slightly exceed the total imports for 1934, but even then they were valued at less than $400,000 and represented only 25 percent of the total value of the imports of cotton piece goods in that period.

I believe that we should resist any effort to stampede this Government into unnecessary and unwise action against Japanese competition, whether in textiles or any other commodity. The relations between the two countries are friendly, and it is to the unquestioned advantage of both countries to maintain relations on this basis. There can be no charge of sentimentality in holding this position in this country if attention be directed to the obvious economic advantages to the United States of a free exchange of goods with Japan. Last year we sold to Japan nearly twice as much as we imported from Japan—$209,865,596 as compared with $118,007,087. Japan is our best market for raw cotton—more cotton from the 1934 crop is being sold to Japan than the combined sales to the three countries that are the next best purchasers. At the same time, of course, the United States was in 1934 the best market for Japanese raw silk. But cotton and silk do not represent the entire picture by any means. The United States exported in 1934 a wide variety of goods, other than raw cotton, to a value nearly as great as the total imports from Japan, including raw silk; and these miscellaneous commodities, shipped to Japan from all parts of the United States, were worth twice as much as the commodities other than silk which we bought from Japan.

With best wishes, I am, sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for half a minute.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I object. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7260) to provide for the general welfare by establishing a system of Federal old-age benefits, and by enabling the several States to make more adequate provision for aged persons, dependent and crippled children, maternal and child welfare, public health, and the administration of their unemployment-compensation laws; to establish a Social Security Board; to raise revenue; and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. MCREYNOLDS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON].

Mr. EATON. Mr. Chairman, on Saturday last my beloved friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK], called attention to a statement by Dun & Bradstreet to the effect that prosperity is headed our way. I rejoiced to hear that, but regret exceedingly that the statement was not well founded.

Mr. FITZPATRICK rose.

Mr. EATON. Oh, I am not going to yield to anybody today.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. But the gentleman mentioned my name.

Mr. EATON. The gentleman has not heard what I am going to say.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. But I know what the gentleman is going to say.

Mr. EATON. If the gentleman will give me the recipe for knowing what is in another man's mind, I would like very much to have it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON. Not now. In the New York Sun of Monday, April 15, 1935, occurs this statement:

Last Friday a section of the Dun & Bradstreet weekly review was quoted as follows: "During the week there was a complete transformation of sentiment, as the hopes for a rather far-removed improvement were replaced by a realization that the immediate future is to bring the sharpest rise that has been witnessed in business in the past quarter of a century." Today the agency explained the rather optimistic prophecy by sending round this statement: "No significant information justified the inadvertent and unauthorized departure from our policy of not making predictions as to the future business trend which was evidenced in our weekly review of business released under date of April 12, 1935."

Mr. Chairman, I shall confine my remarks in the few minutes assigned to me to one point. We have in this great legislation proposed here two alternatives for the solution of a problem that transcends all political considerations, all sectional considerations. There is no doubt in the world that the time has come when this Nation must face intelligently and, by and by, successfully the problem of taking care of its unemployed and its aged people. In this legislation we have our choice between two general principles. One is that the Federal Government shall intrude upon the States of the Union by or through the force of Federal grants and determine largely the policy of those States and thus make the State the instrument of raising the funds and distributing them for caring for the aged and solving the unemployment problem. On the other hand, I believe, there are to be introduced here one or two substitute proposals in which the Federal Government shall take supreme command, assume complete responsibility for raising and distributing the money. This House will have to decide between those two great general principles in its application to the solution of this problem.

I ask this House to give attention to one problem that seems to be entirely lost sight of in all the vast money-spending legislation under this new-deal administration, and that is the question as to where the governments, national and local, of this country are to find the financial resources to take care of all these responsibilities which we are assuming. I read to you the figures of the census of 1930. We had at that time 122,000,000 people. We had 48,829,000 people gainfully employed. Thirty-eight million of them were males and 10,000,000 were females. We had 210,000 industrial institutions or establishments producing wealth of more than $5,000 value. The question that I am raising here is the foundation question of our civilization. We have intruded ourselves through the administration and through this legislative body into the front ranks of those seeking a solution of this problem, and unless we face it and go to the bottom of it, which we have not begun to do yet, we are going to destroy the foundation of our civilization.

In 1929, which was the banner year of prosperity, so called, we had 210,000 establishments producing more than $5,000 worth of wealth each a year. We had 8,838,000 employees in those institutions as wage earners, who earned $11,600,000,000 in a year. We had in those institutions working on salary 1,358,000 people with salaries of $3,500,000,000. The total value of the output that year, the greatest in the history of any nation since time began, was something over $70,000,000,000. Of that, $38,000,000,000 was cost of material and $31,000,000,000 was value added by manufacture. In good times or bad times that reservoir of newly created wealth constitutes the only source of spending money, public money or private, for 125,000,000 people.

The question that I lay upon your minds, gentlemen, and upon my own thought as a citizen of this country, regardless of politics, is, What are we going to do with that instrument, the one goose that lays the golden egg, namely, the wealth-producing agencies of this Nation, in agriculture, industry, and finance? What are we going to do with it and what are we doing with it now? The attitude of the new-deal administration, of the majority in this House, and of millions of people today is an attitude of hate and antagonism, and you hear on all sides attacks made on business, big and little, and upon individuals engaged in business. I admit that the industrial leaders of this country have been and are just like the rest of us. I admit that among them have been rascals and thieves and fools, just as there have been among politicians and among every other class in the country; but the great rank and file of men and women in this Nation, who are bearing its burden and are producing the only wealth we have to meet these obligations, are the industrial leaders and farm producers of this Nation—men and women of character, ability, and honor. What is the Government doing? Taxing them beyond belief, regulating them with redtape and bureaucracy and primitive legislation beyond their endurance to support; going into competition with them in business, leaving them unprotected against the competition of starving-wage countries. No business man today has the slightest notion in the world what is going to happen to him tomorrow. He is forced to spend time and money coming to Washington to ask what he can do, if he cannot do this or that, instead of not only being permitted but being encouraged by the Government to stay at home and run his own business.

So I ask this House in all earnestness, not as members of this party or of that, but as citizens of the United States, to begin the study where it must begin and end, namely, in the wealth-producing energies of this Nation. If you are going to put the wealth-producing industries of this Nation under unfair and uneconomic Government competition, under Government control by inexperienced bureaucrats, you are going to kill the goose that lays the golden egg. There is no other source for any dollar used by any government except in the brain and brawn and sweat of some wealth-producing man or woman somewhere in this Nation. [Applause.] Those are the people who ought to have our sympathy and our understanding, and we ought not to stand here and curse them as if they were public enemy no. 1.

Wipe them out and you wipe yourselves out; you wipe government out and finally you will destroy every institution in this land. So I say that the protection and perpetuation of the wealth-producing instrumentalities of this Nation by our Government transcends politics. It transcends partisanship. It goes to the very foundations of our civilization. The function of all industry is to serve society by assuring economic security and liberty to all who deserve it. The function of government is to encourage and protect industry in performing this public service.

> Our rulers will best promote the improvement of the people by strictly confining themselves to their own legitimate duties, by leaving capital to find its most lucrative course, commodities their fair price, industry and intelligence their natural reward, idleness and folly their natural punishment—by maintaining peace, by defending property, by diminishing the price of law, by observing strict economy in every department of the State. Let the Government do this—the people will assuredly do the rest.

So I lay this central thought of industry, rural and urban, upon your conscience and your intelligence and ask that you give it consideration as the very foundation of our civilization. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, the day before yesterday one of the superdetectives of this House decided to tackle one of the fairest proposals presented to this House, namely, H. R. 2827, in detectivelike fashion. He went around snooping and finally came here, and in dealing with this bill he hurled the cry of "communism", and then continued to repeat "communism." All he saw around this bill was whiskers. He saw a boogey man and he started to run from it, and he appealed to the House to follow his example. That is the only manner in which this bill has been attacked thus far.

There are two bills before this House which I believe attempt to deal comprehensively with the problem of social security. One is the bill known as "H. R. 7260", which fails to accomplish this purpose, and the other is H. R. 2827, which deals adequately and successfully with this problem. We all agree that unemployment insurance and old-age insurance are inevitable. They are bound to come in America. We must have unemployment insurance and we must have old-age insurance. So therefore the question which comes before this Nation at this time is the method by which social security is to be paid. Are you going to place the burden of caring for the poor on the shoulders of the poor, or are you going to place the burden of caring for the poor on the shoulders of the community as a whole, and especially on those who can well afford it? Under the plan in H. R. 7260, we establish a vicious antisocial system. We establish a system whereby the payment for the care of the unemployed and for the care of the aged is to be met by means of various pay-roll taxes.

I do not believe there is a single man in this House who accepts the statements in the bill to the effect that the tax, in the case of unemployment insurance, is to fall solely on the shoulders of the employer. Anybody who believes that still believes in Santa Claus. We all know that with labor's last line of defense crushed today, with 11,000,000 unemployed, with a charity wage scale being imposed throughout the Nation on all public-works projects, labor has no line of defense against any wage cuts. This 3-percent tax, which you say has been levied on the employer, inevitably must fall on the shoulders of the wage earners of America, because with 11,000,000 potential scabs, labor cannot defend itself against any wage cuts. You cannot escape from it. You are establishing once and for all, if you pass this bill, a vicious antisocial system of having the poor carry the burden of caring for the poor.

I believe that America is the richest Nation in the world. In this Nation, where we have more wealth than any other Nation, I think it is proper we should establish the system proposed under H. R. 2827, whereby in this greatest and wealthiest Nation in the world there should be no hunger, no starvation, and no want, and that the unemployed of this Nation, as well as the aged of this Nation, should be taken care of by the United States of America through taxation, levied on the large incomes of this Nation, putting the burden squarely where it equitably belongs, and not on the poor of the Nation as the Doughton bill intends to do.

The only argument which I believe seems to be more or less appealing which is advanced in favor of H. R. 7260 is that under section 201 (a) it sets up an old-age reserve account and that under section 910, subdivisions (a) and (b), there is set up an unemployment trust fund, and it is claimed that the unemployment trust fund, as well as the old-age fund, will build up a reserve which can be eventually used for the purpose of withdrawing tax-exempt securities. Now, let me quote, not from any Communist paper or from any Communist organization but from the Analyst, which was published by the New York Times on February 22, 1935. There it says, discussing the reserve funds established by this bill:

> (1) Financial reserves can be effective only in cases where contingencies can be calculated and determined by actuarial methods and where these contingencies arise in sufficient regularity to permit the arrangement of reserves in accordance therewith. (2) The incidence of depressions is irregular and unpredictable, and hence defies actuarial procedure. (3) Purchasing power cannot be stored up en masse under our money system, which is a system of debt, rather than metallic circulation. (4) The attempt to create unemployment reserve will intensify booms. (5) Unemployment reserves are incapable of mobilization when needed and any attempt to mobilize them will only result in further intensification of depression.

Further, in the last analysis, what do we seek to do with these reserves? On the one hand, we attempt to call in the so-called "tax-exempt bonds", but, on the other hand, we intend to do this by removing whatever little purchasing power the people of America possess. By 1970 we will have frozen from them the sum of $32,000,000,000, according to the table which exists on page 6 of the report on this bill.

So all we are doing here is cutting off our nose to spite our face. We cannot do away with the evil of tax-exempt securities by this method. Everybody recognizes that America's problem today is lack of purchasing power on the part of the American workers; they have practically no purchasing power left. When we attempt to remove a further portion of this purchasing power by pay-roll taxation we only accentuate the problem, we do not alleviate it.

Let me read from the report of the committee with reference to the present unemployed. The Doughton bill does nothing for those at present unemployed. The report states:

> It should be clearly understood that State unemployment-compensation plans made possible by this bill cannot take care of the present problem of unemployment. They will be designed rather to afford security against the large bulk of unemployment in the future.

So, right in this report we have the admission that under this bill nothing is being done for the present 11,000,000 unemployed. Oh, you may refer to the $4,000,000,000 work-relief bill, but, Mr. Chairman, after this $4,000,000,000 are spent in the manner in which it is going to be spent at an average wage of $50 a month, those unemployed at present will find themselves right back in the position they are today before the expenditure of the $4,000,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, permit me to say to the Members of the House that the bill (H. R. 2827) has received the endorsement of thousands of labor organizations and of hundreds of organizations affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, of social and welfare workers, and of educators throughout the country.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The main argument advanced against H. R. 2827 is that there is no difference between the system set up under that bill and the present system of relief whereby the unemployed workers of this Nation are paid a charity wage, or a charity dole, forcing them to adopt a standard of living based on charity. This argument is fantastic and silly. Under H. R. 2827, however, the unemployed workers of this Nation during their period of unemployment are paid the wage prevailing in their community at the time of their unemployment. In other words, the unemployed worker will receive the same wages he was receiving at the time he was employed.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. And there is no tax on pay rolls which, eventually, has to be paid by the workers themselves.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The gentleman is correct. The only tax levied under H. R. 2827 is a tax on the large incomes of this Nation, where taxation to support this kind of legislation should be placed.

The difference between this bill and relief is that with relief you reduce the American worker to a charity level and lessen his purchasing power, destroy his morale and self-respect, whereas under H. R. 2827 the American worker retains his purchasing power. During his period of unemployment, under the provisions of H. R. 2827, the American worker would retain not only his purchasing power but his standard of living and his self-respect; and, more important than all, he can raise his head high and say, "I am proud to be an American citizen." [Applause.]

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER].

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, this bill from the Ways and Means Committee, H. R. 7260, and known as the "social-security bill", is the greatest humanitarian measure ever presented to an American Congress. Its prime object is to help those who are not able to help themselves and to lend aid and comfort to the aged poor. It provides a pension for those over 65 years of age and in need. At this time there are in the Nation approximately seven and one-half million over 65 years of age and multiplied thousands are without means of support and dependent upon others. As years go by this number will be increased. The great number of needy at this time is due, to a great extent, to the financial depression through which we are passing. They have contributed their part to the building of the great institutions and industries of this country; they tilled the soil, educated their children, and endeavored to make the world better for having lived in it. Many of them invested their savings in stocks and bonds, the value of which has been wiped out. A great number of these people were able to perform work and make a living, but in these days of unemployment they are without a job. Many of them find that their children, upon whom they could depend for aid and assistance, are in a similar position. Society owes these citizens a reasonable subsistence, compatible with decency and health. Primarily this duty rests upon the respective States, but in this measure the Federal Government proposes grants in aid to the State to assist in paying an old-age pension. Under the provisions of title 1 the Federal Government pays up to $15 for each individual in need over the age of 65, which amount is to be matched by the States. It provides, however, if the States are desirous and able, they can pay as much more over $30 as desired. It provides for a uniform plan that the various States of the Union must adopt and that no State which fails to comply with the terms and provisions of this measure can participate. It will be contended by some that the amount the Government is to contribute is too small and that some of the States will not be able to raise the money to match Federal grants.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The gentleman is discussing section 1 of title I wherein it states that a reasonable subsistence compatible with decency and health shall be given to aged individuals. Does the gentleman understand that one must be a citizen of the United States of America before he can obtain the benefits under title I?

Mr. FULLER. No; if a State wants to, it can provide in its law even that aliens over 65 years of age can be taken care of.

Mr. LUCAS. In other words, that is a matter left to the discretion of the States.

Mr. FULLER. It is left to the State legislature; yes.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. As a general rule, however, all the States require that those who receive relief benefits from the State be not only citizens of the State but in most cases citizens of the United States as well.

Mr. FULLER. That is true.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Must they actually be in need before they can receive these benefits?

Mr. FULLER. Certainly; they must be in need. I cannot contemplate a subdivision of Government paying a pension to anybody in the United States who is not really in need. [Applause.] This Government owes nobody a living, but everybody owes loyalty and fidelity to this Government; and it is only as a social-welfare feature to take care of those who cannot take care of themselves that we make the contribution; it is only to take care of those who are in need of assistance.

Mr. LUCAS. Under title I, section 2, article IV, it is stated:

> Provide for granting to any individual, whose claim for old-age assistance is denied, an opportunity for a fair hearing before such State agency.

In the event that the State decided to enlarge the powers granted under this particular section and give the right of the individual who is denied assistance in the first instance an appeal to the local courts, would that, in the opinion of the distinguished member of the Ways and Means Committee, in any way contravene this section about which we are now talking?

Mr. FULLER. I think not. We made a special arrangement for that by reason of several inquiries being made. Anyone should have recourse when his claim is denied. I think that answers the question which the gentleman asked me.

Mr. Chairman, I would prefer not to be interrupted for a while unless there is some particular question that a Member is particularly interested in.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. FULLER. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. When a board is set up by any State to review on appeal the case of any aggrieved person, will the Board here in Washington undertake to review the findings of that board?

Mr. FULLER. They have no authority to do that. That is left solely and entirely to the States, if the States otherwise comply with the uniform plan set out here, which the States must comply with.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. That would give leeway for the several States and the Nation to set up different yardsticks or different lines of demarcation to determine the respective needs of their citizens?

Mr. FULLER. They have that right under this bill, but they must adopt a plan as set forth in this bill. The age must be 65, and there are certain residence requirements and a few other conditions. Then they have latitude for themselves. They may up to 1940 make the age limit 70 years instead of 65 years if they so desire.

It should be borne in mind the annual amount to be contributed by the Federal Government will, in a few years, be very materially increased. In my opinion, in less than 10 years it will require an annual appropriation of over $300,000,000.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Is the gentleman not unduly conservative in estimating the amount that the Federal Government will be required to contribute?

Mr. FULLER. I think not. I think it is more liberal and a larger figure than almost any other Member, especially on the Democratic side of the Ways and Means Committee, would even agree to.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman accept the records of the States now paying an old-age pension as a basis for that calculation?

Mr. FULLER. Yes; and in doing so this figure would be 5 or 10 times greater.

Mr. COX. Does not the gentleman think he incurs the risk of error in proceeding upon that basis, having in mind, of course, that, with the Federal Government entering the field and obligating itself to pay, the demands will increase and the tendency of the States will be to liberalize their laws and the administration of the laws in order that a larger Federal grant may be obtained? Does the gentleman not appreciate the fact that there is the feeling that it is justifiable to make any sort of a demand upon the Federal Government and that the urge is to get as much from this source as possible?

Mr. FULLER. May I say to the gentleman, briefly, that I think my figures are very liberal. I am convinced that they will cover the situation, and there will not be required any more than the amount I specified. Besides the States will have to match 50-50, and they will not be overanxious to exceed equal matching. Of course, there are Members here who will come to Congress in the future desirous of requiring the Federal Government to pay more.

It is not claimed that this is a perfect bill; all major legislation is the result of compromise. Last June, in a message to the Nation, the President advocated this measure, and subsequently created the Committee on Economic Security, composed of members of the Cabinet and other prominent citizens; after extensive study, covering a period of 6 months, a report was submitted recommending substantially the provisions of this bill. At this session of Congress the President in a forceful message plead for the enactment of this social-security measure. It is generally known that its enactment is more desired by our great President than any pending measure.

For approximately 3 months the Ways and Means Committee has daily considered this measure. The committee has had submitted to it various other old-age-pensions plans, the most prominent of which was the Townsend plan, upon which measure hearings were had. The original Townsend plan, known as the "McGroarty bill", has for its object and purpose the granting of a pension of $200 per month for all those over 60 years of age, conditioned all the money must be spent every month, and that on the first day of every month the Government was to place to the credit of every pensioner, in a local bank, the sum of $200. The question of need was never considered, age being the only condition. Under this measure Rockefeller, Morgan, Mellon, Ford, and other millionaires of this Nation could, with their wives, draw $200 each per month. A man owning the biggest department store or building in a city, with an income of $500 or more per month, could draw the pension. The wealthiest farmer in a community, with plenty of stock, a bank account, and living in ease and comfort, would be a recipient, as well as his wife, of $200 per month. No restrictions were made as to how the money should be spent, and Dr. Townsend, who appeared before our committee, stated he was not interested in how they spent the money nor as to whether or not they spent it for liquor, in roadhouses for gambling or immoral purposes.

Children and other relatives could move in and live with their parents and relatives on the pension rolls. All that was required was the 60 years' age limit and the condition that the pensioner should discontinue and refrain from all gainful pursuits. The measure provided that this pension should be paid by levying a tax of 2 percent upon all transactions. Such a measure would kill ambition, stifle and retard thrift, and mean the early doom of our Nation. It is inconceivable that a nation would be required to collect money by taxes to pay a man and wife $400 per month who in their previous years had never made over $50 or $100 per month from their combined labors and at the same time had lived in ease, comfort, and happiness. The tax sought to be levied would not start to pay one-fourth of the $200 pension. Dr. Doane, an economist, presented as a witness by Dr. Townsend, testified that the national income for this Nation for 1929, the most prosperous year of our history, was $81,000,000,000 and for the year 1933 approximately $45,000,000,000, yet in 1933 there was no profit in the national income. The 2-percent sales tax would produce approximately $1,000,000,000 per year; but he states if the tax were placed upon every conceivable transaction there was a possibility of a maximum collection of $4,000,000,000 per year. Even this collection of taxes, which was more than the Federal Government collected last year for all purposes, would not be a sufficient amount to pay over $33 per month. There are today 10,000,000 people in the United States over 60 years of age, which would mean a payment of a pension of $33 per month per person. His expert admitted that the Federal Government could not stand the financial strain and burden sought under the Townsend plan.

A Mr. Glen J. Hudson, of California, actuary for Dr. Townsend, testified if he were a member of the Ways and Means Committee he would not vote approval of the plan.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield to my distinguished chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman recalls that Dr. Townsend appeared, I believe, more than once before our committee and urged very strongly the adoption by the committee of his original bill. He assured the committee that it was sound, feasible, and workable, and had been worked out by experts and specialists. In view of that testimony of Dr. Townsend and the statement just made by the gentleman addressing the committee, in his opinion is a man who would present a scheme so revolutionary, so impossible, and so dangerous as this, if he does change his mind and presents a revised scheme, capable of advising the Congress of the United States with respect to a great matter like this?

Mr. FULLER. I would hesitate to say. Dr. Townsend apparently is a fine old gentleman, but I doubt his judgment. I know it is not good statesmanship and that nobody except those who are in distress and who want to get something for nothing are going to seriously consider the Townsend plan.

Mr. DISNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. DISNEY. The gentleman referred to the national gross income as being $45,000,000,000. As I remember the figures before the Ways and Means Committee, there were about ten and one-half million people over 60 years of age in the United States. At that rate it would take about $24,000,000,000 a year to pay the Townsend old-age pension. Is the gentleman going to discuss those figures?

Mr. FULLER. Yes; I have those figures here. Then, too, the Federal revenue for 1933 was less than four billion and the combined State and Federal revenues for 1933 was less than eight and one-half billions.

Mr. DISNEY. Is the gentleman referring to the total national revenue and total State revenue?

Mr. FULLER. Yes. It would cost $24,000,000,000 annually to pay the pension under the Townsend plan, more than half our national income for 1934. It would mean that our financial structure would be bankrupt, and on account of the tax upon transactions being multiplied and pyramided, which would be passed on to the consumer, the price of the necessities of life would be unbearable.

Realizing the unreasonableness of such a plan, Congressman McGROARTY has introduced another Townsend plan measure which bears number H. R. 7154, under date of April 1. This measure is substantially the same as the original bill with the exception that no one can draw a pension who has a net income in excess of $2,400 per year. The measure provides that the pensioner shall receive, monthly, so much as the tax will raise, not to exceed $200 per month. The question of need is not mentioned in this bill. It is now contended by its supporters that this measure will pay $50 per month for those over 60 years of age. Yet the club members and those who are sending propaganda to Members of Congress are still under the impression that the Townsend plan still provides $200 a month pension.

To me it is ridiculous to even contemplate paying pensions to parties who have an income of as much as $600 per year, yet in this bill the $200 a month theory is carried out and one would be permitted to draw a pension up to $200 per month if the tax collections were sufficient. One could own a valuable home and have children able and willing to care for him and be eligible for a Townsend pension. I have no criticism for Dr. Townsend; at heart I feel he is desirous of aiding the aged poor.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. A man might be worth a million dollars and have no income, yet be eligible for a pension under the Townsend plan?

Mr. FULLER. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. In connection with the original Townsend plan or the original McGroarty bill, may I ask the gentleman if it is not true that the gentleman from California [Mr. McGROARTY], the author of the bill, never did appear before the committee in support of the bill while it was under consideration there?

Mr. FULLER. I know he did not appear, although he had every opportunity to appear and we would have been pleased to have heard him.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. And the committee set apart a certain day for all Members of the House to appear before the committee who wanted to appear?

Mr. FULLER. Yes; and Dr. Townsend, who also appeared at his own request, asked us please not to cross-examine him and he was not cross-examined on his bill when he was a witness before the committee.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. But the gentleman from California, the author of the bill, never did appear before the committee in support of his own bill.

Mr. FULLER. No; he never did. A great percentage of his followers are in distress, many of them upon the relief rolls, being maintained at Government expense, and I am sure they have been misled as to the feasibility of such a plan. However, they have at least done a good work in creating a general public sentiment for an old-age pension.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, the gentleman made the observation awhile ago that the national income was between $45,000,000,000 and forty-nine or fifty billion dollars, not a penny of which was profit, and yet the Townsend plan would take $24,000,000,000 of that income, which would tend to exhaust capital investment.

Mr. FULLER. There is no question about that. When the truth is known and the imported organizers are gone there will be headaches and grief.

The Townsend old-age-pension plan, through its organizers, is doing an injustice to those in distress; they are holding out false hopes with a realization that the plan is not feasible and could not possibly be carried out. No such propaganda has ever equalled that being sent to Members of Congress for this plan. Amongst 200 postal cards which I received this morning there appeared the name of a college graduate, who holds an important position with a good salary as manager of a subsoil erosion project in my district. The card read as follows:

> We are not in favor of the President's plan for social security. We want the Townsend old-age-pension plan, and we want it enacted into law this session of Congress.
> We instruct you to work and vote for the Townsend plan. (Signed) A Voter.

This is the propaganda we are getting by the freight load every day during the pendency of this bill.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman will yield for one question, there is another plan concerning which Members of Congress have been importuned for a year or more. It is the plan that is embodied in the Rogers bill, which is the measure sponsored by a Dr. Pope. Can the gentleman inform the Committee whether either Dr. Pope or Mr. ROGERS ever appeared before his committee in explanation or in advocacy of that measure?

Mr. FULLER. No; we never heard them. They sought no hearing.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Are not the methods used by the Townsend propagandists the same as those used by the utility propagandists against the Rayburn bill?

Mr. FULLER. I do not know whether that is true or not.

Mr. O'MALLEY. It is organized propaganda, consisting of cards and form letters?

Mr. FULLER. Yes; it is along the same line.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. Yes; but I shall have to quit yielding because my time is limited.

Mr. DISNEY. Referring to those postcards, did the gentleman receive any postcards that said that Dr. Townsend was ordained of God to bring forth this plan?

Mr. FULLER. I have not received any cards like that, but I have received that kind of letters.

Mr. DISNEY. Other Members have received cards using that language. Has the gentleman given any thought to the idea that if millions of people were drawing $200 a month to what range would all other salaries or incomes have to go to compare with $200 a month?

Mr. FULLER. I cannot imagine what would become of the value of our dollar or the stabilization of our Government. It is really not serious enough to consider, because I anticipate that, outside of home consumption and outside of being desirous of trying to help these poor people, there are very few people on the floor of this House who, deep in their hearts, have any idea that there is any real merit in the Townsend plan.

Mr. DISNEY. Following my previous question, the present dollar would be worthless if we had the type of system that I suggested a moment ago.

Mr. FULLER. It would; and, as I said, our Nation would be bankrupt, and I honestly believe there is no question about it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Speaking of "plans", I have heard rumors of still another plan which, it is reported, is being formulated by the Hollywood humorist, Will Rogers. The last I heard of it he said that he was having great difficulty and was beginning to be afraid that he was not quite crazy enough to get up a plan. Does the gentleman know anything about his progress?

Mr. FULLER. No; I have not studied that plan.

In this propaganda we are threatened that if we do not vote for the Townsend plan we are not going to be returned to Congress, and yesterday I was surprised and amazed that one of our lovable characters and colleagues told us he was not attempting to come back next year, but he hoped to come back here and see the vacant seats of men who are at least trying to be statesmen and represent this Government who will be left at home because they voted like statesmen and against giving away a dole of $200 a month to people who are not entitled to it.

Mr. COX. Is the gentleman prepared to answer the question I propounded a moment ago? Should the gentleman be returned as a Member of Congress if he votes for the Townsend plan?

Mr. FULLER. Well, I do not want to answer that.

Mr. COX. Speaking simply for himself?

Mr. FULLER. I would rather retire to the shades of a quiet and peaceful life and never be recognized for political honor than to vote for such a measure, because I believe my people who sent me here would have absolutely no respect for my judgment or statesmanship.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. For just one question; yes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. One of the principal reasons for the gentleman's opposition to the Townsend plan is its sales-tax feature. Will the gentleman distinguish the sales tax from the pay-roll tax?

Mr. COX. May I interject that the gentleman's main objection to the Townsend plan is that, in the judgment of the gentleman from Arkansas, it is crazy?

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I want to make my own speech, but I will yield to the gentleman, and then I must continue with my own remarks.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. May I say to the gentleman from Arkansas that the Members of Congress have received a tremendous amount of mail from the utility officials, and I have been informed, as other Members have been informed, that they say if the Members support the Rayburn bill they will not be returned to Congress.

Mr. FULLER. There may be something in that. I do not know. I imagine that the gentleman from Pennsylvania will vote his own convictions regardless of anything else. God knows that I am sincere and anxious to vote for any reasonable old-age pension to take care of anybody to the amount that the Government can afford to pay. I am willing to increase the income tax and the inheritance tax, and I am willing to curtail the salaries of those in public office.

We are threatened in much of this propaganda if we do not vote for this plan we will be defeated in the next election. God knows I am sincere and anxious to vote for a reasonable old-age pension to take care of the needy, in such an amount as the Government can afford to pay. I am willing to increase inheritance and income taxes for this purpose.

Under the original plan submitted by the President's Committee on Economic Security, the personnel in the States was controlled by the Federal Government, and the provisions of this bill were to be administered by the Secretary of Labor and the Federal Emergency Relief Administrator. The bill has been materially changed, granting to the States the right to administer the various provisions and establishes a social-security board to generally administer the act.

Title II and its companion title, no. VIII, provide for Federal old-age benefits and levies a tax upon the pay rolls, to be paid equally by employer and employee on salaries or wages up to $3,000 per year. This tax gradually increases, and at the end of 12 years the employer and employee will each be required to pay 3 percent on the pay roll. This money is paid into the Federal Treasury in an old-age reserve fund, and it is contemplated that in 45 years the reserve will amount to approximately $50,000,000,000. The Secretary of the Treasury is made a trustee for the investing of these funds in Government interest-bearing securities. It is contemplated as this money is so invested it will wipe out tax-exempt Government bonds and that eventually all of the public debt will be included in this trust fund. The real object and purpose of this title is to buy old-age annuities to be paid monthly after the laborer has reached the age of 65. It contemplates that the money so paid, together with the interest accumulated, will afford sufficient monthly annuity to keep the laborer off the old-age pension rolls in the distant future. In the event of death one's estate recovers the money paid in by the laborer, plus accumulated interest.

Titles III and IX provide for unemployment compensation to be administered by the State. It provides for a 3-percent tax to be paid by the employer upon annual pay rolls. If a State does not participate, it receives no benefit from this tax. In the event a State does participate in the plan, then the employer receives a credit for 90 percent of the tax which he has paid to the State for this purpose. I have opposed the provisions placing a tax upon pay rolls for unemployment insurance and old-age benefit annuities. All business needs relief, the restoration of confidence, and less Federal regulation. I fear the burden is too great at this time for business to carry this additional load. [Applause.]

The other provisions of the bill provide and deal solely and entirely with social-welfare problems in conjunction with the States. The first of these is aid to maternity and infant welfare, particularly in rural areas and in areas suffering from the severe economic depression. It looks after the needy and distressed expectant mother, the welfare of the infant; dependent, neglected, delinquent, and crippled children. Aid is given, and a kind and helping hand is extended to help over the rough and rugged roads of life the 300,000 dependent and neglected children, 200,000 children who annually come as delinquents before the courts, and a great number of the 70,000 illegitimate children born each year. The children of the present are the citizens and rulers of the future, and the tendency of the present minds and conditions promises fundamental changes in the very structures of our Nation. To continue to be a great nation we must look after our children and those who cannot help themselves. [Applause.]

Nearly 10 percent of all families who are on relief are without a potential breadwinner other than a mother, whose time might best be devoted to the care of her young children. It is estimated that there are over 350,000 families on relief, the head of which is a widowed, separated, or divorced mother, and whose other members are children under 16. There are approximately 400,000 physically handicapped children in this country, and in many cases the parents are not able to give them hospitalization, medical, and surgical attention. This bill carries a large appropriation to be augmented by the States for these mothers and children in need.

The bill authorizes a substantial appropriation for the vocational rehabilitation of crippled children, thus thousands upon thousands of these unfortunate crippled children will not only be cured but taught a vocation and given remunerative employment.

This measure carries the greatest welfare features and relief for suffering and distressed humanity that has ever been presented to a legislative body; it carries out the teachings of the lowly Nazarene, and has only been made possible by a fearless, big-hearted, inspired leader whose heart goes out to the "forgotten man." Every thought, every heartbeat, and every action of our great President has been in the interest of the weak and oppressed. [Applause.] No man can be a good American citizen who seeks to live unto himself or who seeks to profit and accumulate the wealth of the country with no regard to the duty he owes to his unfortunate neighbor. We have reached the crossroads, where it has become necessary for us to realize that no nation can continue to prosper, "where wealth accumulates and men decay." [Applause.]

This cloak of charity spreads out over every social-welfare activity and in the future years we will hear the praises and the God bless you's from those who have been the recipients of this relief. I realize there are many States, because of financial condition, will not be able at this time to meet all the requirements of this measure. It is to be hoped, however, that revenue will be found in order for the State to follow the example set by the Federal Government. In my opinion it is only a question of a short time until each State will take advantage of the liberal provisions of this measure. If my State cannot enjoy all the benefits of this measure, God forbid I should begrudge a sister State.

It is easy to foresee the great good and happiness this welfare measure will bring to the aged, the helpless mother, the dependent, neglected, and crippled children. In visualizing I can see the expectant mother, weak from worry, overwork, and undernourishment, back in the rural district in a little cabin on the mountain side, where the unexpected stranger is met by the friendly bark of the farm dog and where hospitality reigns supreme, joyously explaining to her ragged and tired husband at supper time how the welfare workers have promised relief before and during childbirth.

I can see the dependent and neglected boy who never knew the love and guidance of father and mother as he grows to manhood extolling the grandeur of his country and the loyalty due the Stars and Stripes.

I see the crippled boy, sad and unable to play with his brothers and the neighbor boys as he recovers from medical and surgical treatment, and scales, round by round, the steep ladder of success.

I can see the careworn, dejected widow shout with joy upon returning from the neighbor's washtub after having received assurance of financial aid for her children. I see her with the youngest child upon her knee and the others clustered by her, kissing the tears of joy from her pale cheek as she explains they can now obtain clothes and books, go to Sunday school, and attend the public school; and as they prepare to retire I can hear her offering thanks to Him from whom all blessings flow.

I see the old gray-headed father and mother, bowed by the weight of many years of honest toil, dance with joy and appreciation upon receipt of their first pension check which saves them from the poorhouse.

Certainly, a nation which sends its messengers to the rural and most isolated parts to render aid to those in distress and embarks upon such a welfare work, cannot help but live and prosper. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. DOCKWEILER].

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a very important announcement. Within the hour the American Clipper, owned and operated by the Pan-American Airways, landed at the Hawaiian Islands. [Applause.] In approximately 17 hours and 37 minutes she spanned the air from Alameda, across the bay from San Francisco, to land in the harbor of Honolulu at 1:27 p. m., eastern standard time. The day of wonders has not ceased. America should be proud that the indominable pioneering spirit still exists. I compare this feat of the modern clipper ship with the feats of the early days when the Americans sailed the Seven Seas in their clipper ships. It is comparable, my friends, with the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus. [Applause.]

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN].

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Chairman, it is difficult for me to understand the frame of mind of Members who sit in this House and vote for huge sums of money for adventures into foreign lands. On Armistice Day, November 11, 1928, President Coolidge said that when the last veteran and last dependent of a veteran of the World War has disappeared over the horizon, we will have expended on the World War more than $100,000,000,000. There was no quibbling about that—"saving the world for democracy"; but when anyone comes in here to speak for the workers of America—and that includes men who work at the desk as well as men who walk behind the plow or work at a lathe in a shop—then we begin to talk about whether we can afford it or not, and where we are going to get the money.

REHABILITATION

It is not just the past war, but it is the rehabilitation that came after the war. I opposed the loan of $10,000,000,000 to the kings of Europe on this floor. I sat in a seat here with some gentlemen who are here today, when lords and dukes and earls and counts, bespangled and bemedaled—Lord Balfour and the Japanese and all the rest. I remember when Members rose in their seats to do them honor and shook their hands and applauded them. I refused to rise to honor foreign royalty on this floor; they came here to talk us out of our money and for no other purpose. To honor them was supposed to be good Americanism, but when anybody talks for unemployment insurance for the 15,000,000 Americans now unemployed and the aged, they are denounced as radicals. Call us radicals if you will; we will keep on fighting for the aged and unemployed. We will not give up the ship. We will fight on.

The administration bill, if I am correctly informed, does not pay a red cent to a single man unemployed at the present time, and if I am mistaken I want to be corrected, and I hear no correction. Not a nickel for those who are now unemployed. How are we Congressmen going back home to face our constituents, and what will we say to them when this bill is passed and signed and becomes a part of the statute books, when these 15,000,000 unemployed ask, "Where do we come in?" and we must reply, "You don't come in. You 15,000,000 unemployed, you are left out in the cold."

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. The gentleman of course understands that this bill is not intended to take care of those now unemployed. That is what we passed the $4,880,000,000 bill for. This bill seeks to set up a system in this country to take care of unemployment in the future, and I think the gentleman will agree with me in the statement contained in the report accompanying this bill if unemployment insurance had been enacted into law in this country about 1922, by the time the depression hit us in 1929 we would have had about two and a half billion dollars on hand then for unemployment insurance, and that certainly would have greatly assisted in sustaining the purchasing power and improving business conditions and the general welfare of the country, as well as caring for those entitled to consideration.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I wish to say to the gentleman that when we, back in 1922 and many years before that, advocated just that—we were denominated radicals, and we were told we should not do that sort of thing.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. The gentleman knows that neither his party nor my party were in control during that time.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Possibly so. History would read different today had a great national labor party been in power in 1922.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. What is going to happen to these unemployed after the $4,000,000,000 has been spent at an average wage of $50 a month, which will do nobody any good?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I thank the gentleman for his statement. I wish to say that while I voted for the $3,000,000,000 in the last Congress and the $4,880,000,000 in this Congress, because of the relief measures contained therein, I wish to remind the Members on this floor that the reemployment under the $3,000,000,000 was very disappointing. I see gentlemen nodding their heads. They know it was disappointing. I hope I am wrong, but I am afraid that employment under the $5,000,000,000 bill is going to be disappointing and that it will have no appreciable effect upon the 15,000,000 now unemployed.

PLENTY OF MONEY FOR THE NEXT WAR

With reference to this frame of mind which seems to exist among distinguished gentlemen here who frame legislation for this country, permit me to say we have plenty of money for the next war. I ask, where is it going to be fought? I suppose in Europe, Asia, and Africa. We appropriate a billion dollars for that; but if someone comes here and presents a bill, such as I have, providing for $10 minimum for the unemployed and $3 for each dependent, they are greatly horrified, but they have a billion dollars for the next war.

A BILLION DOLLARS FOR THE NEXT WAR

I say I would not spill one drop of the blood of an American soldier comrade of mine for any wealth invested by international bankers across the ocean in Europe, Asia, or Africa. Let those millionaires and billionaires who invest their money abroad go and protect their own money. [Applause.]

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman please tell me where we are going to get that money for the next war?

Mr. LUNDEEN. The gentleman asks where we are going to get the money for the next war.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. The gentleman asked the question and I would also like to know that. We do not seem to have enough money to take care of the aged and unemployed. I would like to know where we are going to get the money for the next war.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I will say that we always find sources of revenue when it comes to protect international bankers and wealth invested beyond the seas. That is not good Americanism. That is good Europeanism, and I want none of it. I do not believe in that kind of Americanism. I believe in the Americanism that takes care of the workers of America and the people in the United States, the development of projects and resources within the boundaries of this country. That is good enough for me. [Applause.]

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. As far as getting money for the next war is concerned, until a State adopts a plan of unemployment insurance, every penny which is collected by the pay-roll tax in that State goes into the general Treasury of the United States, and such funds so collected may even be used to build battleships, and yet this is called an unemployment-insurance bill.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I thank the gentleman again for his statement. In the last $3,000,000,000 bill the administration reached in and took $238,000,000, if I am correctly informed, and laid it down in battleships, to fight whom? What nation is there to invade this great, powerful country? Who is going to invade us? It is a war against someone else on other continents. I am going to speak for a moment before it is too late. I protested once before on April 6, 1917, and I want to protest again today, before it is too late. Some day you will find it is too late.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. During the last 4 or 5 years we have had testimony on old-age pensions, unemployment insurance, the 30-hour week, labor-disputes bill, and so on. In all those hearings we held it became very clear to our committee, did it not, that there could be no prosperity in the Nation without the farmer being prosperous and the industrial worker being prosperous at the same time? We found that out, did we not?

Mr. LUNDEEN. That is true. The able and distinguished Chairman of the Labor Committee is always right.

Mr. CONNERY. And the Lundeen bill, which I am offering tomorrow as an amendment to this other bill, is the only bill which takes care of the farmer and the industrial worker in the United States, is it not?

Mr. LUNDEEN. That is true. We take care of them, and we do it now—not in the dim, distant future.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The moment that we provide $10 a week and $3 per dependent, that is something to horrify some gentlemen on this floor. I do not say all of you, but some folks here seem to be very much disturbed about these figures. In Saturady's RECORD I presented for the attention of the Members of this House the sources of revenue and the cost of this bill and based upon 10,000,000 unemployed the net cost is $4,060,000,000, as given by Prof. Joseph M. Gilman, economist of the College of the City of New York; and based upon 14,021,000 unemployed, the net cost is $5,800,000,000. That is not a large sum compared with the huge sums we are putting into armaments and into foreign adventures. I say it is time to turn back to Washington and Jefferson and Jackson and Lincoln and take care of these people in these United States who built this country and made America what it is today. [Applause.]

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Will the gentleman give us the figures upon which that estimated amount was based, or put them in the RECORD?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I will say to the able gentleman from Washington that those figures are already in the RECORD as of Saturday, April 13. [Applause.]

CONSTITUTIONALITY

Concerning the constitutionality of the Wagner-Lewis-Doughton social-insurance proposals—H. R. 4120 and H. R. 7260—I am surprised that able lawyers on this floor have not taken up that question more in detail.

One of my colleagues here stated to me the other day that someone maintained to him that H. R. 7260 is "absolutely probably constitutional", and that well illustrates the state of mind of Members on the constitutionality of the pay-roll tax and other features of the administration bill dealing with taxation, rights of States, and the rights of individuals and employers.

For that reason I have requested permission to insert a statement on the constitutionality of H. R. 2827 and the administration bill as given to the House Committee on Labor, and found on pages 245 to 270 of the Labor Committee hearings, February 4 to 15, 1935, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, on unemployment, old-age, and social insurance. This statement is made by Leo J. Linder, able counsel of the New York Bar.

STATEMENT OF LEO J. LINDER

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am here to speak to you on the constitutionality of the Lundeen bill. Since I come here before you as an expert, I presume I should, within the limitations of modesty, state my qualifications very briefly.

Mr. DUNN. Yes; we want them.

Mr. LINDER. I shall state briefly that I am a member of the bar of the State of New York, a member of the bar of the United States Supreme Court, that I have practiced, tried cases, and argued appeals before the appellate courts of very many States besides the State of New York, and that I have briefed and argued questions of constitutional law before the highest court of our land, the United States Supreme Court. About 2 months ago the International Juridical Association, an association of lawyers of which I am a member, requested me to make a study of the constitutionality or the constitutional questions involved in the Lundeen bill, H. R. 7598.

Mr. DUNN. That is the old bill.

Mr. LINDER. Yes. The request was also made that if I came to the conclusion that the bill was constitutional, I should then draw a brief establishing the constitutionality of the bill. I made a very careful study of the decisions, the texts, and all of the other authorities to which lawyers resort in determining constitutional questions. At the termination of my study I became thoroughly and completely convinced that the bill was unquestionably constitutional.

Of course, my research with respect to H. R. 7598 is equally and perhaps more applicable to H. R. 2827, because H. R. 2827 is without question an improvement on the other bill, because it simplifies many of the constitutional questions there involved.

The statement that I am going to read you very briefly states the affirmative argument supporting the constitutionality of the bill, and then, after stating that affirmative argument, deals with various objections that might possibly be raised to the constitutionality of the bill, such as the question as to whether the bill involves an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power, the question as to whether it is unconstitutional by reason of the indefiniteness of the appropriation contained in it, the question as to whether the bill involves any violation of due process, and, finally, the question as to whether the bill involves the violation of State rights.

The affirmative argument establishing the constitutionality of this bill is really very simple. This bill provides for the appropriation of Federal moneys out of the Treasury of the United States for the payment of compensation to the unemployed, the sick, the disabled, and the aged. It is thus simply an exercise of the appropriating power; that is, the power of Congress to spend money. The bill does, indeed, do more than provide for appropriations; it provides for the setting up of administrative machinery. But the appropriating power of Congress necessarily carries with it the incidental power to provide administrative machinery for disbursing the moneys appropriated and for insuring their proper application to the purposes sought to be achieved by Congress.[1]

What limitations are there on the power of Congress to appropriate Federal moneys? The Federal Government is a government of enumerated powers, that is, powers enumerated by the Constitution. Some constitutional lawyers have, therefore, argued that Congress may only expend moneys for the execution of the specifically enumerated powers. Upon some such argument an appropriation for social insurance would be unconstitutional, since the Constitution does not enumerate any power to provide social insurance for the people of the United States. The argument is, however, wholly unsound, for it ignores the fact that one of the enumerated powers set forth in the Constitution is the power to "lay and collect taxes, pay debts, and provide for the common defense and the general welfare of the United States."[2] To limit this power to spend moneys for the general welfare, to the power to spend moneys for the execution of the other specially enumerated powers, is to rob the general welfare clause of its meaning and thus to violate an elementary principle of constitutional construction.[3] Such distinguished constitutional authorities as Washington,[4] Madison,[5] Monroe,[6] Hamilton,[7] Calhoun,[8] and Justice Story,[9] have definitely repudiated the conception of an appropriating power limited by the other powers. Our highest authority, the United States Supreme Court, has in the famous Sugar Bounty case [10]—I will not here take the time to read the citations, all of which are set forth in the footnotes to the brief—definitely upheld appropriations by the Government in payment of purely moral obligations, entirely beyond the scope of the other specifically enumerated powers and has, indeed, held that an appropriation even out of "considerations of pure charity" [11]—the words "considerations of pure charity" are a quotation from a United States Supreme Court opinion—cannot be reviewed by the judicial branch of the Government. Congress itself has uniformly and consistently exercised its appropriating power for any purpose which it deems for the general welfare and irrespective of whether the purpose comes within the specifically enumerated powers or not.

Consider the appropriations which Congress has made. Congress has spent millions—I should say billions—for the purchase of Louisiana from France, of Alaska from Russia, of Florida from Spain; Congress has made outright gifts of millions of dollars to the individual States; [12] it has appropriated billions of dollars for agriculture; [13] and for internal improvements; [14] it has appropriated the moneys of the Nation to aid destitute foreigners suffering severe calamities, as in the case of the Santa Domingoes in 1794;[15] and the citizens of Venezuela, who suffered an earthquake in 1812; [16] it has, in the last 2 years, appropriated billions of dollars for emergency relief to "needy and distressed people"; [17] it has appropriated billions for the setting up of a Reconstruction Finance Corporation; [18] Home Owners' Loan Corporation; [19] and the Federal Housing Corporation [20]—not to mention all the other characters of the "alphabet soup."

None of the enumerated powers would justify these expenditures. You can look in vain through the Constitution for any specific enumeration of any power to do any of the things which I have just enumerated. Yet surely no one would presume to say that Congress exceeded its power in making the Louisiana Purchase, or in setting up the Geological Survey, which has increased the natural resources of the Nation, or that Congress should never have contributed to the country's educational needs.

It is thus entirely clear when you consider it that, wholly without regard to the enumerated powers, Congress may use Federal moneys for any purpose whatsoever which it deems will accomplish the general welfare. Surely it could not be said that a bill which will provide a system of unemployment and social insurance for millions of unemployed, sick, disabled, and aged is less for the general welfare than any of the bills which have just been mentioned. When Congress passes this bill, it will thereby declare that, in its judgment, this bill is for the general welfare, and no court has the power to substitute its judgment on that question for that of Congress.

The fact is that the Supreme Court of the United States has itself stated that it has never in its entire existence attempted to set any limitations to the power of Congress to appropriate moneys.[21] On the contrary, the Supreme Court has explicitly declared that the exercise of the appropriating power is not at all a subject for judicial consideration.[22] The Supreme Court has appreciated that if individual taxpayers were permitted to harass and obstruct the Federal Government with questions as to the propriety of national expenditures, that this would render wholly unworkable the whole machinery of the Federal Government. There is a historic case in which a taxpayer tried to stop the Secretary of the Treasury from paying out moneys for the construction of the Panama Canal.[23] Certainly there you have as good an example of an expenditure and an appropriation beyond the enumerated powers of Congress as is possible to find, and solely justified by the general-welfare clause. The United States Supreme Court declared that the taxpayer could not interfere. The Court pointed out that the taxpayer could not show—and this is the technical reason—any "direct injury", since he could not point to any property belonging to him which was directly affected by the way the Federal Government spent its money. After all, the money in the United States Treasury appropriated might very well be interest on the foreign debts or the proceeds of the sale of governmental property, and no taxpayer could point to any specific tax or any specific moneys paid by him which was used for the appropriation in question.

As I read this, it comes to my mind that only recently the United States Government made a neat little profit of over $2,000,000,000 on the devaluation of the dollar. That profit constituted part of the funds of the United States. So long as this bill contains simply a general appropriation—and that is all it does contain, because the language of the bill as I have it here is that there is appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States money sufficient to enable the consumption of and the effectuation of this bill—but where you have an act of Congress which appropriates moneys generally out of the Treasury of the United States without any reference to any earmarked moneys, no taxpayer can point to any specific moneys of which he has been deprived by virtue of any tax laid upon him. And since no taxpayer can point to any such specific moneys, he cannot technically, as the United States Supreme Court said, show any direct injury.

The United States Supreme Court, however, went much further than this technical argument with respect to the matter of direct injury. The Court declared explicitly that the question of the purpose for which Congress may use moneys is a legislative question, not a judicial one.

I would like to read you a few quotations from treatises on constitutional law, which definitely establish, with the aid of the authorities there cited, this proposition. Pomeroy, in his monumental text on constitutional law, declares:

"What expenditures will promote the common defense or the general welfare, Congress may alone decide, and its decision is final."

Hare, in his early text on American constitutional law, puts the matter as follows:

"The question of for what purpose Congress may use its powers of taxation (and thus ultimately for appropriation) is a legislative question, not a judicial question."

Therefore I think it is perfectly clear that this bill is not only constitutional as a constitutional exercise of the appropriating power, the power to spend moneys for the general welfare, but there is no legal way by which the propriety of the exercise of this power can be questioned by anybody.

That is the affirmative argument in support of the constitutionality of the bill. It seems to me to be entirely irrefutable.

Mr. DUNN. The word "welfare" there makes it constitutional, does it not?

Mr. LINDER. The words "general welfare" and the fact that Congress has the power to appropriate moneys for anything which Congress regards as for the general welfare. That is right.

Mr. DUNN. Thank you. I wanted to have that statement substantiated.

Mr. LINDER. I proceed now to the negative part of this argument; that is, the answer to objections which have been or can be raised.

The most serious objection which can be raised, it seems to me, is the question with respect to whether this bill involves an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power. While the bill does, indeed, invest the Secretary of Labor with large discretion, this does not render the bill unconstitutional. The United States Supreme Court has, again and again, sustained delegations of power to the President, Cabinet officers, and Commission. The Court has recognized that Congress might very well find it impossible to do more than to "lay down an intelligible principle to which the person or body administering the bill is directed to conform."[25] The Court has appreciated the practical difficulty of fixing precise and definite standards in advance of the complex contingencies certain to arise and has recognized that Congress might "from the necessities of the case, be compelled to leave to the executive officers the duty of bringing about the result pointed out by the statute."[26] Thus, the Tariff Act of 1922 was held constitutional by the United States Supreme Court, although it vested the President with the power to raise or lower the tariff upon any imported article whenever it was found that the American products were at a competitive disadvantage with those imported from abroad.[27] I dare say you can search high and low in an effort to find an example of a broader power of administrative discretion than that which was here regarded as constitutional, lodged in the President. But if that is broad, consider the broad power which was held to have been constitutional, delegated to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue by the Revenue Acts of 1918 and 1921, which authorized the Commissioner to adjust the very rate of excess-profits tax. Again, in another case an act of Congress, which gave the Secretary of the Treasury, on the recommendation of experts, the power to fix and establish standards of purity, quality, and fitness for consumption of certain commodities imported into the United States, was held constitutional.[28]

In the recent "hot oil" case[29], handed down by the United States Supreme Court about the beginning of January this year, the United States Supreme Court declared that the "hot oil" control clause of the N. R. A. was invalid as an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power. But, in that case, no "primary purpose" or "primary standard" whatsoever was clearly stated. The legislation there considered is wholly distinguishable from this bill, for here in the Lundeen bill a primary purpose is stated, and it is clear that the Secretary of Labor is not invested by this bill with anything more than a properly constitutional "administrative discretion." Indeed, when you consider it, the discretion invested in the Secretary of Labor under the Lundeen bill is narrow, for the beneficiaries who are to receive the compensation are named, the minimum compensation is prescribed, the maximum compensation is ascertainable, and the nature of the compensation is fixed. Certainly the discretion here vested in the Secretary of Labor is far less wide than that vested in the Secretary of Agriculture by the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933.[31] In the A. A. A. bill the Secretary of Agriculture was granted the power—and I now quote from the statute—"to provide for rental or benefit payments in connection with crop reduction in such amounts as the Secretary deems fair and reasonable."

Mr. HARTLEY. On that point, has that question been tested yet?

Mr. LINDER. No; not the A. A. A. Of course, I present the A. A. A. only because I am presenting this to a congressional body that found it thoroughly constitutional to pass the A. A. A., which provides for this extravagant area of administrative discretion, should have no difficulty in passing a bill which said that the Secretary of Labor is empowered to pay compensation, the minimum level of which is fixed, the maximum level of which is ascertainable, to persons who are definitely described in the act. Here in the A. A. A. the Secretary of Agriculture is given the power to provide for benefit payments in such amounts as he deems fair and reasonable. The Lundeen bill does not do that. It does not say the Secretary of Labor is given the power to provide for such compensation as he or she deems fair and reasonable at all, because there is a minimum stated. But the A. A. A.—I refer to that only because I am speaking to a congressional body—has this argument: The direct argument is that the area of discretion which is vested in the Secretary of Labor is narrow, and that it is narrower than the area of administrative discretion which was held constitutional in the various cases that I have cited. It would be proper argument, arguing from precedent as one would have to argue before the United States Supreme Court, that you have held the Tariff Act which allowed the President to adjust the very rate of tariff wherever he found that the domestic product was at a competitive disadvantage—you held that constitutionally there is no limitation on the discretion there, except the President must determine whether the domestic product is at a competitive disadvantage. You held it perfectly proper—if you are arguing to the United States Supreme Court—for the Congress to enact a bill by which the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is authorized to adjust the rate of excess-profits tax.

Mr. DUNN. Pardon me; you are referring to the reciprocal tax, are you not, that was passed last year?

Mr. LINDER. No, no. This is the 1922 act. I am referring to the tariff bill which came before the United States Supreme Court for consideration in Hampton against United States. In Hampton against United States, the United States Supreme Court said that it was perfectly legitimate for Congress to vest the President with such discretion. When I wrote this brief originally, I inserted in the brief this statement, that the United States Supreme Court has never in its entire history invalidated an act on the ground that it involved unconstitutional delegation of legislative power. But I had to take that sentence out of this brief because lo and behold, to the everlasting astonishment of every constitutional lawyer in this country, without question, the United States Supreme Court in the "hot oil" case a month ago held that section of the N. R. A. which gives the President the power to regulate the production and the distribution of "hot oil" invalid, because that was, as the United States Supreme Court says, an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power. Mr. Joseph Cardozo wrote a brilliant dissent. He was alone in his dissent. In that dissent he pointed out that this decision was a break with the whole line of decisions in which the tariff act and the other acts were considered.

Therefore, it is necessary for us to consider whether this bill is constitutional within the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court in the "hot oil" case. I say that it is on a much different basis because in the "hot oil" decision the United States Supreme Court was considering a clause in a bill which stated that the President might interfere with and prohibit the transportation of "hot oil" products, without in anywise defining under what circumstances he should do it. The Lundeen bill does set definite criteria and standards, because it fixes a minimum, it determines how the maximum shall be ascertained, and it determines to whom the benefits and competition shall be paid. And since it does that, it cannot at all come within the criticism of the United States Supreme Court in the "hot oil" decision.

Mr. HARTLEY. May I ask another question? I do not want to interrupt your testimony here too much.

Mr. LINDER. That is quite all right.

Mr. HARTLEY. But I am very much interested in your argument. Do you not think we can strengthen this bill by further defining the powers of the Secretary of Labor in this bill?

Mr. LINDER. You could strengthen it further, but it would not strengthen the constitutionality of the bill. The bill is perfectly constitutional as it stands, because you do not need to do any more than fix the minimum, state how the maximum shall be ascertained—and when you say "average local wages", that can be ascertained; there is no difficulty about it, that is purely a matter of statistical determination. A finding can be made as to that, just as in the tariff case it was entirely possible for the President to determine whether the domestic product was at a competitive disadvantage. It is possible to determine it. The criterion is stated and the formula is given on the basis of which the administrator can determine how he should proceed. And insofar as that is done in the Lundeen bill—and it is unquestionably done in the Lundeen bill—the Lundeen bill cannot be attacked on the ground that it involved any delegation of legislative power.

Mr. HARTLEY. Then you do believe that this is as great a delegation of authority and power as was granted in the "hot oil" case?

Mr. LINDER. Not at all, because in the "hot oil" case the President's power to prohibit the transportation of "hot oil" products was not in any wise restricted. He was not told that he could restrict "hot oil" products already brought in, or under what circumstances, or what kind of findings he should make or anything else of the kind.

Mr. LUNDEEN. You might say he was given unlimited power.

Mr. LINDER. Whereas here, the Secretary of Labor is given a limited power.

Mr. LUNDEEN. A restricted power.

Mr. LINDER. Yes.

Mr. HARTLEY. Do you really think the Secretary of Labor is given limited authority in this bill? Do you not think it is rather broad authority?

Mr. LINDER. Do you think it is any broader than the power of the President in the tariff bill to adjust the rate of tariff from nothing to 100 percent, if he so please?

Mr. HARTLEY. No; I agree with you that is a delegation of authority.

Mr. LINDER. Do you think it is any greater than the delegation of power which is involved in the act in which the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is given the power to adjust the rate of excess-profits tax? He is not told whether he is to adjust it at 1 percent or 100 percent. Yet that was held perfectly legitimate. What broader example of administrative discretion could you have than the act which was held constitutional by the United States Supreme Court in which the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to fix the standards of quality and fitness for consumption of products.

Mr. HARTLEY. May I ask this? Do you think that the decision in the "hot oil" case indicates a possible change in the trend of opinion of the Supreme Court as to the right of Congress to delegate this authority?

Mr. LINDER. I should say that the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the "hot oil" case indicates that the United States Supreme Court will not hold constitutional any act which delegates an administrative power to an administrator without defining and in some wise, in some intelligible way, limiting and restricting that power. I think that any constitutional lawyer who reads the "hot oil" decision will have to say now that if this Lundeen bill said that the Secretary of Labor was to pay compensation to the unemployed, periodically, without saying how much, without fixing a maximum or a minimum, then it would be under the "hot oil" decision and the United States Supreme Court would hold that bill unconstitutional. But I do not think that criticism can be at all urged against this bill in the present form.

Mr. HARTLEY. Do you not agree that that decision was sort of an admonition to the Congress to call a halt?

Mr. LINDER. I have said so.

Mr. HARTLEY. My questions may indicate that I am opposed to a bill of this kind. I am not. I am merely trying to get opinions which will enable this committee to write a bill that is going to stand up after the bill has been put into effect.

Mr. LINDER. I think I would like to extend my remarks on that question a little in this respect: This bill cannot be attacked as unconstitutional delegation of legislative power from a different aspect. This bill is not one under which the President is given the power to tax anything, or the Secretary of Labor to tax anything, or to forbid something from coming into the United States or to forbid something from being transported in interstate commerce.

In that respect it is wholly different than the "hot oil" case; it is wholly different from the tariff case and all the others, because this bill rests on a wholly different basis. This bill is a bill by which Congress spends money. So long as this is a bill by which Congress spends money, the power of Congress to spend money being unlimited within the sole limitation that Congress must regard it as being for the general welfare, in that sense no one can intelligently urge for a minute that this involves an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power. The power to spend money, as I stated before, carries with it the power to set up an administrative machinery for the spending of the money. That is perfectly obvious, that it must. If the Congress has the power to spend $100,000,000, it obviously must have the power to devise the machinery by which the money is to be spent and to set up the criteria which are to govern and guide the administration of the fund. In that sense a breath of unconstitutionality cannot be attached to the Lundeen bill.

The other decisions and these other cases involve a wholly different set of situations. The "hot oil" case involves the power of the President to stop something from going across the State lines, but we are not stopping anything from going across the State lines. All that is being done here is that Congress is spending money and stating how the money is to be spent.

Mr. DUNN. Attorney Linder, I do not like to interrupt, but this is absolutely necessary. There has been a question come before the committee about this section 2, line 7. Will you read that? There are quite a number here who would like to have that explained.

Mr. LINDER. Section 2, line 7: "A system of unemployment insurance"?

Mr. DUNN. Yes.

Mr. LINDER. Section 2 provides:

"The Secretary of Labor is hereby authorized and directed to provide for the immediate establishment of a system of unemployment insurance for the purpose of providing compensation for all workers and farmers above 18 years of age, unemployed through no fault of their own."

Mr. DUNN. That is the point I want to make. Would this bill, the way it is written, apply to men who are not citizens? That is what I want to find out. That question has been asked. It came up this morning when one of the witnesses said that they would like to have that question answered.

Mr. LINDER. I should say that this bill in its present form would be applicable to any worker and any farmer in the United States, unless there is something in section 4 which would restrict that interpretation. The only thing in section 4 which might restrict it would be line 9 to the end:

"The benefits of this act shall be extended to workers, whether they be industrial, agricultural, domestic, or professional workers, and to farmers, without discrimination because of age, sex, race, color, religious, or political opinion or affiliation. No worker or farmer shall be disqualified from receiving the compensation guaranteed by this act because of past participation in strikes, or refusal to work in place of strikers."

I see nothing in this bill which would make it inapplicable to aliens who are workers and farmers. It seems to me that it would be wholly improper to restrict the interpretation of this to citizens wholly.

Mr. DUNN. Thank you.

Mr. LINDER. That is not a constitutional question. It is a question of construction of the bill.

Mr. DUNN. Someone made the statement it would be necessary to insert another section to take care of people who are not citizens.

Mr. LINDER. I should state it as my opinion that this bill applies to workers, to anyone who is a worker or a farmer, unless there is some other statute of the Federal Government—it would have to be a Federal statute—which would make it impossible for a person not a citizen to acquire the benefits of any such act. I know of no such statute at the moment. I can say, though, I proceeded to answer the question as best I could, because I did not want to appear to refuse or to be unwilling to answer any questions, but that is not a question which comes within the confines of the constitutional questions which I have been here considering.

Mr. LUNDEEN. And you have not given that any particular study?

Mr. LINDER. I have given it no particular study. It is purely an off-hand opinion on my part.

Mr. DUNN. But your interpretation of the act now would be that they would not be discriminated against?

Mr. LINDER. I should say not. I would say that my off-hand reaction would be that I see no social reason why an alien worker should not receive the benefits under this act. I should say that if there were any doubts in the minds of any Congressmen or in the minds of the constituents of any Congressmen as to it, it might be a very good idea to bring it home to any reader of this bill that no discrimination is intended by providing in the act a provision that no worker shall be disqualified from receiving the compensation guaranteed by this act by reason of his being an alien or by reason of lack of citizenship. I should say that on that ground that it seems to me that an alien worker who by his work and by his toil and by his lifeblood has contributed to the wealth and the welfare of this country is entitled to as much protection as any citizen is.

Mr. DUNN. Attorney Linder, one of the members of the committee stated yesterday that in his district there were many people wanting to become citizens, but the judge before whom they appeared would not grant them citizenship papers because they could not read or write. It is not because the men do not want to become citizens, but some object.

Mr. LINDER. I should say that certainly whether a man can read or write, if he is a worker, if he is a human being, he needs the means whereby to live, and his children need milk just as much as children of a man or woman who can read or write. You are certainly suggesting another reason why it would be outrageous——

Mr. DUNN. I agree with you that we should not discriminate against the unfortunates.

Mr. LINDER. Yes.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. I would like to have your comment on this, Are all the powers delegated in this bill delegated to the Secretary of Labor?

Mr. LINDER. Yes.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. On page 3, line 6, where it says, "Further taxation necessary to provide funds for the purposes of this act shall be levied on inheritance, gifts, and individual and corporate incomes", and so forth, would that power be all delegated to the Secretary of Labor?

Mr. LINDER. Oh, no, no. The Secretary of Labor has no power to tax.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Who has?

Mr. LINDER. Only Congress has.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. But we are delegating the power.

Mr. LINDER. Oh, no, no. The only proper construction of this language would be that when you say "further taxation" you mean further taxation shall be levied by whoever has the power to levy it. The Secretary of Labor has no power to levy taxes, therefore this must mean that Congress would levy the taxes. I should say the spirit of this act and its clear intention is this: Section 4 starts out by saying:

"All moneys necessary to pay compensation guaranteed by this act and the cost of establishing and maintaining the administration of this act shall be paid by the Government of the United States. All such moneys are hereby appropriated out of all funds in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated."

That means if it costs $10,000,000 to pay the compensation under this act, if this act is passed, that $10,000,000 is a charge on the Treasury of the United States just like the President's salary or the cost of maintaining a battleship is a charge on the Treasury of the United States. If there is not enough money in the Treasury of the United States to pay this compensation, Congress in enacting this bill says that further taxation necessary to provide such funds shall be levied in a particular way. That is, if there is not enough money in the Treasury, Congress should put more money in the Treasury by levying taxes of this kind.

Mr. LUNDEEN. That is a declaration of policy?

Mr. LINDER. That is only a declaration of policy. That is what I was going to say. This is not a tax measure. It is absurd to regard this as a tax measure. As a matter of fact, this language, "Further taxation necessary to provide funds", is stated as a declaration of intention on the part of Congress, wholly without meaning and wholly without significance, because Congress does not levy taxes by using such language. When taxes are levied they are levied with reference to the whole body of revenue acts which are in existence. If Congress were levying a tax bill, Congress would, considering the whole body of the revenue acts, amend, repeal, or modify existing revenue legislation. It is ridiculous to think that this sentence, "Further taxation necessary to provide funds for the purposes of this act shall be levied on inheritances, gifts, and individual and corporation incomes of $5,000 a year and over", is language by which the tax is itself levied. The tax is not levied by this. All that Congress is doing here is saying, "If there is not enough money in the Treasury, then we, the present Congress that passed this bill, think, we believe, it is our feeling in the matter, that the way that further money should be provided is by this method." That is all this means, purely a declaration of intention.

Mr. HARTLEY. If this were a tax-raising bill it would not have been referred to this committee, but to the all-important Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. LINDER. That is right.

Mr. HARTLEY. There it would rest in some cubby hole.

Mr. LESINSKY. Absolutely correct.

Mr. LINDER. It is not a taxing measure. If you will bear with me in the course of this argument on the constitutional law, I will cover the whole question of the taxing power and all the rest of it, because I mean to consider all those questions.

I think that the question as to whether this bill involves an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power is pretty much covered, and I think is irrefutably disposed of by the statement that I have made, and the statement that has been elicited by the questions that have been asked.

I want to go on now as to the question as to whether this bill is constitutional or unconstitutional because of the fact that it does not appropriate a specific amount. One might say, looking at this bill, that Congress has not in this bill stated how much is appropriated. Congress does not say that a million or a billion or ten billion is appropriated. Congress says simply, "All moneys necessary to pay compensation are appropriated", and that is all. Now, that is not a constitutional objection. No specific amount is appropriated by this bill. But this does not render the bill unconstitutional. For general indefinite appropriations are common. The first of such general indefinite appropriations was passed when the very first Congress, in 1793, directed that all expenses accruing or necessary for the maintenance of lighthouses be paid out of the Treasury of the United States.[32] Congress did not say that they appropriated a dollar or ten thousand dollars or a million dollars. Congress simply appropriated the money that was necessary to maintain the lighthouses, that is all. Since then hundreds of statutes containing similar indefinite appropriations have been passed.[33]

In the footnote to the brief there are collated some references that, I think, will fully persuade you that when Congress passes a bill of this kind with an indefinite appropriation it is doing the sort of thing that Congress has been doing ever since 1793 and has done hundreds of times.

From the moment the bill is enacted this general appropriation becomes a charge upon the Treasury of the United States. When it is determined that any individual is entitled to a certain amount of compensation, his claim is a claim on the United States, to be honored by the Treasury just as any matured bond or other obligation of the United States must be honored. In other words, claims for compensation would arise, considering the matter from the standpoint of machinery and mechanics, much in the same way that a claim on a Home Owners' Loan bond would arise. The bond is issued. When it is issued, it becomes a claim upon the United States, to be honored out of the Treasury of the United States by the Secretary of the Treasury when the obligation or the bond becomes due. So you would conceive that the Secretary of Labor, through a proper administrative official, would determine that a particular individual was entitled to $12.32 compensation; and if that compensation were, according to the terms of the requisition made by the administrative officer, payable immediately, it would become a charge upon the United States Treasury just the same as a bond which has become due would be a charge. Like all other matured claims on the United States, these claims for compensation, when fixed, must be provided for as a part of the Budget of the United States. In other words, the administrative officer would determine how much, if any, compensation would have to be paid; and when he determined it, that would have to be provided for, along with the battleships and the salaries and all the other items of expenditure of the Federal Government. I do not think there is any serious objection that can be raised with respect to the fact that no definite appropriation is made.

I come now to an objection which is the bugaboo of all social legislation. That is the "due process of law" objection. Unlike all other employment and social insurance plans, and also unlike the Wagner-Lewis bill, this bill does not involve the setting up of reserves created by enforced contributions by employers or employees. The only way that any person could regard himself as in any wise deprived of property for the purpose of financing this bill, would be by regarding this bill as a taxing measure.

There is no pay-roll tax here. There is no enforced contribution to reserves. The only way in which any human being, any person in the United States, could be regarded as in any wise hurt or interfered with or burdened by this act would be by the taxes that he might have to pay if Congress thought it necessary to provide further tax or revenue-raising bills.

The bill provides that "it is the sense of Congress that if any further taxation is necessary to provide funds for the purposes of this act, it shall be levied on inheritances, gifts, and individual and corporation incomes of $5,000 a year and over."

Even if it can be argued that this is a taxing measure, and I submit that it cannot intelligently be so argued or so regarded, the bill is a proper exercise of the taxing power of Congress. Congress has the power under the Constitution to lay taxes for the "general welfare", subject only to two limitations[34] In the case of duties, imports, and excises, "this must be uniform." This is not a duty, import, or excise, so the objection of uniformity is not available here. In the case of direct taxes, they must be apportioned according to the census. Neither limitation, however, applies to incomes, gifts, or inheritances since the sixteenth income-tax amendment.[35] If you regard this bill as a tax measure—and I say you cannot so regard it—it would be a perfectly proper tax measure because it would come within, first, the general welfare clause, and, second, the income-tax amendment to the Constitution.

Thus, a tax levied by Congress on incomes, inheritances, and gifts is wholly proper so long as Congress deems it to be for the "general welfare." Once Congress has levied such a tax, the tax cannot be assailed by any taxpayer, since the courts will not review the exercise of the congressional discretion involved in income taxation. The decision of Congress is thus final.

The limitation on the taxing power of the States, "that the taxation must be for a public purpose", is not a limitation applicable to the Federal Government.[37] But even if it were, clearly the purposes for which funds are to be raised by taxation and to be spent under this bill, is a "public purpose." The fact that private individuals benefit does not alter the fact that it is to the public interest that these private individuals receive such public benefit.[38] Finally, what is or is not a "public use" or purpose, has been held by the United States Supreme Court in the famous North Dakota nationalization cases to be a question concerning which the legislative authority is best able to judge.[39] Just as in the case of the exercise of the appropriating power, so in the case of the exercise of the taxing power, where the tax is levied on incomes, inheritances, and gifts, the taxpayer is wholly without remedy. When Congress determines that such a tax is for the "general welfare", its decision is final and cannot be constitutionally assailed.

This brings me to the last objection, that is, the objection on the ground that this bill might violate State rights.

It has been argued that this bill is unconstitutional on the ground that it involves an usurpation of the rights of the States. This argument is based upon the proposition that the power of Congress to regulate commerce and industry is limited to the "interstate commerce power" and that any regulation by the Federal Government of intrastate business and of matters "not commerce" is unconstitutional.

This argument is wholly inapplicable to the present bill. For this bill is not an exercise of the interstate commerce power; it is an exercise of the appropriating power.

This bill does not involve any regulation of intrastate commerce or of matters "not commerce." This bill does not tell any merchant or manufacturer how he is to do his business; it does not involve the setting up of reserves; it does not compel any manufacturer to pay contributions to a particular reserve fund. It does not set up such business relationships as might possibly be involved in the creation of special accounts with employers or employees, based on their contributions to a reserve fund.

In the Wagner-Lewis bill the whole concept is that employers shall contribute a pay-roll tax to a specific fund. There the machinery that is contemplated by Congress is a machinery which will involve the setting up of reserves, of accounts. It might very well be argued that Congress would be going into the insurance business, would be going into an elaborate set of business relationships, something which only the States should do. But do you not see that that has nothing to do with a bill like this, which does not involve any pay-roll tax, does not involve any reserves, does not involve any enforced contributions? This bill simply spends money.

Mr. HARTLEY. On that point, does not this bill indirectly call for the setting up of reserves for the payment of unemployment compensation?

Mr. LINDER. No; it does not call for the setting up of one dime of reserve. All this bill does, as you read the bill, is, it spends money. It spends money by way of compensation to the unemployed, just the way the United States Congress spends money when it provides for a battleship. There is no reserve set up for the battleships. There is no reserve set up for the President's salary or for the salaries of Congressmen. It is there. If it is not there, Congress has to raise the money by levying taxes. There is no reserve at all provided. That is the basic concept of this bill, that the Government has the obligation to provide social security to every human being, every worker and farmer who, through no fault of his own, is unemployed. The basic concept of this bill is that the Government in recognition of that social obligation to every human being who cannot earn a living through no fault of his own should pay directly to that person money not because any reserve is set up, for no reserve is set up. This bill says, "Let Congress pass a tax statute. Let Congress tax inheritances and incomes and gifts, not by way of any reserve but out of the money that the Congress can create." When you consider that Congress can on occasions raise billions for specific purposes—I understand that Congress spent about $30,000,000,000 to wage the World War for the United States—Congress can create the money, can get the money. How it gets the money is not the purpose of Congress when it passes this bill. All that Congress does when it passes this bill is, it says, "Compensation shall be paid out of the United States Treasury, and the compensation shall be a claim against the United States Treasury, and it shall be paid out of the United States Treasury." If the money is not there, Congress should raise the money by taxes.

If you consider the bill fundamentally and basically, therefore, you see that it involves vitally a wholly different social conception of the obligations of government and that which is involved in the Wagner-Lewis bill. In the Wagner-Lewis bill the money is to be created by reserves based upon insurance actuarial principles, reserves that are to be created over a period of time. A small amount of money is to be paid upon the basis of insurance principles to workers and farmers when they lose their employment. That is why the Wagner-Lewis bill does not provide for the present unemployed. The Wagner-Lewis bill deals with those who are employed now. It looks forward to the possibility of creating reserves out of pay-roll taxes; it is really gotten out of the pay rolls of the workers and farmers, who would thereby be affected, looking to the creation of those reserves. It does not contemplate the Government spending its own money. The Government is not spending its money in the Wagner-Lewis bill. It is spending the money, it is providing for reserves out of which the insurance should be paid. This bill, however, has nothing to do with the question of reserves. This bill spends money. It spends money the same way that Congress spends money when it provides for the building of a post office or——

Mr. DUNN. Or battleships?

Mr. LINDER. Or battleships.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Only this is for a better purpose.

Mr. LINDER. Yes.

Mr. HARTLEY. Then you say that this bill merely recognizes the obligation that we have to provide unemployment insurance to our unemployed today, and indirectly directs Congress, then, to pass a new tax bill to raise the revenue to pay it?

Mr. LINDER. It does not direct Congress to do it. Suppose that Congress were to pass a bill providing for the appropriation of a million dollars for the building of a post office in Kankakee, or somewhere. Congress then would not be concerned with how the million dollars should be raised. That is a job for the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury can inform the individual who is responsible for the balancing or for the preparation of the Budget, and then the individual who is the Commissioner of the Budget can say whether there is money enough or whether there is not.

Mr. HARTLEY. Then you say that this directs the Secretary of the Treasury to raise the money to pay unemployment insurance?

Mr. LINDER. It does not even do that. I mean, it does a very simple thing. It simply spends money. If the money is not there, then it is for Congress to work out ways and means for getting it there; that is all.

Mr. HARTLEY. Did you not say it was up to the Secretary of the Treasury to find money if it was not there?

Mr. LINDER. If I said that, I spoke a little loosely. I mean the Secretary of the Treasury, of course, could not fill the job of finding the money or of getting money. It is up to Congress to tax and to provide the money.

Mr. HARTLEY. Then that gets back to my first question, that we are indirectly directing Congress to get the money in the event it is not there.

Mr. LINDER. After all, it is conceivable that Congress might authorize the President to sell public lands. It is conceivable that Congress might direct the President to devaluate the dollar further. It is conceivable that Congress could work out one or a hundred different ways in the light of raising money.

Mr. HARTLEY. In the light of the last few years, it is possible.

Mr. LINDER. That is right. But this is not a tax measure. I think it is important that you gentlemen should conceive it simply as an appropriating measure; just as you do not concern yourselves directly with how the money is to be provided when you pass any other appropriating measure, so you must regard this as an appropriating measure. How the money is to be provided is another question that Congress has to determine. That question I am not going into now, because it has nothing to do with the constitutional-law questions with which I have been concerned. Economists and statisticians, financial experts, and experts on the potential capacities of this country and on the earning power of the people of the country can advise you as to how Congress can get the money. I am not here for the purpose of telling you how Congress can get the money. I am here only for the purpose of persuading you, as I think I can—I hope I can—that this bill is constitutional as an appropriating measure.

Mr. HARTLEY. Then, as I understand you to say, Congress has the right to direct the people of the State of New Jersey and every other State in the Union to pay taxes to provide unemployment insurance in the event there are not funds in the Federal Treasury?

Mr. LINDER. No; I did not say that. I said Congress had the power to spend the Federal moneys——

Mr. HARTLEY. Yes.

Mr. LINDER (continuing). For any purpose that Congress deems to be for the general welfare. If Congress says that it is for the general welfare of the people of the United States that every unemployed person should receive compensation, Congress has the power to provide for the payment of compensation to those persons. How the money is to be raised is a revenue question, it is a question of the Budget. Money can be raised by the sale of land. It can be raised by the——

Mr. LUNDEEN. Sale of bonds.

Mr. LINDER. Yes; the sale of bonds. It can be raised by various fiscal and other measures.

Mr. LUNDEEN. They are always oversubscribed about seven times.

Mr. LINDER. Congress can provide for the issuance of a new Liberty bond, of course. Congress can provide for the money. But that is really not germane to the question we are now concerned with. The question that we are concerned with here is this: Has Congress the power as a matter of constitutional law to provide for the payment of compensation to the unemployed? The answer is "yes", because Congress has the power to spend money for any purpose Congress pleases, so long as Congress deems it to be for the general welfare.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Getting back to that question I asked you some time ago, this bill quite specifically directs the Government to raise the additional money necessary by certain methods, inheritance taxes, income taxes, and so forth; not the selling of bonds, and so forth.

Mr. LINDER. It does not direct, though. As Congressman LUNDEEN pointed out, it is simply declaring the intention of Congress. It is simply saying that Congress thinks that the best way of raising money would be by income taxation, inheritance, and gift taxation. This is not the act in which it is doing that.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Yes; I understand that part of it. However, if this has any meaning in its enactment, it means that the Congress is establishing the policy that the raising of additional money for the purpose of meeting this expenditure will be done by these means.

Mr. LINDER. It is a suggestion.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Taxation of incomes, inheritances, and so forth, and so on.

Mr. LINDER. There is no question in your mind, is there, sir, that Congress has the power to pass such taxation legislation?

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Oh, no; they have that, of course.

Mr. LINDER. Very well. If they now tax an income to the extent of so much percent, they can jack up the percentage, if Congress so please.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Yes. Are you familiar with the A. A. A. system of taxation—the processing tax?

Mr. LINDER. Yes. But, you see, there you have a wholly different concept, because there you have something which is a little akin to the reserve-fund theory. The Secretary of Agriculture is given the power, as I stated before, to pay benefits to farmers in such amounts as he deems advisable and reasonable.

The Agricultural Adjustment Act also provides that the Secretary of Agriculture has the power to lay a processing tax on the products of agriculture, which come within the sphere of the Secretary of Agriculture's administration under this act. Then the act also goes on to say that the Secretary of the Treasury shall advance money to the Secretary of Agriculture as a sort of an advance to him for the purpose of paying these benefits to the farmers. And then the Secretary of Agriculture is to lay the processing taxes and it is the intention, stated in the act, that the processing taxes are to make up or to create a fund which is sufficient to reimburse the Secretary of the Treasury for the moneys he has advanced to the Secretary of Agriculture for these benefits. In other words, what Congress was there, in the A. A. A. doing, was to pay money to farmers and to provide the money which was being paid to farmers by processing taxes. That in a way is similar to the Wagner-Lewis bill and the conventional unemployment-insurance bills, where you create pay-roll taxes for the purposes of enabling you to pay compensation. A reserve is created. But, you see, the A. A. A. involves some very serious questions of constitutional law, because it does just that. In the case of the Lundeen bill, no taxpayer whose income tax was jacked up 25 percent or so could come into court and say, "I object to this bill. I think this bill interferes with my constitutional rights. I ask that the Secretary of the Treasury be enjoined from paying out the money by way of compensation under this bill, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be enjoined from collecting the taxes." He cannot do it, because he cannot point to any specific dollar which he paid which went for this bill. It is just impossible, because the $1,500, let us say, that this man paid might have gone for the battleship. It is impossible.

In the A. A. A. when the processing tax is levied and he pays the processing tax, he can point to specific money. He says, "The Government has levied a processing tax upon me which was used to pay benefits to farmers. I think that scheme is wrong. I think that is an improper method of use of money. I think it is improper to tax me for such a purpose."

But he cannot do that under the Lundeen bill.

There is another aspect, also, in which this bill is strikingly different from the other unemployment-insurance bills and from the other social legislation which involves due-process questions.

This bill does not interfere with the conduct of any intrastate business. A farmer who is raising a cash crop, for instance, or who is raising a crop without limitation as to the nature of the crop, and who is taxed by this processing tax, can come into court, and they have come into court, and said, "We object to this processing tax because that is an interference with our business." As a matter of fact, if the sad truth must be broadcast, the A. A. A. has been held unconstitutional on a number of occasions in the last few months, insofar as it provided for the regulation of intrastate businesses. But the beauty of the Lundeen bill is that you cannot touch it on that point, because the Lundeen bill is not interfering with any business. Nobody can come and say, "I am being interfered with, I am not being allowed to run my business in the way I want to, I am being taxed", because he cannot point to anything—this is not a bill which interferes with business; it just spends money—just as he cannot come in and object to the money that they are using for a post office somewhere, because he cannot say that his money went for that post office; and so he cannot do anything with this, either.

After all, take the taxpayer who so many years back was outraged because Congress was spending money for the building of the Panama Canal. He brought a proceeding, and the United States Supreme Court said, "We are sorry, my dear sir, you just cannot do anything about it, because Congress is just spending money, and Congress can spend money for anything it pleases so long as Congress does this for the general welfare." This is the same situation.

This bill does not prohibit the transportation of any product by interstate commerce. In the Child Labor case the United States Supreme Court said that it was unconstitutional for the Federal Government to forbid the transportation in industry of the products of child labor, because the business in which this child labor was employed was an intrastate business subject only to the management and to the governance of the State; and it was a violation of the rights of the State to prohibit the transportation industry of the products of that child labor.

That argument simply has nothing to do with our present situation, because we are not interfering with the transportation of anything in interstate commerce. We are simply spending money.

A very important decision which has had a tremendous importance in constitutional law affecting social legislation is the employers' liability cases, in which the United States Supreme Court held that it was improper for Congress to regulate the liability of employers to their employees in intrastate business. That may be one of the many Achilles' heels of the Wagner-Lewis bill. These pay-roll taxes may very well be regarded as a regulation of intrastate business. But that does not apply here, because I have said now for the fifteenth or twentieth or one hundredth time you are just spending money here.

The bill simply sets up an obligation of the United States Government to pay out of the United States Treasury compensation. There is a case in the records, in the reports of the decisions of the United States Supreme Court, where a State came in and objected to the spending of money by Congress, for a particular purpose, because the State said that was an interference with the proper province of the States. It is the very famous maternity bill. I think it was the Smith-Townsend bill. It is referred to in the footnotes of this brief. Congress there passed a bill appropriating so much money for the creation of a board of maternal and infant health hygiene, and it provided that so much money should be given to the States provided they set up in each State a hygiene board subject to the rules of and pursuant to the provisions and the general plan outlined in the statutes. The State of Massachusetts, in a case which is known as "Massachusetts v. Melton",[42] a very famous case, came in and objected. They said, "When Congress provides for the appropriation of moneys to the particular States, provided they subject themselves to a Federal plan, Congress is interfering with the proper province of the States."

The United States Supreme Court said, "Oh, no; Congress is simply spending money, and in the exercise of appropriating money the power and authority of Congress to spend money cannot be questioned."

I am going to embark upon a line of reasoning here that has certain limitations and certain perils, which I am going to point out, but I would like to present the argument to you because while this argument would not be an argument which I would present to the United States Supreme Court, it is an argument which I have a perfect right to present to a Congressman because it is an argument based upon the sort of bills that Congress has just been passing; although I am not saying that those bills are constitutional.

Even if, however, the exercise of the appropriating power should, by any stretch of the imagination, be regarded as a regulation of matters "not commerce" and of intrastate commerce—I think I have demonstrated that it cannot so be regarded—it does not follow that the plan is beyond the powers of Congress. For it is the present doctrine of the United States Supreme Court that Congress has the power to regulate intrastate commerce and matters that are "not commerce" at all, provided that the burdensome character of these activities on interstate commerce is clear and direct.[43] Thus the United States Supreme Court has held the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921 constitutional, although that act gave the Secretary of Agriculture supervision over the commission men and livestock dealers in the stockyards of the Nation and thus enabled the Secretary of Agriculture to regulate prices and practices in matters wholly intrastate.[44]

The Court appreciated that the object of the act was to "free and unburden"—this is the language of the Supreme Court—the flow of interstate commerce.

Again, in another case, the passenger rates of the branch line of a railroad, wholly within the boundaries of a single State, were held constitutionally subject to the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission, by reason of the effect of the intrastate rates on interstate rates and interstate business.[45] The Court has again and again regarded similar——

Mr. HARTLEY. Is this a decision of the United States Supreme Court?

Mr. LINDER. Yes, sir. The Safety Appliance Act Case (222 U. S. 20). For further decisions along the same line I refer you to the footnote 43 of the brief.

The Court has again and again regarded similar acts as a proper exercise of the "interstate commerce power."

Certainly, it must be clear—and this is the argument I would like to present as forcibly as I know how to Congressmen—that Congress in 1933 and 1934 has proceeded upon the constitutional theory that it lies within the province of the Federal Government to prevent practices which deter the free flow of interstate commerce and to promote practices which stimulate the free flow of interstate commerce. As a matter of fact, if you will read the preamble to the N. R. A., you will find language in that act which was introduced at the suggestion of a constitutional lawyer, made to Senator WAGNER, which he very gratefully adopted, according to the minutes of a hearing on the N. R. A. just before the act was passed.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. A Senate hearing?

Mr. LINDER. A Senate hearing. In that Senator WAGNER accepted with great gratitude the suggestion of a constitutional lawyer that they should stick into the N. R. A. some language which should indicate that the purpose of the N. R. A. was to deter practices which interfered with the free flow of interstate commerce, and to encourage practices which would stimulate the free flow of interstate commerce. As a matter of fact, the A. A. A. contains language which is even clearer than the National Recovery Act.

The Congress which passed the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933 declared that the loss of the purchasing power of the farmers endangered the entire economic structure of the Nation.[46] The mechanism set up by that act was conceived as a device to restore purchasing power. Certainly, if that is the argument for the N. R. A. and the A. A. A. the workers' bill is similarly an effort to remove obstacles to the free flow of interstate commerce. Clearly it provides for the general welfare much more directly than the N. R. A., the A. A. A., the P. W. A., and the other emergency acts which Congress has enacted during the Roosevelt administration.

This bill is an effort to deal with the same problem—the crisis in the purchasing power of the people of the United States. The basic conception of this bill is that the millions of workers and farmers throughout the United States who are unemployed, sick, disabled, and aged, lack purchasing power and that the soundest and most intelligent way to restore that purchasing power is simply and without further ado to give them money. But not to give them money by way of charity or relief, but to give them money as of right, as a compensation for a disability which they suffer, due to no fault of their own and due to the operation of social forces. The basic idea of this bill is that funds should be given to create purchasing power for the masses who must spend the money for the necessities of life and who, in spending the money for these necessities, for milk and for bread and for rent and for things they need to live, will thereby remove obstructions to the free flow of interstate commerce.

Furthermore, a consideration of the advantages of the Federal as against the State or Federal-State social insurance systems will show what the United States Supreme Court terms the "administrative necessity" of a Federal system.

The vast growth of American industry spanning the entire continent and the development of a national economy that is interconnected and interdependent has completely transformed the Nation which was originally the subject of the Constitution. For most purposes of business and commerce State boundaries have ceased to exist. The existence of 48 governmental systems endeavoring to solve problems, essentially national in scope, in 48 different ways has created stupendous contradictions and difficulties. Of course, it is obvious enough that the Wagner-Lewis bill provides precisely that misfortune, 48 different State bills, all different, as different as the ingenuity and the intelligence—or the unintelligence—of the State legislatures can provide. The lack of purchasing power of the unemployed, sick, disabled, and aged is a national phenomenon, national in scope; its causes are bound up with the causes of the national economic crisis.

The administrative advantages in simplicity and efficiency which inhere in a uniform and integrated Federal system, as against the chaos of different plans in different States, are obvious.

The Federal system is the only feasible one, because it is only the Nation which can deal with the problem as it must be dealt with. The problem is a problem of mass unemployment, with millions out of work. The loss in purchasing power runs into billions of dollars. Only the Federal Government, with its vast resources and imponderable taxing power, can provide the funds to meet a problem of such magnitude. Many of the States simply do not have the necessary financial resources or adequate taxing power. Their unemployed, however, need compensation no less than the unemployed of the wealthier States, and it is equitable that the wealthier States should contribute to the support and maintenance of the human beings in the poorer States. The incomes earned from Nation-wide industry are, in a large measure, beyond the taxing power of any but the one State where the income is received. Consider a huge industrial plant in the Middle West owned by a corporation domiciled in New York. Its income, earned in the Middle West, is received in New York. It is New York which can most effectively tax that income. Yet when a depression occurs and the plant in the Middle West is shut down, the human beings whose labor contributed to the income received in New York are dropped, and the burden of their maintenance lies in the Middle Western States. The surplus, resources, and continuing income of the New York corporation in New York are not adequately available to the taxing power of the Middle Western State. Only the Federal Government can properly distribute the burden, because only it can effectively reach the income and property of a New York corporation. Thus the taxes paid by the New York corporation may, through the instrumentality of the Federal taxing power, be made available to meet the human needs of the unemployed throughout the country. Clearly it is only the long arm of the Federal Government which can reach out and deal with this problem.

The national emergency legislation which has been enacted during the Roosevelt administration involves an understanding of the national character of our economic problems. Furthermore, this legislation indicates a keen appreciation of the inadequacy and cumbersomeness of the Federal subsidy system. This legislation provides for direct aid to persons, firms, and corporations in the States. The A. A. A. provides Federal moneys directly to farmers all over the country. There is no nonsense requiring the Federal Government to grant subsidies to the States and the States to grant the money to the farmer. The Federal Government deals with the farmer directly. It does so in the firm realization that the price of crops grown by a farmer in Iowa determines his purchasing power, and that even if his crops never got beyond the boundaries of his State and even if his purchasing power is exercised for the purchase of products made within the State, his purchasing power is a matter of direct concern to the entire Nation.

Similarly, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act created the R. F. C. to supply Federal money direct to bankers throughout the country. The money was not given to the States to parcel out to the bankers. The bankers, whether their business was intrastate or interstate, whether they did a Nation-wide business or a neighborhood business, were the objects of national concern and were dealt with as such. Similarly, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was organized by the Government to supply money, in theory, to home owners throughout the country; in practice, to mortgagees throughout the country. Thus "farmers' relief", "bankers' relief", and "home owners' relief" have all been envisaged as Federal problems requiring Federal solution.

There is no intelligent reason why the unemployment problem, which is similarly a Federal problem, and which similarly requires national solution, should not be dealt with in the same way.

We must remember that the bill here considered does not depend for its constitutionality on any consideration of the "interstate-commerce power" upon the argument that the regulation of intrastate business is necessary because of its effect on interstate business. Although I have stated the argument by analogy from the R. F. C. and the H. O. L. C. and the A. A. A. and the N. R. A., I do not at all mean to imply that the constitutional argument is based on that analogy, because I could not be sure of that ground. The N. R. A. has been held unconstitutional again and again and again in the inferior courts of the country—and the citations are collated here—on the ground that it involves an interference with intrastate business. And the Wagner-Lewis bill involves a mare's nest, a hornet's nest of constitutional complications because of all the problems of that character that are there involved.

This bill does not have to depend upon any argument that we are trying to deal with the purchasing power of the Nation; we are trying to stimulate the flow of interstate commerce, because, as I said at the outset, and I repeat, much in the form of a musical rondo, in which you start with the theme and come back to it, it is simply an act by which Congress spends money. It rests upon the same constitutional basis as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act and the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act is an act by which Congress spends money for the relief of bankers throughout the country. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act is an act by which Congress spends money for the relief of mortgagees who cannot get a dime on their mortgages. The A. A. A. is an act for the relief of farmers directly. I want to withdraw the reference to the A. A. A., because the A. A. A. involves the whole complication of difficulties involved in the processing tax, with all the problems of direct injury and all the rest of it, and due process, that are there involved. Here we have something which rests for its constitutional basis upon the same basis that the R. F. C. and the H. O. L. C. have.

The Congress which passed, and this is all that I want to say by way of summary. I trust I have made it clear, as an act it rests on the same constitutional basis as all these other acts, as the R. F. C., which spends money. The Congress which passed the Reconstruction Finance Act apparently was convinced that it was for the general welfare, that the banks in this country should be given money out of the Treasury of the United States so the banks could stay in business. The Congress which passed the H. O. L. C. Act apparently was convinced that it was for the general welfare that individuals and corporations owning mortgages affecting real estate should be given bonds of the United States in payment of their mortgages.

When Congress, and this is my concluding statement, when Congress passes this bill, if, as and when it does, it will at last have realized that it is for the general welfare of the United States, that all human beings in the United States who, through no fault of their own, are unable to earn the necessities of life, should receive money so that they may purchase the necessities of life, of living, and in so doing maintain not only their own very lives, but the economic life of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. On behalf of the committee I want to thank you for the valuable information you have given.

Mr. LINDER. If there are any constitutional law questions, I will be very happy to try to answer them, so far as I can.

I am submitting herewith for your convenience a list of citations and am prepared to submit additional citations if it is desired.

Mr. HARTLEY. Did I understand you to say before that we would be strengthening our case by further defining the powers of the Secretary of Labor?

Mr. LINDER. Well, I should say that you would strengthen the bill by an elaboration of the bill, but I should say that the energies of the House Committee on Labor, if it were determined that this bill were sound, should rather be devoted to the enactment of the bill as it stands than to getting into a lot of arguments that would be aroused, and would be involved in the question of definition. The bill in its present form is, I think, simple and intelligent; so simple that even a lawyer used to complicated and technical language can understand it. This bill is so simple it states its method by which it solves this problem, so simply and intelligently that any further attempt at elaboration here and now would involve a diverting of the energies of the committee into collateral arguments on definitions and that sort of thing. I should say I think it would be laudable and it would be splendid if a formal, technical bill in language which perhaps is more technical than this bill should be drawn, and should set up an elaborate administrative mechanism, and so forth; but it seems to me that the problem of the proponents of this bill in the present Congress is to persuade Congress that this idea is right. If you persuade Congress that this idea is right, the formulation of the technical bill is simply a matter for experts. I mean, a matter of definition, and that sort of thing, you can state what is said here more technically, but I do not think you could state it much more intelligently. I think that this bill in its present form is intelligent, is clear, is readable, and most important of all, as far as I am concerned, is constitutional.

THE LUNDEEN BILL APPROPRIATES FEDERAL FUNDS FOR THE GENERAL WELFARE

This bill provides for the appropriation of Federal moneys out of the Treasury of the United States for the payment of compensation to the unemployed, the sick, the disabled, and the aged. It is simply an exercise of the appropriating power, the power of Congress to spend money. It deprives no one of his property without the "due process of law" guaranteed by the Constitution. Unlike other unemployment and social-insurance plans, it does not involve the setting up of "reserves" created by enforced contributions by employers or employees.

Since the bill is merely an exercise of appropriating power, it rests upon the same constitutional basis as do the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act and Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act, which involve merely an exercise of the power of Congress to spend Federal moneys. These acts all provide for direct aid to persons, firms, and corporations in the States. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act supplies Federal moneys directly to banks throughout the country. Unemployment and social insurance problems are even more clearly Federal problems. They require similar national solution.

H. R. 2827 UNQUESTIONABLY CONSTITUTIONAL

The Congress which passed the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act, and the bulk of the national-emergency legislation clearly conceived that it was for the "general welfare" that individuals, corporations, and banks should be given money out of the Treasury of the United States. When Congress passes this bill it will have realized that it is for the "general welfare" that all human beings in the United States who, through no fault of their own, are unable to earn the necessities of life, should receive money representing their contribution to production so that they may purchase the necessities of life, and in so doing maintain not only their lives but the economic life of the United States.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON], whose views and whom I personally admire and respect, and whose friendship I value, very properly presented to the House in taking the position that he has on this bill pertinent inquiries and arguments. During the course of his remarks he asked questions in relation to the taxes imposed upon wealth-producing agencies and the effects he fears will follow therefrom—the fear that it will wipe out business, the effect this bill will have on the very foundations of our civilization, and the responsibilities which the Federal Government under this bill will undertake when the bill becomes law. Had his arguments come from some other Member of the House I would not have been so surprised; but I am, coming as they do from one of the most logical-minded, one of the most humane, and from one whom I consider to be one of the most progressive Members of this body. He well said that this bill and its purposes transcends politics. I agree with him. It is pleasing to me to note that the Republican Party takes no definite position on this bill. There are some who are opposed to certain features, some who are for the entire bill, and some who have objections, as they are entitled to have objections, to certain features of the bill. A Member has the right, if honestly entertaining such thoughts, to be in complete opposition to the entire bill. From the remarks made by the minority Members it is clear that their minds on this legislation transcend mere partisan politics.

I shall address myself briefly, Mr. Chairman, to the pertinent question the gentleman from New Jersey raised, a question which might be titled, "Human rights and responsibilities of government in relation thereto versus property rights and the responsibility of government in relation thereto."

What are the functions of government? Government has two functions—a primary function and a secondary function. The objective of the performance of both these functions is the general welfare of the people, of those with property, and of the unfortunates who are without property and without means, of business, of employer and employee, the general welfare of all our social and economic groups, and as far as possible and as the circumstances require of all of our people.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I shall be pleased to yield to my friend.

Mr. EATON. I would not want the gentleman to leave the impression—and I have such an affectionate regard for him I know he would not want to—that I consider property rights above human rights.

Mr. McCORMACK. No; not at all.

Mr. EATON. But I am interested in preserving what wealth-producing agencies we have in the interest of human rights.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am glad my friend interposed his remark, because under no conditions would I want to convey any such impression; and I will state specifically that the gentleman's position is honest and sincere. He has no desire, of course, where there is a conflict between human rights and property rights, to take a position other than that which his conscience prompts him to take. There is an honest difference of opinion between us.

The ultimate object of our Government is the general welfare of our people. Among the people of a nation are the unfortunates, the poor, the sick, the aged, and other persons in a dependent position; each generation has and will have them. Under our economic system, known as the "profit system", we shall always have the employer and the employee. As a result of this relationship, problems arise which require action on the part of the Government to control and regulate, where the general welfare is involved, whenever abuses arise out of private industry and whenever private industry is unable to control them, the continuance of which abuses would be inconsistent with the welfare of the country. Under such circumstances some agency must step in and assume the burden of correcting such abuses in the interest of the general welfare; and in the past, as we see again in the pending bill, this agency is government itself.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I think the clearest expression we have ever had of the function of government was stated in the Declaration of Independence by Thomas Jefferson, when he said that the object of government was the protection of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. I think that is what this legislation is designed to do, if it is perfected.

Mr. McCORMACK. I agree with my distinguished friend. I think reference to the general welfare includes all of the worthy objectives of government mentioned by Mr. MAY. Government in the past has had to extend its secondary functions in order to control abuses which have arisen out of the operation of private industry; government will and must continue to do so in the future.

The primary functions of government are very limited. The primary functions of government consist of protecting our country against foreign invasion, of preserving internal order, and by taxation to raise the money with which to provide for these essential duties of government, all of which duties relate to the natural law of self-preservation in its application to a nation. When we get beyond the performance of these duties by government we enter into what is termed the "secondary function of government." For example, the maintenance of our public-school system is not a primary function of government. The regulation of the railroads is a secondary function, necessary because of abuses that private agencies could not control. In order to try to control those abuses government had to step in and extend a secondary function by creating regulatory boards.

The Workmen's Compensation Act was action on the part of government, another extension of its secondary field, necessary to control abuses arising out of private industry. This is not a criticism of the profit system to which I subscribe, but governmental action was, is, and will continue to be necessary when the circumstances call for the same and when no other agency exists that can properly meet them and determine them for the interests of our people. Under such conditions there is the mouthpiece of the people, their Government, to which the people are justified in turning, to step in and undertake to regulate existing abuses, and to control or minimize them for the general welfare.

Take the minimum-wage law for women and children employed in the industry of my State and other States, where women and children were exploited by private industry. Private industry could not or did not control the situation. Many employers wanted to, but they could not because if they did they would increase their production cost with reference to unscrupulous competitors, and as a result a small group of unscrupulous business men affected everyone in the same field of business activity; so that all were compelled, whether they wanted to or not, to employ the tactics and the practices of this small, unscrupulous group.

The 48-hour law for women and children in my State and in other States, and the regulatory boards for public utilities, were necessary to control abuses. The charges upon the general public being unreasonable, and because of other actions employed by public utilities who had a monopoly and who occupied a special position, which practices were inconsistent with the welfare of the general public, the Government had to step in, extending every time its secondary function of government in order to meet and control a situation affecting the general welfare. The furnishing of water by cities and towns to its own inhabitants is a secondary function of government. The maintenance of our roads is a secondary function of government. The purposes of this bill come clearly within the purview of the same principle.

If conditions exist which require consideration somewhere, the continuance of which conditions would be harmful to the general welfare; and if private industry or the agency out of which they arise are unable to control them, it is the duty of Government to enact legislation which will try and meet the problem and determine it for the general welfare and the benefit of our people.

Mr. Chairman, let us examine the situation further. In performing duties devolving upon government as a necessary extension of its secondary functions, the shoe must pinch somewhere. Someone has got to pay extra taxes; someone has to assume increased burdens. It is necessary for the general welfare of all.

I recognize the burden that government is imposing, but I recognize, on the other side, that there is a need today to meet the problem contained in this bill, just the same as the law of necessity or of exigency in the past required the extension of the secondary functions of government to meet the problems of those days. It is the same condition, only today it exists with reference to our unemployed and to those unfortunate persons who have gone beyond the age of productivity, that requires our consideration and which prompts this bill. Somebody must bear this burden. Where, with reference to unemployment compensation and contributory annuities, does it belong more rightfully than upon that field out of which the necessity for legislative action rises—the field of private business?

We have reached the day when many employers—in fact, most of our employers are conscious of it—realize that business owes a responsibility to society; that they do not owe it to themselves to earn mere profits. The existing circumstances make it necessary or exigent that something should be done. They owe something to their employees. They owe a duty to the community in which their business is located. There is a growing consciousness on the part of our business men of the social responsibility that they owe to government itself, but it is incapable of expression because a small percentage of unscrupulous competitors fail to cooperate. The result is that honorable, high-type business, comprising at least 90 percent of every business activity, are unable to put into operation that which they would like to, because by so doing a business man would, or fears he will, create a differential against himself, a differential running in favor of his competitor. We say that something must be done, and that government step into the picture and exert its power and influence by extending its secondary field in order to meet a problem requiring solution, in order that the general welfare might benefit. This is our problem today, just the same as the problems I briefly referred to heretofore were the problems of past legislative bodies, just the same as the Congresses of tomorrow and the legislative bodies of the several States of the Union of tomorrow will have their problems to meet.

Mr. Chairman, we cannot close our eyes to facts; we cannot ignore cold evidence, and the cold evidence is that there are 7,500,000 persons today 65 years of age or over; that there are approximately 1,000,000 receiving welfare relief, and of that 1,000,000, 200,000 receive old-age benefits from 29 States and 2 Territories. By 1970 the aged will number 15,000,000, and by the end of the century 19,000,000, of whom it is estimated at least one-third will require assistance. It might be said, "Why should we look ahead 30 years?" The answer is, we should. We cannot close our eyes to the fact that we owe a duty to the future. We cannot legislate today to adequately meet the conditions that might exist in 1970, but at least we can lay the foundation today so that those of 1970 and later will be able to more easily meet the problems that might confront them. One million or more persons cannot continue to receive such aid from the Government without a loss of self-respect and without its effects being harmful to our Government and our people.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I hesitate to interrupt the gentleman in his splendid address, but I simply want to say that I believe Victor Hugo gave a statement which it would be well to put in the RECORD at this time, when he said: "The smoothing out of rough places is the great policy of God." I am certain the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] has expressed the same sentiments, that we owe a duty to those less fortunate than ourselves.

Mr. McCORMACK. The duty and responsibility of the Government in the assumption of these social problems is upon the theory that the strong must and should take care of the weak where the circumstances call for and justify it. None of us know what is liable to happen to us in the journey of life. Misfortune may visit us. While we are all born equal under the law, equality stops there. We are not all born under the same environment. We are not born with the same mentality. We are not all born with the same productive abilities.

Some men may be mentally brilliant and weak physically; other men may be strong physically and weak mentally. Some of us are born with a desire to save in order to have security in old age, while others are not. We have got to consider this question from the angle of a nation of 125,000,000 people. We cannot establish what we individually possess as the standard for everyone else. We have got to realize that the strength or the weakness of our Nation is represented by the collective strength or the weakness of all of our people. We have got to realize that these problems exist, and while I wish they did not exist, yet they do, and some agency must meet them. What agency is left to meet them in an adequate manner other than the agency of Government?

Of course, someone must assume the burden. It is the strong who naturally must and should assume a burden of this kind, the continued existence of which is harmful. Why should not business during the productive period of an employee's life assume in part at least this responsibility? When an employee reaches old age, business lets him go. Unlike an old piece of machinery that can be thrown away or sold, a human being cannot be sold. He can be thrown out, but not sold. After employment ceases and old age is arrived at, with no resources, society must assume the burden. That has unfortunately been our experience of the past. If this is so, it is only proper that as a part of the cost of production, business should assume the responsibility of establishing a fund out of which reasonable benefits will come to the unemployed and out of which earned benefits will come in the case of the old and the aged.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Massachusetts 5 additional minutes.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Chairman, we have been listening to a very extraordinary address by one of the ablest men in public life. The gentleman has referred to an utterance of mine, but I would like to lay emphasis upon the very thing he is emphasizing and have it included in his address, namely, there is just one source for all this, and that is the wealth-producing agencies of this Nation, and when the Government exercises its secondary powers in regulating that agency, instead of wrapping it in grave clothes, it ought to make its path easy to discharge this necessary function.

Mr. McCORMACK. I agree with the gentleman, but I disagree with him about the dangers. My friend, I think, will agree that business owes a duty to society during the productive period of a person's life.

Mr. EATON. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. My friend talks about taxes. I have stood on this floor and I have opposed the imposition of heavy taxes. I voted against a conference report last year. But let us face the facts again. If we imposed anywhere near the taxes in America that are being imposed in England today, we would more than balance not only our ordinary Budget but we would meet our emergency expenditures. [Applause.] Let us be frank about it. Let me illustrate:

A single person in England with an earned income of $4,850 pays $664.85 income tax. In the United States he pays $138.40, and in New York State the State income tax is $115.50, totaling $253.90.

A British couple without children would pay $589.50, while in the United States, including the New York State income tax, the payment would be $145.30.

With one child, in England, the taxpayer would pay an income tax of $534.70, while the United States and New York State income tax combined—and the other States are somewhat comparable—would be $117.

With two children, in England, the taxpayer would pay an income tax of $480.15, while in the United States, Federal and New York State, he would pay a total tax of $73.36.

And so it goes; and the same thing applies to business.

I do not want to impose heavy taxes, but the fact must remain that business and income taxes in this country, under existing circumstances, are not unreasonable.

Mr. EATON. The gentleman does not consider the English condition of taxation so ideal that he would like to have it reproduced in America, does he?

Mr. McCORMACK. I answered the gentleman. I told the gentleman I would not want taxes to be comparable, nevertheless, in an emergency such as this it is evident there is a great disparity. The people of England have assumed their burden, they have assumed their social problems, and in the United States because of the passage of one of the most progressive pieces of legislation, to meet the demand and the problems of the day, the argument of property, which is related to taxes, is advanced in opposition to it.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact in this connection that the British are balancing their budget and have announced that they are on the high-road to prosperity, and we were good enough to give them nearly $10,000,000,000, cutting down their taxes, and then the King said, "I will go with you 50-50", and canceled the rest of it.

Mr. McCORMACK. Correct.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I have been trying to find out from Members of Congress how we are going to be able to balance the Budget. The gentleman just stated how they were doing this in England. Is the Democratic Party today going to assume its responsibility and do what their plank on this subject in the party platform calls for, and that is balance the Budget; and are they going to say to the American people that we are not going to put this burden on our children but that we are going to assume it?

Mr. McCORMACK. My friend is a very fine gentleman. I do not think he entertains the thoughts in his mind which sometimes he unconsciously expresses. [Laughter.] My friend can never permit any other Member to take the floor but what he injects something partisan. Certainly the last thing I was trying to do in this mild, humble effort of mine was to contribute anything of a partisan nature.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 more minute.

Mr. McCORMACK. I have one more thought that I want to leave with you. The old-age-pension provision is an effort to meet the problem that immediately confronts us. One may disagree as to its adequacy, and I respect their right to disagree. The committee has done its best. It has presented a fine bill, as it is presented in its entirety. I have made an effort in the Ways and Means Committee to have the amount to each State increased to $20 a month. If we only confine ourselves to a remedy for the immediate situation, we have partially failed. We should try to meet the causes which bring about dependency in old age. That is what prompts the passage of the contributory annuity provisions. That is the purpose of the pay-roll contribution of employer and employee—for the employees and employers to contribute to a fund from which an earned annuity, one as a matter of right, and not a gratuity based on need, will be received during their lives. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CASTELLOW] such time as he desires.

Mr. CASTELLOW. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with deepest interest and sympathy to the many splendid speeches made on the bill before us for consideration which impresses me as being, by far, the most important legislation that has come before this body since I have been a Member of the House.

In the time allotted me, and for which I am grateful, it is not my purpose to undertake to discuss the mechanics of the bill, nor yet its superstructure, for these things have been discussed meticulously by the splendid and very intelligent gentlemen composing the Ways and Means Committee, as well as by many other earnest, honest, and intelligent Members. It is my purpose to endeavor to explore the subject just a little further and try to take in a bit of new territory.

Someone has said it is not enough to speak, but to speak truly. So let us be reminded it is not sufficient to legislate, but to legislate wisely. In so doing, and to facilitate that purpose, it behooves us to consider not only the character of building we would construct but to examine most carefully the foundation upon which it is to be erected. Let us not repeat the folly of him who built upon the sands but, on the contrary, test the foundation and carefully determine its ability to support the weight to which it is subjected. In my judgment, there is a formula in legislation and government which parallels, and is analogous to, the well-known principle in physics: that we cannot prize up more than we prize down. This being true, it becomes not only important to determine what is to be prized up, or benefited by legislation, but what is to be prized down and depressed. It might be prudent to recognize the fact that there could be a limit to even American enterprise and ability to withstand a constant drain upon its resources. We are even now becoming conscious of the ominous rumblings of uneasiness, if not discontent, caused by the rising of living expenses as a result of processing taxes and other Government activities. Let us not be deluded by the idea that the Government produces anything of value or has magical power—what it gives it must take, and its taking, since we are not a plundering nation, must be from its own subjects, and sooner or later each will be called upon, in some form or another, to bear his proportionate burden. In short, there is a limit to what the traffic will bear.

Of the needs of the old we have heard much. Who is there with feelings so dead and heart so callous as to render it necessary to have his sensibilities stirred by reference to their needs? Who is there with conscience so seared as not to be reached by the outstretched and pleading hands of the unfortunate and helpless, whether old or young? It is all too true that to perceive them one needs but open his eyes to the conditions surrounding us. As was said by the Master, "For the poor always ye have with you * * *." Were it not for our weakness and the instability of our nature, this need not be true. Yet, without giving this consideration, we reckon in vain. Providence has placed within the reach of mankind that with which our every need could be supplied and might be speedily accomplished for every inhabitant of this globe but for the existence of one outstanding trait of human nature—selfishness. The expression occurs in the translated version of the Bible that the love of money is the root of all evil. I contend that this is a misinterpretation of the original text, for beyond question there are things which are evil but have no connection or relation to the love of money. Rape, seduction, and, in many instances, murder might be cited as examples. The original expression must have been, for it is undoubtedly true, "the love of self is the root of all evil." There is nothing evil done by men that is not prompted by the love of self. Although it is the basis for the wickedness and infamy of mankind, it is likewise responsible for practically all human progress. Even ambition itself is born of selfishness. Selfishness is to humanity what steam is to a locomotive; you cannot operate without it and too much is destructive.

This humanitarian bill recognizes that principle, for by its provisions States are to be induced to provide more liberally for their unfortunates by affording some the opportunity of getting more, or otherwise receiving less, from the Federal Treasury in proportion to their local contributions, thereby coercing them, so to speak, by an appeal to selfishness. If any are too weak or poor to comply with the terms—and it has often been asserted upon the floor of this House that many are—then will it again come to pass, "For whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance: but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath." It might not be irrelevant to suggest at this point that some of the legislation we have already enacted may be operating in this way. In addition to this, and judging from reports, it may be that the small and weaker units of industry have a similar cause for complaint.

The question has often recurred here as to the necessity of Federal legislation upon subjects which the individual States could handle if so desired. This was discussed in the early part of this debate in reference to the unemployment-insurance feature of the bill, and it was explained by saying that where a State imposed the burden of such a tax upon its industries, such industries found it impossible to successfully compete with the industries of other States where similar taxes were not imposed. This seems logical, for the tax necessarily increases the cost of production. Assuming, then, that this is a correct statement of the result as between States of the Union, what will be the result as between the industries of the Nation operating under such tax when their products come into competition with similar products of industries operating in countries which have no such provision. Is it not, therefore, logical to assume that such competition cannot be met and that under these conditions we will be driven from world trade and must become self-contained? If this conclusion is consistent, I then submit to the Members of this House as to whether or not we have earnestly considered and fully estimated the result to American industry. If curtailment of production results, what will be the effect upon those employed in the plants which under the conditions must curtail production, or perhaps close? There is a vicious circle which legislators should ever strive to avoid, for ill-advised remedies are often disastrous. Can this question be answered by saying that other countries have enacted such laws with no harmful results? It may be that such laws could easily be enacted by many countries without danger where their standards of living and wages paid are much lower than ours, even after their cost of production is hiked by such legislation. Let us beware lest we commit the folly of not only discouraging but destroying the spirit of that class of our citizenship which, inspired by a spirit of enterprise and thrift, have contributed so much to the building, in the shortest period, the greatest country of which civilization can boast. Shall we, in an ill-advised moment, while chafing under temporary adversity though still enjoying comforts and even luxuries of which our sturdy ancestors never dreamed, exchange for a mess of porridge the birthright which from them we have inherited?

A most wise and beneficent Providence prepared and gave to us without cost broad acres of fertile plains set with grass to which it was adapted and provided with innumerable reservoirs in the form of lakes to store up and preserve in time of plenty the waters which by relays were brought from the distant seas—may the time never come when we will regret that we did not emulate nature's example in planning—but, with a beclouded vision and an ill-advised hope of wresting from this wonderful soil even greater benefits and profits, our farmers, to increase their acreage, drained these lakes, and not being satisfied with the profits yielded by the greatest of natural pastures, plowed up and destroyed the grass which was the very source of their wealth and income. Heart-rending now are the pictures that are painted of a barren waste swept by devastating winds accompanied by unnatural clouds while the discouraged and frightened inhabitants of this erstwhile prosperous region are broadcasting the appeal, "Come over and help us or we perish."

It is not my purpose to be critical as I am only recalling the facts taken from statements made by the splendid Representatives of these citizens on the floor of this House. Neither would I chide them with their folly, for who is there to boast of a monopoly on wisdom?

Confronted with the results of a similar lack of foresight in the South, where erosion has taken a frightful toll, we should not assume to occupy the seat of the critical, but in sympathetic unison with our brothers of the West, endeavor at least to profit by experiences of the past, the accomplishment of which is the real test of wisdom. But in this connection let us be warned that since we have evidenced at least no stupendous amount of wisdom in our management and treatment of those bountiful gifts of nature, it might be wise not only to stop, look, and listen but to do some real thinking before we go too far in overriding and discarding the prophetlike vision of those who made possible our great inheritance. The foundation of the wealth which we are dissipating, the inherited fortunes which without stint we are mortgaging, were largely produced by those who have gone before. Let us not destroy in the hope of greater immediate gain, as we did with the fertile plains of the West and the rolling hills of the South, the gifts of nature, the products of their toil. How easy it is for benefit to assume the form of bounties which in turn metamorphose into doles, those dread barnacles attaching themselves with disastrous results to the weakened ship of state. Let those who are dissatisfied with reasonable benefits from our National Treasury not delude themselves with the idea that because a grain of a given medicine might benefit the patient, that an ounce of the same would necessarily cure.

I am reminded just here of a story I heard or read in the almost forgotten past, of a subject who applied to his king for a gift from his amassed quantity of gold. The citizen received no rebuff from his king, but on the contrary, after being supplied with a substantial and commodious bag, he was conducted by the representative of the king to the vault wherein was stored in fabulous quantity this most alluring metal and was there informed that the king had concluded to give him all the gold he could carry at one turn from the vault in the bag provided, but only on condition that he should place all he desired therein before he measured by a test of his strength its weight. This seemed fair enough, so with gloating eyes and eager hands, he piled in the precious metal until he began to wonder as to its weight and his ability to carry it. Presently he knew that the bulging sides of the bag indicated much weight, but his avarice would not permit him to desist from adding just a little more, and a little more, until finally, when he did conclude to shoulder his precious burden and go, to his great surprise he could not budge the bag. So under the terms of the bargain he was forced, with hopes dissipated and faltering step, to leave the vault without a penny of its shining wealth. This should remind those who would reach their hands too far and too often into the Public Treasury that even a good thing can be overdone. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MITCHELL] such time as he desires.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, in title I of the bill under consideration the Federal Government grants, in aid to the States, pensions to persons who have reached the age of 65 years. The Government will match what the different States put up to the amount of $15 per month to each person. On June 8, 1934, President Roosevelt said in a message to Congress:

> Our task of reconstruction does not require the creation of new and strange values. It is rather the finding of the way once more to known, but to some degree forgotten, ideals and values. If the means and details are in some instances new, the objectives are as permanent as human nature.

Among our objectives, I place the security of the men, women, and children of the Nation first.

The security for the individual and for the family concerns itself primarily with three factors. People want decent homes to live in; they want to locate them where they can engage in productive work; and they want some safeguard against misfortunes, which cannot be wholly eliminated in this man-made world of ours.

And on January 17, 1935, the President made the following statement to Congress:

The establishment of sound means toward a greater future economic security of the American people is dictated by a prudent consideration of the hazards involved in our national life. No one can guarantee this country against the dangers of future depressions, but we can reduce these dangers. We can eliminate many of the factors that cause economic depressions, and we can provide the means of mitigating their results. This plan for economic security is at once a measure of prevention and a method of alleviation. We pay now for the dreadful consequence of economic insecurity—and dearly. This plan presents a more equitable and infinitely less expensive means of meeting these costs. We cannot afford to neglect the plain duty before us. I strongly recommend action to obtain the objectives sought.

To these sentiments we must all agree. It will be more economical to have the present bill enacted into law than the expensive system of maintaining county poorhouses in the different counties of the States and in the different local communities. Let the States cooperate under this law and thus save expense to State and county governments. One-half is to be borne by the Federal Government and one-half by the States, which will operate to relieve the counties of this burden of taxation. It is most expensive now in many counties of my State in Tennessee to care for the aged and infirm, and to keep them in the different county asylums for the poor. A recent bill was passed by the House of Representatives in Tennessee to relieve the counties of this expense and have the State assume the entire obligation. This shows the growing demand for assistance from the larger jurisdiction—State assistance. In turn, our State greatly needs relief from expenses of this kind if it is possible to get it.

More than 8,000,000 people in the United States are over 60 years of age. Many of them are unable to work.

There should not longer be a poorhouse. This is a relic of another age. It belongs to the past. We have substituted the electric light for the candle, the auto for the horse, the machine gun for the musket, the airship for the buggy—let us be progressive in government also—since the depression set in, when the savings of many old people were swept from under them, and they are now destitute. It was through no fault of theirs. They had worked and saved to provide against a rainy day, but in vain. Their near relatives—sons and daughters—are not able to help them.

The bankers, trust companies, and power companies received the earnings of these aged people and then defrauded them out of it.

I favor this bill because it means a new outlook on life for the aged.

They will face security and happiness in the future instead of hunger, humiliation, and the poorhouse. It will make all people more interested in their Government and its perpetuity. They will want their Government to stand, and they themselves will have something to look forward to when the wintry winds blow and they approach the last day, which is to be the common experience of all.

Many States now have a pension law, and most nations of the world except the United States. We are about to take this most important step—already too long delayed. Let us make the aged and infirm free from care and hunger.

A bill of this kind will brighten the outlook on life.

If depressions come in the future, as they will, then the weak and infirm will know the strong arm of the Government is still behind them.

More love for the flag and greater loyalty to it will be the result of passing this legislation.

No greater service could be rendered by the Government. Those who are in business, young and active, and blessed with good health, will not complain at the tax when they know of the great service it is rendering those in need and those who have sacrificed for them in previous years. They will be glad to pay the debt of gratitude they owe the fathers and mothers of America.

Relief rolls will be done away with under the provisions of this bill. This must be done, if possible.

We must reduce the cost of government.

We must do away with unnecessary boards and bureaus. Too many exist in our Government today. Let us abolish them.

Let us do away with unnecessary offices and officers.

Let us reduce expenses in every branch of the Government.

Let us return to the democratic principle of government, that a people are best governed who are least governed.

The care of the weak, the aged, and infirm is a responsibility of government and a service we should render. Let us enact this law and perform that duty. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate this opportunity extended to me to register my views on the pending bill; however, in view of the limited time allotted me, my remarks will necessarily be brief.

I yield to no one in my interest in or zeal for social security, but I am frank to say that the bill under consideration, if not materially amended, will prove to be a dismal disappointment to millions of American citizens who have anxiously hoped to see this Congress enact a measure that would in some substantial degree provide relief for the indigent, aged, and other underprivileged people in our Nation.

In view of the report of the Committee on Economic Security, appointed by the President to investigate and report to him recommendations for legislation on this subject, and in view of the message of the President to the Congress, on January 7 of this year, transmitting the report of his committee, I had fondly hoped that some measure would be submitted to our body which, if enacted into law, would meet the demands of this problem in which the American people are so vitally concerned at this hour. But, Mr. Chairman, after a careful study of the bill before us, which is supposed to have the authorship and backing of the President, and after listening to the discussions that we have had on this measure, I am fully convinced that the bill before us as an instrument of relief is an absolute futility—an idle gesture. Unless this bill is amended giving it more definite and unqualified terms to provide for the people it is heralded to aid, I shudder to contemplate the consternation, the disappointment, and the despair that will follow its enactment.

Mr. Chairman, there are now more than 7,000,000 people in the United States over 65 years of age, and, due to the wide publicity and propaganda that has been given to this subject during the past 2 years, a large majority of them are expecting to receive material benefits under this measure immediately upon its enactment. Judging by the thousands of appealing letters and petitions that I have had on this subject, and the numerous personal contacts that I have had with constituents who are hopeful of becoming the beneficiaries of this legislation, I am sure that a large majority of this vast number are thinking of practically nothing else but the day when this legislation will be enacted into law and they will receive their first check sent them by a generous Government. At this very moment they have their eyes focused on Washington, and their hearts, tender with years, are throbbing with anxiety in anticipation of the passage of a measure which will be of substantial assistance to them by providing some means to acquire the comforts of life in their declining days. I visited the little town in which I live recently, and during the 2 days I spent there scores of old, decrepit, and gray-haired mothers and fathers who had worn out their bodies in honest toil, but who had accumulated little, if any, of this world's goods, approached me and, with the agony of desperation depicted in their haggard faces, inquired of me as to the fate of "their bill", the old-age-pension bill.

Just picture for a moment the utter despair and the consternation of such people as these throughout the length and breadth of the land when they discover that the Congress of the United States has given them an old-age-pension law which is so complicated and involved in red-tape and joker provisions as to make it practically a downright nullity. When they realize that when they ask their Government for bread it gave them a stone, you can begin to imagine their despondency, and worse still, their resentment and loss of faith in the integrity of constituted authorities.

According to the terms of this bill the Government agrees to give to those over 65 years of age a pension in such amount as may be matched up to $15 per month by the State in which such persons reside. Therefore, only persons in those States that are financially able to meet this condition will be benefitted by this legislation as now proposed. During the course of this debate it has been repeatedly asserted by representatives of what some are disposed to refer to as "backward" States that a large number of States are so beset with financial difficulties that it will be impossible for them to qualify for the benefits of this legislation. What a spectacle it would be, Mr. Chairman, for the Government to be taking care of the aged and helpless in one State while the same class of citizens were denied these benefits in another State, even an adjoining State! The legislature of my own state, Tennessee, has been in session since January 1 and is scheduled to adjourn within the next few days. It will not convene again for 2 years unless convoked in special session by proclamation of the chief executive. No provision has been made by our legislature to anticipate the provisions of this bill and participate in its benefits. The same is doubtless true of many other commonwealths of the Union.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 minutes more.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Anticipating that this measure will probably pass in practically its present form, it being an administration bill, and realizing its gravity to the indigent aged of my State, I have today wired the Governor of Tennessee as follows:

Hon. HILL MCALLISTER, Governor, Nashville, Tenn.:

You are doubtless aware that the so-called "social-security bill" is now being considered by the House of Representatives here. The terms of this proposed legislation as written make mandatory that each State put up an equal amount to that of the Federal Government, the share of the Federal Government not to exceed $15, if the State shall participate in the benefits of the act. If provision is not made by our legislature to comply with this requirement, our aged will receive no benefits whatsoever under the bill proposed. It is therefore manifestly imperative that proper action be taken by our legislature before its adjournment.

J. WILL TAYLOR.

I contend, Mr. Chairman, that it is only common justice that pensions to our aged should start simultaneously in every State in the sisterhood, and this bill should so provide.

Another subterfuge in this bill will be found in the fact that it only carries an appropriation of $49,750,000. As I have previously stated, there are more than 7,000,000 people in the United States over 65 years of age. Suppose only one-half of that number applied. They would only receive the paltry sum of $28.10 per year, which would be $2.35 per month, of 7½ cents per day. A close scrutiny of this measure will reveal many other such ridiculous fallacies. We have heard a great deal about a "pauper's dole" during this discussion. Ye gods, this does not even rise to that dignity, Mr. Chairman. [Laughter.]

In apologizing for the insufficiency of this appropriation, the advocates of the bill point out that provision is made for this year only and that larger appropriations will follow. They attempt to justify this argument by further pointing out that only a very few States will qualify immediately, which to me is the chief abomination of the proposition. The downright injustice of this proposal is perfectly manifest. If we are going to provide for the aged of New York, Massachusetts, and other opulent States, for God's sake let us also provide for the aged in Arkansas, Kentucky, Tennessee, and other less fortunate States at the same time. [Applause.] The aged of every section of the Nation are entitled to the same treatment at the hands of their Government and at the same time. To excite the hopes and aspirations of the aged of our country to have them later disillusioned, as they inevitably will be under this plan, is unworthy of this great Nation, and if we thus trifle with their feelings our act will go down in history as the outstanding crime of the century. [Applause.]

(The time having expired, Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee was yielded 3 minutes more.)

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. The bill before us today is, in my opinion, a veritable "gold brick", a delusion, and a snare—a hollow mockery of the "purest ray serene"! When this debate is concluded, and we take the bill up under the 5-minute rule, let us strip it of its persiflage, its camouflage, its sophistries, and its subtleties and redeem our admitted obligation to the aged and helpless of our land who on account of penury and infirmity and the vicissitudes of life are unable to take care of themselves. Let us enact a law that will not only be a credit to ourselves but one that will become the dignity and respectability of this, the greatest Nation in the world. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, many have seen fit to condemn the so-called "Townsend plan" and have resorted to all sorts of satire, ridicule, and invective in expressing their condemnation of the measure. Some have seen fit to characterize it as "cockeyed", and have referred to it as a "legislative monstrosity." I want to warn you, my friends, that if this bill now under consideration passes in its present form, replete as it is with uncertainties, inequalities, and incongruities, mixed with a certain amount of manifest insincerity, you will do more to popularize and promote the Townsend plan than all that the Townsendites could possibly do to advance their cause. I have about come to the conclusion that the modified Townsend plan is not so bad as it has been pictured, and with a little more amending I might support it myself. Certainly some plan of merit, justice, and integrity must be evolved to meet this most vital and imperative situation.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Why should we not do something now instead of the distant future?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. That is exactly what I am insisting upon.

Mr. Chairman, another hardship and inequality in this measure is presented in the section providing for unemployment insurance. I am inclined to favor the principle of unemployment insurance, but what are you going to do with the so-called "unemployables"—those thousands of economic unfortunates between the ages of 45 and 65, who are refused employment in industry solely on account of age?

(The time having again expired, Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee was yielded 2 minutes more.)

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I live in a mining community, and I personally know that persons over 45 who apply for a job at the mines are rejected on account of their age regardless of their fitness for work. This policy is not confined alone to the mining industry. It is employed in practically every shop and factory throughout the Nation and is even practiced by the Government itself. It has been estimated that there are approximately 8,000,000 of this class in the United States today. Only yesterday I received a communication signed by 25 citizens of a town in my district who are suffering from this handicap. Their letter to me is as follows:

HARRIMAN, TENN., April 14, 1935.

Hon. J. WILL TAYLOR,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We would like for you to inform us what will be done with men over the age of 50 years, since they are out of work and are not allowed any relief.

J. B. Gukes, J. M. Bolt, John Harmon, Nute Wayrick, J. W. Gorden, C. C. Kernes, Horace G. Campbell, Mrs. Mollie Turpen, Cal Goodman, John Harmon, Roe Goddard, A. W. Johnston, W. H. Harmon, J. H. Whaley, T. Broustitter, J. D. Whaley, Fred Pyatt, R. W. McCormack, W. D. Bennett, A. J. Hall, H. W. LaRue, Henry Graham, Charlie Carl, Nick Smith, Joe Landreth.

This situation, Mr. Chairman, is a most serious menace to the welfare of our Nation, and something must be done about it. This bill takes no account of this class, which makes up a very large part of our population. These people would prefer not to have Government relief as such. What they want is an honest-to-God job that will enable them to provide for themselves and their families. [Applause.] It is a sacred obligation of this Government to get behind private industry and stimulate its activities to the end that permanent employment may be afforded to this class. Emergency Government work is all right in its place; but, of course, this can only be temporary. This artificial "shot in the arm" practice should be discarded, and the agencies of the Government should turn their attention to the resuscitation and rehabilitation of private industry. Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, this cannot be accomplished by the Government trying to run everybody's business or by the Government entering into general competition with private enterprise. If there ever was a time when we should have less government in business and more business in government it is now!

(The time having again expired, Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee was given 10 minutes more.)

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. When Mr. Roosevelt was campaigning for the Presidency in 1932, by public utterance he repeatedly deplored the fact that there were 10,000,000 people in the United States out of work, and solemnly promised, if elected to the Presidency, to immediately find employment for them. He has already been in office 2 years, and, according to statistics compiled by the American Federation of Labor, there are today more than 10,000,000 idle workmen in our country. And I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that if the administration continues its reciprocal treaty negotiations whereby our protective-tariff walls are rapidly being broken down and our home markets, as a result thereof, glutted by the products of the pauper labor of Europe and Asia, very shortly another 5,000,000, now employed in industry, will be added to the ranks of the unemployed in America. The textile industry of this country is today threatened with paralysis on account of the importations from Japan and other countries, where labor is paid only a small percent of what it receives in the United States.

In the Washington Herald this morning there appears a news item under an Atlanta date line, saying that, with demoralization spreading through Georgia textile industry as a result of unsettled conditions over the processing tax and cut-throat Japanese competition, three more mills announced shut-downs yesterday, throwing more than 1,000 operatives out of work. Quite a number of textile mills in that area had previously ceased operation for the same reasons, and the item further stated that a number of other mills, including the Flint River Cotton Mill, employing 400 persons, were preparing to close down. The story further states that "chaotic conditions exist in the industry because cheap Japanese imports which have increased 2,000 percent in the past year are stealing domestic markets." The story further adds that "the flood of Japanese goods are selling at prices far below the cost of manufacturing the same goods in Georgia mills." The same distressful conditions exist in the textile industry throughout the New England States where a large number of plants have discontinued operation, and unless some drastic action is taken to correct the situation this blight of industry will become epidemic throughout the Nation.

This tragic condition, Mr. Chairman, is not confined alone to the textile industry. Other industries are likewise affected and from identical causes. Even the great agricultural industry is not immune to this creeping economic paralysis proceeding from foreign importations. It is illuminating to note that from July 1, 1934, to March 1, 1935, 6,509,998 bushels of corn were imported from abroad, a large portion of which came from Mexico and the Argentine.

It is perfectly apparent that this condition greatly aggravates our already grave unemployment problem and adds materially to our national burden. In the face of this deplorable picture the present administration continues to hug to its bosom the long since exploded fetish of "free trade", oblivious of the brave struggle of trade and industry in the United States for existence. Surely the fallacy and absurdity of such a pied-piper policy is perfectly obvious to even the "wayfaring man though he be a fool."

(The time having again expired, Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee was granted 2 minutes more.)

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I apologize, Mr. Chairman, for injecting a tariff argument into this debate, but the protective tariff principle is so interwoven with the subject at hand that its germaneness is beyond challenge.

Again, my colleagues, I was very much disappointed when I found that this bill makes no provision whatever for the hopelessly crippled and blind of our Nation. It seems to me that if there is any part of our citizenship that needs and merits the solicitude and sympathy of our Government it is those who have lost their sight and who are doomed to permanent blindness, and those who must hobble through life on crutches or lay bed-ridden on account of the ravages of disease or as a result of injury.

I regret that my time will not permit me to discuss the other features of this bill. I have spoken at length on the old-age-pension title because I feel very keenly our obligation to the aged. I am greatly interested in child welfare, public health, vocational rehabilitation, and the other problems which this measure is designed to improve and promote. But these problems, my friends, must be dealt with free from technical ambiguity and in straightforward American fashion.

While the American taxpayer is groaning under a burden of taxation never dreamed of by our fathers, I have faith in his philanthropy and patriotism to believe that he will never complain of whatever taxation may be necessary to relieve human misery of every character in America.

And now in conclusion, I wish to make the prophecy that if this measure, without material amendment, is enacted into law it will prove to be the greatest boomerang this or any other administration has ever encountered. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

Mr. CONNERY. And, Mr. Chairman, I thank my handsome and distinguished colleague [Mr. TREADWAY] for granting me these few minutes. The only reason that I want them is to put into the RECORD an amendment that I am going to offer when we start to read the security bill today or tomorrow. The amendment which I shall offer is the Lundeen bill, and I shall read it now so that Members who have not read the bill will know just what the bill contains. No one so far has shown any good reason why the Lundeen bill should not be adopted in preference to the bill now before the House. I believe it is far superior to the bill before the House, and when the security bill is read I shall offer the Lundeen bill as an amendment as follows:

Mr. CONNERY offers the following amendment: On page 2, before title I, insert the following as a new title:

"TITLE I

"SECTION 1. The Secretary of Labor is hereby authorized and directed to provide for the immediate establishment of a system of unemployment insurance for the purpose of providing compensation for all workers and farmers above 18 years of age, unemployed through no fault of their own. Such compensation shall be equal to average local wages, but shall in no case be less than $10 per week plus $3 for each dependent. Workers willing and able to do full-time work but unable to secure full-time employment shall be entitled to receive the difference between their earnings and the average local wages for full-time employment. The minimum compensation guaranteed by this act shall be increased in conformity with rises in the cost of living. Such unemployment insurance shall be administered and controlled, and the minimum compensation shall be adjusted by workers and farmers under rules and regulations which shall be prescribed by the Secretary of Labor in conformity with the purposes and provisions of this act through unemployment insurance commissions directly elected by members of workers' and farmers' organizations.

"SEC. 2. The Secretary of Labor is hereby further authorized and directed to provide for the immediate establishment of other forms of social insurance for the purpose of providing compensation for all workers and farmers who are unable to work because of sickness, old age, maternity, industrial injury, or any other disability. Such compensation shall be the same as provided by section 1 of this act for unemployment insurance and shall be administered in like manner. Compensation for disability because of maternity shall be paid to women during the period of 8 weeks previous and 8 weeks following childbirth.

"SEC. 3. All moneys necessary to pay compensation guaranteed by this act and the cost of establishing and maintaining the administration of this act shall be paid by the Government of the United States. All such moneys are hereby authorized to be appropriated out of all funds in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated. The benefits of this act shall be extended to workers, whether they be industrial, agricultural, domestic, office, or professional workers, and to farmers, without discrimination because of age, sex, race, color, religious or political opinion or affiliation. No worker or farmer shall be disqualified from receiving the compensation guaranteed by this act because of past participation in strikes, or refusal to work in place of strikers, or at less than average local or trade-union wages, or under unsafe or unsanitary conditions, or where hours are longer than the prevailing union standards of a particular trade or locality, or at an unreasonable distance from home."

The Lundeen bill will do justice to the masses of the people without laying a heavy burden upon their backs. I hope the House will pass this amendment, which will make life more bearable for the people who have been mercilessly exploited by those who can see only the almighty dollar as their god and have no sympathy for those whose toil brings them all their comforts and luxuries.

COST OF ADEQUATE, GENUINE UNEMPLOYMENT, OLD-AGE, AND SOCIAL SECURITY—SOURCES OF REVENUE FOR FINANCING THE LUNDEEN WORKERS' BILL, H. R. 2827

SUMMARY OF ESTIMATED COST

To determine the cost of the social insurance which would be provided in H. R. 2827 requires several estimates, which should be used with caution. In the first place, the United States has no current basis for ascertaining accurately the number of unemployed.

The second and more important point requiring caution relates to the estimate of the effect of social insurance upon purchasing power, and its consequent results in decreasing the amount of unemployment through stimulation of reemployment. No experience in this country is available to indicate the extent to which an increase in consumers' purchasing power for those in the lower income groups would stimulate production and increase employment.

If it is assumed, however, that the entire amount of benefits paid under the provisions of this bill would appear in the market as new purchasing power, economists have calculated that 60 percent of this total would become available as wages and salaries. Therefore, on the basis of given average wages and salaries, it can be estimated how many persons could be reemployed, and this would result in a corresponding decrease in the number of unemployed eligible for benefits, and therefore in a reduction of costs.

Having in mind the above cautions, it may be said at once that if there be 10,000,000 unemployed, the annual gross cost, after taking care otherwise of those who should receive old-age pensions and those who are unemployed because of sickness or disability, and eliminating those under 18 years of age, to whom the bill does not apply, would be $8,235,000,000. Deducting from this the estimated decrease in the cost of unemployment insurance on account of the reemployment of workers following the establishment of a social-insurance program, $6,090,000,000, and adding to it the cost of old-age pensions, sickness, disability, accident, and maternity insurance, and deducting present annual expenditures for relief amounting to $3,875,000,000, we would have a net annual increase for the Federal Government imposed by the provisions of the bill amounting to $4,060,000,000.

If the number of unemployed be equal to the average number estimated as unemployed in 1934, as 14,021,000, then the annual net increase in cost, after deducting present expenditures for relief and estimating the reemployment which would follow adequate social insurance, would be $5,800,000,000.

The estimate of total costs of the program for social insurance under the bill should be compared with the amount that workers have lost in wages and salaries since the beginning of the depression. According to estimates published in the Survey of Current Business for January 1935, total income paid out to labor since 1929 was as follows (in millions):

Total income	$52,700	$48,400	$40,700	$31,500	$29,300
Loss from 1929		4,300	12,000	21,200	23,400

The total loss to workers in wages and salaries in the first 4 years of the depression has amounted to $60,900,000,000. It is with these huge losses sustained by American workers during these 4 years that the costs of security provided by the bill should be compared. Furthermore, considering the inadequacy of present relief measures, it must be realized that the cost of truly adequate relief would be the cost of this bill.

AUTHORITY FOR ESTIMATES

These estimates of the cost of an adequate unemployment, old-age, and social-security program are based on the statement of Dr. Joseph M. Gilman, economist of the College of the City of New York, who testified at the hearings held by the House Labor Subcommittee, representing the Interprofessional Association for Social Insurance. In accordance with permission granted me, I will now submit for the RECORD portions of Dr. Gilman's statement, taken from the hearings.

The first excerpt from Dr. Gilman's statement shows the estimated cost of the Lundeen bill on a basis of 10,000,000 unemployed, and may be found on page 585 of the hearings.

Cost of 10,000,000 unemployed

Class C, 1930 Unemployment Census (persons out of a job and unable to work on account of sickness or disability)	172,661

Total	446, 249

NOTE.—According to report of President's Committee on Economic Security, which states that 2.25 percent of all industrial workers are at all times incapacitated, it would seem that the total of 446,249 badly underestimates the amount of sickness and disability.

PRESENT COST OF UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

It should be made clear that the cost of the Lundeen bill will not be over and above present expenditures for relief, but will replace these expenditures. At the present time, according to Dr. Gilman's statement, the costs of unemployment relief are as follows:

I. Federal Government (source of statistics: General Budget Summary, Treasury Department, estimated expenditures for year ending June 30, 1935, schedule 3):
(1) Federal Emergency Relief Administration	$1, 733, 208, 700
(2) Civil Works Administration	13, 842, 100
(3) Emergency conservation	402, 363, 000
(4) Relief of unemployment	100, 000, 000
Public works:
(3) Loans and grants to municipalities	166, 300, 000
(5) Public highways	428, 600, 000
Total expenditures of a relief character	2, 844, 313, 800
II. State and city (basis: Federal Emergency Relief Administration reports)	400, 000, 000
Total unemployment relief	3, 250, 000, 000

PRESENT COST OF OLD-AGE RELIEF

Present expenditures by National, State, and local government bodies for old-age relief may also be deducted from the additional cost of the Lundeen bill. Present old-age expenditures are as follows:

1. Federal Government to veterans and widows (report of Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, 1933)	$235, 000, 000
2 State old-age assistance (President's Committee on Economic Security)	43, 000, 000
3. Industrial and trade-union pensions (President's Committee on Economic Security)	100, 000, 000
4. All other (rough estimate)	50, 000, 000
Total	428, 000, 000

PRESENT COST OF SICKNESS, DISABILITY, AND ACCIDENTS

The National Safety Council estimates for 1932 that wage loss from occupational disabilities was $370,000,000. Compensation for such loss is estimated as $200,000,000.

TOTAL PRESENT ANNUAL EXPENDITURES FOR RELIEF

Dr. Gilman's estimate of the total present cost of relief for unemployment, old age, and sickness at the present time is $3,875,000,000. This is based on the tables just presented.

REDUCTION IN COST OF WORKERS' BILL FOLLOWING PASSAGE

The estimates just given of the cost of the workers' bill represent the cost for the first year. The following tables show the estimated decreases in the cost following enactment of the measure, resulting from increased purchasing power.

The first table shows the total national income and the fraction of that income which is paid out in wages. Below that is the ratio of salaries and wages to income produced on a percentage basis.

SOURCES OF FUNDS

Now I wish to answer the question often asked: "Where will you get the money for this program?"

It has been pointed out that an important difference between H. R. 2827, the Lundeen bill, and other proposals is in the source of funds. Other proposals—including the Doughton bill—depend on the building up of reserves in advance of payment of benefits, these reserves to be secured by a tax on pay rolls. Several serious objections are made to this method. In an article in the Annalist, published by the New York Times on February 22, 1935, by Elgin Groseclose, professor of economics, University of Oklahoma, under the title, "The Chimera of Unemployment Reserves Under the American Money System", attention is called to the provisions in H. R. 4120 in these words:

> The Wagner bill, as introduced in Congress, sets up in the Federal Treasury an "unemployment trust fund", in which is to be held all moneys received under the provisions of the act, and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to invest these moneys, except such amount as is now required to meet current withdrawals, in a defined category of obligations of the United States or obligations guaranteed as to both principal and interest by the United States.

The Annalist article summarizes the objections to these reserves for unemployment insurance as follows:

> (1) Financial reserves can be effective only in cases where contingencies can be calculated and determined by actuarial methods and where these contingencies arise in sufficient regularity to permit the arrangement of reserves in accordance therewith. (2) The incidence of depressions are irregular and unpredictable, and hence defy actuarial procedure. (3) Purchasing power cannot be stored up en masse under our money system, which is a system of debt, rather than metallic circulation. (4) The attempt to create unemployment reserve will intensify booms. (5) Unemployment reserves are incapable of mobilization when needed and any attempt to mobilize them will only result in further intensification of depressions.

Testimony before the Committee on Labor on the Lundeen bill (H. R. 2827) brought out the further objection that a tax on pay rolls is a tax on cost of production which is passed on to the consumer in higher prices to all consumers and to workers in lower wages as well as in higher prices to them as consumers. Thus it tends to reduce rather than to expand purchasing power, causing in itself recurrent industrial depression which arises out of the failure of consumption to keep pace with production, or a disproportion between money available for consumers' purchases and funds available for investment in increased production.

Moreover, these reserves, even if they could be accumulated without these disastrous effects upon consumers' purchasing power, and upon the monetary system, would be inadequate to cover more than a fraction of needs. The Commissioner of Labor Statistics and Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER (in radio addresses on Mar. 7) have estimated that if H. R. 4120 had been in effect from 1922 there would have been set aside by 1934 the sum of $10,000,000,000; yet, the figures on the national income published by the Department of Commerce show that in 4 of those years workers lost $60,000,000,000 of wages and salaries. Thus, even if reserves seem to involve saving the Treasury from obligation, as a matter of fact, they leave unsolved the real problem of protecting workers against the destitution of mass unemployment.

As the only adequate solution of the problem, and to avoid the unsound idea of setting aside reserves, the funds required in H. R. 2827 are made an obligation upon existing wealth and current higher incomes of individuals and corporations. These sources may be indicated as follows:

FIRST. INCOME TAXES OF INDIVIDUALS

If the United States were to apply merely the tax rates of Great Britain upon all individual incomes of $5,000 or over, a considerable sum would be available for social insurance. These rates in 1928 would have yielded the Federal Government five and three-fourths billion dollars as against slightly over one billion actually collected. In 1932, a year of low income, we would have collected on the same basis $1,128,000,000, as against the actual receipts of $324,000,000.

SECOND. CORPORATION INCOME TAX

Compared with other countries, also, our corporation tax is very low. Taking a flat rate of 25 percent, we would have raised in 1928 the amount of $2,600,000,000 instead of $1,200,000,000.

THIRD. INHERITANCE OR ESTATES

Here again the United States is very lenient. In 1928, on a total declared gross estate of three and one-half billion dollars, the total collected by Federal and State taxes was only $42,000,000, or a little over 1 percent. If an average of 25 percent were taken, this would have been raised in 1928 to $888,000,000.

FOURTH. TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES

Exact figures on the total are not available, but here is an important source of large additional returns which should be available for the general welfare.

FIFTH. TAX ON CORPORATE SURPLUS

In 1928, the corporate surplus, representing the accumulation by corporations of funds which had not been distributed to labor and capital, amounted to $47,000,000,000, and even in 1932 it was over thirty-six billions. Made possible as it is by the cooperation of labor and capital, this surplus which is now set aside to meet capital's claims for exigencies certainly should be also a source of funds for labor's social insurance in the exigencies of unemployment. The Department of Commerce has showed in its study of the national income that labor has lost a larger percent of its earned income in the depression than capital has lost in interest charges, because capital has been sustained by drawing both on current income and on accumulated surplus. The great economist, Adam Smith, 150 years ago, called the industrial system a "collective undertaking." Thus it is both logical and just to provide a tax on corporate surpluses as a source for social insurance.

In support of my statements here, I wish again to offer portions of the statement submitted to the House Labor Subcommittee by Dr. Joseph M. Gilman. The first table estimates the funds available for unemployment, old-age, and social insurance. Please note that all figures in this table are in thousands. This table may be found on page 64 of the hearings.

NUMBER OF MILLIONAIRES DOUBLE

The sources of funds from income taxes in the higher brackets is greater today than it was a year ago. This is shown by the income-tax returns published by the Bureau of Internal Revenue. Dr. Gilman's tables, quoted below, show the number of income-tax returns made in the different income classes, and also the total amount of available revenue from that source.

ESTIMATES OF FUNDS AVAILABLE FROM INCOMES OVER $5,000

Applying the income-tax rates suggested in the table below, $4,622,814,000 additional revenue can be raised each year from individual incomes, and $1,431,273,000 from corporation incomes. The figures for 1928 are as follows:

These facts and figures, and the testimony of many other experts and economists and leaders of thought can be found in the hearings on the Lundeen bill (H. R. 2827). They show conclusively that the cost of the workers' bill is well within the ability of the United States Treasury to pay, and if we will raise our income- and inheritance-tax rates to the level of the British rate, we can raise the necessary funds. I hope that Members of this House will study these facts and figures and give their support to the Lundeen workers' unemployment, old-age, and social-insurance bill (H. R. 2827).

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. KAHN].

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt that in the last few years the whole country has become old-age pension minded, as evidenced by the general interest shown in this part of the bill and by the almost general desire to put over this type of legislation. There is little, if any, dissension of opinion on the facts or principles involved, the difference arising mainly as to methods and amounts. Due to causes over which they have had no control, people who several years ago would have scorned the idea of an old-age pension for themselves are now looking to it as their only salvation. I have always been, and still am, in favor of a liberal old-age pension—one that promises more than a mere existence. However, to raise the hopes of a people to expect a liberal pension, through promises which many of us made on the platform and in speeches, and then to offer them such a plan as that proposed in this bill is nothing short of tragic. A sound, workable scheme is what we want—not one so uneconomic or extravagant that, even were it adopted, would topple of its own weight and plunge its beneficiaries into lower depths of despair, nor do we want one so niggardly as to be positively insulting. We desire neither to beguile with one nor to betray with the other, for to beguile is to betray. So I still maintain that we can support a liberal old-age pension, as outlined in the revised bill of the gentleman from California [Mr. MCGROARTY], or even the substitute, if the parliamentary situation so develops, that is to be offered, I understand, by the gentlewoman from Arizona [Mrs. GREENWAY]. The pittance carried in this bill is an insult to any self-respecting person whom times and circumstances have made a beneficiary of the Government which they have sustained and of the country which they have helped to build. Verily, they ask for bread and ye give them a stone. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, just after the House convened I asked for 10 minutes' time to talk about trying to save work for the people of this country, trying to get bread and butter for them. I was refused, although the gentleman from New York [Mr. DUFFY] was granted 4 minutes in which to discuss apple pie for his district. Safeguarding employment affects the entire country. This is not a party matter; it is not a sectional matter. I ask you, my friends, do you think it would be possible for me to be sectional when I have known and worked with thousands, literally thousands, of your southern and western veterans as well as my own northern men? Do you not suppose I want to work for the entire country for their sake alone, if for no other?

I am going to speak just for a few minutes upon the question of Japanese imports. From here I go to my office where I hold a meeting concerning a tremendously increasing importation of calf leather from Germany. We have to be on our toes and must be awake to these foreign importations.

I have in my hand a microscope manufactured in Japan. The wholesale price there is 61 cents. After paying our duties, it sells here for $1.25 wholesale and $1.95 retail. Similar instruments of American manufacture wholesale at $7.50 and retail at $12.50. Think of it!

I hold in my hand one rubber-soled tennis shoe that was made in Japan and one that was made in this country. The price of the American shoe is 60 cents a pair. The Japanese wholesale price is 9⅓ cents per pair, and the price landed here, 17 cents. For the American product we have to pay 60 cents, and for the Japanese product only 17 cents. No wonder our people are out of work.

I hold in my hand samples of worsted cloth, made in Japan, and samples of worsted cloth made in America, and, by the way, I know from conversation with people in different parts of the country that very few realize the increasingly large amount of woolen textile cloth that is made in Japan. We have discussed the figures about cotton textile cloth, but not woolen, and when you consider that over one million people are employed in the textile industry, the greatest basic industry in the country, you must realize the danger that is not just around the corner, but that is right here with us. The Japanese wholesale price in America of this cloth is $1.58, while the wholesale price of the American cloth, which compares with it—and I have a wonderful exhibit in the lobby for the Members to see—is $1.77½. Japanese cloth costs in this country $1.58. American worsted cloth, which we do not usually associate with having been made in Japan, $1.58 against our cloth made at $1.77.

I have here something that is very startling. Here are two hinges, one made in this country and one made in Japan. I am shocked but I understand, and this can be verified, that the Japanese-manufactured hinges are used in a Government-built building in this country. I will give you the prices of these hinges. The American wholesale price per pair of hinges is $3.50. The Japanese foreign wholesale selling price per pair, 55 cents; wholesale price, duty paid, $1.25 per pair. The American price is $3.50.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 additional minutes to the lady from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I have in my hands two flashlights. The American wholesale price, with lamp, but without battery, 19 cents. It retails, with battery, for 59 cents. The Japanese wholesale price, with lamp, in Japan, 1¼ cents; landed price here, 1.94 cents. It retails, with battery, at 39 cents. The American article, 59 cents; the Japanese, 39 cents.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. What became of the reciprocal tariff? I voted against it myself.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. And I likewise did. I think we all feel the same way about reciprocal-trade agreements and the way they affect us in our industries.

Mr. CITRON. Will the lady yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. CITRON. Is it not true that a great many of these manufacturers, who exploited labor in the past, have gone to Germany and Europe and even to Japan with our money?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think it is deplorable if they have, but I do not think they have so much. I wish to state to the gentleman that I have the greatest admiration and the greatest respect for the northern manufacturers who stayed in their own country. I cannot yield further. I am sorry.

Japanese matches, the wholesale selling price is 52 cents for 144 boxes. The American selling price is 90 cents. The retail price to the public is 1 cent per box for both matches. I do not have time to give you the landed cost on the Japanese-made matches. I will give the manufacturing costs, which are very important, showing the cost to be 66 cents per gross in this country as against Japanese cost of 15 cents per gross.

This security bill speaks about security of the people after they have no employment. I know there is not a single Member here who does not wish to protect American men and women, whether they happen to have money or whether they represent capital; whether they are working day by day, hoping and praying their jobs will be kept. I give everyone of you credit for wanting to help the entire country. Of course, you are going to fight for your own part of the country. I know you would not ask, if you represented the entire country, as Secretary Wallace does, you would not appeal to the South and to the Middle West as he did, to work against and fight against us, a commercial warfare against other parts of the country. I know you will do everything in your power to have the President act to protect our great American industry, and if he does not act, I know you will pass legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to call to the attention of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts the fact that it will be necessary for her to receive permission to revise and extend the remarks she made on the floor of the House in the RECORD. The request of the lady to revise and extend the remarks she made in committee is granted.

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield myself 3 minutes, Mr. Chairman.

I want to supplement what my colleague has just said about the emergency that is very apparent. It was so apparent that this morning, so I am reliably informed, at a press conference at the White House the President had before him two large volumes of evidence in relation to this matter of recent importations, particularly of textiles, from Japan; and that he also submitted a statement from the Secretary of State, who also recognized the emergency that existed, and the importance of taking up this subject immediately. At the close of the press conference the President lifted those two large volumes and said, "These volumes are being now referred to the Tariff Commission with the request that they immediately investigate the subject."

So that I feel, and I am sure my colleagues from New England and all sections of the country feel, that the President of the United States himself now recognizes the great necessity of prompt and immediate action along the lines that have been discussed here in the last few days in connection with the textile conditions; and the large increase of importations from certain countries at the present time.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The pottery people are finding themselves in the same relative position as the textile industry at this time.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to supplement the remarks just made by the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] by again stating that the price is affected, very materially, by even a small surplus of these goods from Japan. We must recognize that. I repeat what I said the other day: It has a murderous effect on the whole price structure. If one-half of 1 percent is considered so small, why is it so important to Japan to have it? What great effect or harm would an embargo on such a little amount have on Japan? Why should she object to limitation, or even to embargo? We have heard much about the "forgotten man." Today our people in New England are beginning to believe that it is the "forgotten land." I wish that, instead of receiving letters and petitions, the President and Secretary Wallace might be taken to our piers and see the great freighters bound for Argentina, carrying away 1,500 tons of our finest textile machinery. Do you wonder that the appeal is very strong at the present? Do you wonder that we New Englanders feel we are being discriminated against? I reiterate, if this is so small an amount of import, why is it so important to Japan to have this market for it? The effect is disastrous enough on our own market.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein certain tax tables.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the most important measures the House of Representatives has had under consideration for many, many months. My only regret in reference to this matter is that this bill was not brought in under a rule similar to that providing for the consideration of the so-called "bonus bill" that we might have a fair and square vote on a number of these proposals.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I regret that I must decline to yield, for I have but a few minutes.

This bill, however, has some good features; it is the work of many months. The President's social-security committee worked on it for weeks and weeks; the membership of the Ways and Means Committee did likewise, and they brought in a bill, not perfect, by any means, but a bill that is the result of their strenuous labors. I agree with my colleague the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] in reference to the old-age pension feature of this bill, for I think it is most inadequate and heartless in this respect. Other bills have been presented on this same subject. Some of them have been criticized because they have been changed from time to time. I have no doubt that the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee will offer certain amendments to this bill, discovering that changes are necessary in the bill; and when we take into consideration that the Ways and Means Committee had the best talent it could employ to assist in drafting this bill, is it any wonder it has been found necessary from time to time to change considerably some of these other measures? Why criticize and sneer at them because they have been improved? I want briefly to call attention to some of the provisions of the McGroarty bill. In the first place, it is a bill which provides a transaction tax and a slight increase in gift, inheritance, and income taxes for paying the pensions therein provided. It is not necessary to issue bonds to pay the pensions under this bill. It is not necessary to call on the credit of the Government in any manner because, even though the transactions tax and other taxes therein proposed should not provide the amount hoped for, whatever is produced, after the expenses of administration have been taken out, will be prorated and devoted to the payment of pensions. It pays its way as it goes, which is a very commendable feature.

This is a machine age. More and more of our people are being put out of employment by reason of the perfecting of machinery, and I suggest to those here this afternoon that more and more people are going to be put out of employment in the future by reason of the inventive genius of the American people. What are we going to do with these people made idle through no fault of their own?

An answer to this problem is found in the bill submitted by my colleague from California. We have heard, of course, about the shortening of hours of labor. This must be done, and I am for it, but this in itself is not a solution of the problem. In this bill presented by the gentleman from California, we have the proposal that the older persons shall be taken out of gainful employment. I say to you that just as sure as we are here this afternoon we are going to establish that principle in this country. If it is not done through the adoption of this bill, we shall be forced to do it through the adoption of a bill carrying a similar principle.

What else does this bill provide? It provides, also, that the money received as annuities shall be spent within a certain time. I am not an expert on money matters, but I have listened to many men who were rated as experts, and almost without exception they have said that one of the very important things in relation to financial transactions is the velocity with which the circulating medium of the country passes from hand to hand. We can appreciate, of course, that although we had some power of doubling the amount of the circulating medium if it were not put into circulation it would be of absolutely no benefit to the people of this country. Therefore this provision for increasing the velocity of the circulating medium is very much to be desired.

The bill also provides that no person who is a beneficiary under its terms can mantain any able-bodied person in idleness or employ anybody at an unreasonable salary.

The gentleman from Wisconsin, in speaking on the floor of the House a day or two ago, offered another objection to the effect that a large manufacturing concern controlling its own sources of raw material and all the intervening steps and processes which turn the raw material into the finished product would have advantage over another concern which had to buy its raw materials on the open market and have certain operations performed by others, because of the transaction tax provided for in the bill. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT], if I remember correctly, interrupted him to say that he was offering an amendment that would cure that particular situation.

This bill, of course, is not perfect. I have been a Member of this body a good number of years and I cannot recall that any bill was ever brought in here that was perfect, or that any bill was ever brought in here that could not be criticized in some manner. My only hope is that we shall have an opportunity of expressing ourselves on this measure before the final disposition of the bill under consideration.

The taxes collected under this act are deposited in the Treasury of the United States in a separate fund known as the "United States citizens' retirement annuity fund." This money will be collected for a period of 4 months before any payments are made. On the 1st day of the fifth month after the collections are started annuities will be paid out of the money collected the first month to all those who have qualified. In order to qualify a person must first be an American citizen and over the age of 60 years. The annuitant shall not engage in any gainful pursuit and shall further covenant and agree to spend the monthly annuity within 35 days after the receipt of the same.

To prevent the establishing of another bureau, the author of the bill has very wisely provided that the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall have charge of the administrative features of this bill. He is given authority to make certain rules and regulations that are necessary for administering the act.

There has been a great deal of argument as to the working of the transactions tax.

In some European countries where a turn-over or transaction tax has been used the tax has been levied upon only the profit involved in the transaction and not upon the dollar value of the transaction.

Careful study and estimates show that a 2-percent transaction tax levied upon the dollar value of the transaction may be expected to result in an increase of about 8 percent to 12 percent in retail prices.

It is obvious that the retirement of millions of citizens over the age of 60 who are now employed and the increased business caused by the spending of the annuities by them, and also by the spending of those younger people who would take the jobs vacated by the retirement of the citizens over the age of 60, will greatly increase business activity. This will result very quickly in a higher level of wages and salaries, to such an extent as to more than offset and to justify any slight price increase resulting from the taxes involved in, and the operation of, this plan.

There is a distinct and important difference in the results to be obtained from a transaction tax as compared with a retail sales tax.

For illustration, note the following:

(a) A retail sales tax does not reach many very large transactions, which do not enter into any retail sales.

(b) Because of the very great variation in the amount and character of materials and labor involved in the production of articles for the retail trade, a flat rate of 2 percent on each transaction of such production will more equitably distribute the tax load than a flat rate of tax based upon the retail sale price of the product. Even by using a great multiplicity of adjusted retail-sales-tax rates, which is utterly impracticable, no such equitable taxation could be effected to compare favorably with the transaction-tax results.

Hence this form of tax makes the best possible spread of the tax load in an equitable manner and does in fact impose the tax upon those who have the ability to pay the tax in proportion to the size and extent of their transactions.

The tables set out below clearly illustrate the operation and effect of this 2-percent transaction tax—liberal profit margin has been allowed:

Wheat converted to bread

[For 1,000 bushels of wheat at $1 per bushel paid to farmer]

Transaction	Sale price	Sale amount	2 percent tax
Wheat sold:
By farmer	$1.00	$1,000	$20
By buyer	1.10	1,100	22
Flour sold:
By miller to jobber	1.20	1,200	24
By jobber to store	1.30	1,300	26
By store to baker	1.50	1,500	30
Baker to consumer—on the basis that 1 bushel of wheat produces one 48-pound sack of flour, and this flour produces 72,000 one-pound loaves which retail for 10 cents per loaf		7,200	144
Total		13,300	$266

This total of the 2-percent tax of $266 is derived from six transactions. If it were all added into the retail sale price of the bread, the tax load would be 0.0037 cent per loaf of bread. A retail sales tax of 3.7 percent of the total retail sales dollar value of $7,200 would be required to produce this same tax revenue of $266.

For coal to the retail consumer

[For 1 ton of coal]

Transaction	Sale price per ton	2 percent tax
Producer pays the miner	$1.50	$0.03
Jobber pays producer	5.50	.11
Railroad charges freight	3.00	.06
Retailer pays jobber	9.00	.18
Retailer pays drayage	1.00	.02
Consumer pays retailer	12.00	.24
Total	32.00	.64

This total of the 2-percent tax of 64 cents is derived from six transactions. If it were all added into the retail sale price of the coal, the tax load would be 64 cents per ton. A retail sales tax of 5.4 percent of the retail sales dollar value of $12 would be required to produce this same tax revenue of 64 cents.

This variation in the amount of the retail sales tax rate—3.7 percent for the wheat and 5.4 percent for the coal, as shown by the foregoing tables, for the amount required to collect the same revenue as would be collected by the transaction 2-percent tax, illustrates the variation to be expected as to all other commodities.

The transaction tax method broadens or widens the tax base to include all of the transactions, and various factors tend to compel absorption of the tax by the producer and the middleman in a manner to relieve the consumer of all, or at least a major part, of the tax load at the time of the retail sale.

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, there may be some other piece of legislation that has for its object the taking of the people 60 years of age and over off the labor market that is now pending before this Congress, but I am not aware of any such legislation.

I want to suggest to each and every Member of this body in closing that the bill presented by my colleague the gentleman from California, with the amendments that have been suggested, is worthy of the consideration and support of each and every one of us here. I trust that before we come to a final vote on this matter you will peruse this bill and that we may have your support for this most worthy measure. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to so many fine and illuminating talks on the matter now under consideration that it is with considerable hesitancy that I undertake to say anything at all. I have not a prepared speech, but I do want to comment upon a few things which have come to my mind during the time I have been here on the floor of the House.

May I suggest first to my good friends across the aisle that you do not have a monopoly on all of the humanitarianism in this land of ours. Those of us who sit on this side of the aisle believe that our party, with which we are glad to affiliate, was born out of a spirit of humanitarianism that has not been surpassed by any like spirit in subsequent time. We believe that our party throughout all of its history, and today, stands for human rights as well as property rights. I believe I can say to every Member of this House and to all of our people that, insofar as legislation for old-age pensions and social security is an evidence of an advancing civilization and humanitarianism, the gentlemen on my side of the aisle stand with it and for it. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I have heard much of this talk of human rights as against property rights. The accusation is made against the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON], as fine a gentleman as sits on the floor of this House, that he is contending for property rights against human rights, which, of course, is not a correct interpretation of his remarks. Then I hear the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] talking about secondary policies of government in promoting the welfare of the people. There is no difference between the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] in their fundamental beliefs.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] says that these benefits must spring from business and industry, and those people who are producing the wealth. The gentleman from New Jersey believes that, too, and I believe it. The only thing that we are asking is, let us make it possible for those producing classes, business and industry, to so operate that the older people of this land, the unfortunates and the dependents, may be given security and a comfortable living.

Mr. Chairman, we have come a long way in this Nation since its birth about 150 years ago. In those early days if a man was unfortunate and became old without having accumulated something to take care of himself, or if he became sick or was injured, he was indeed in a desperate plight. No one took care of him. As we have come down through time our Government has been going into that secondary field of governmental activity, providing a greater measure of security for its people. I stand for such a policy if reasonably pursued, and I want to say here and now that I am for old-age pensions, as liberal as shall be in keeping with economic recovery.

It has been suggested here that the need for an old-age pension has been occasioned by the use of machinery. Do you know my view about that matter? My view is, if we did not have machinery, factories, plants, and equipment, we could not have an old-age pension. Why do I make that statement? I say that by the use of equipment and machinery the younger people of this land are able to produce enough of this world's goods to take care of the deserving older people in security and in comfort. I do not know that we should say that it is the burden of industry and business. I think it is the burden, maybe not the burden, but the privilege, of all of our people, to see to it that the older people when they get to that period in life where they are no longer able to go out and get employment and who have not been able to accumulate an estate, may live in security, peace, and comfort in this great land of ours, a land of plenty.

Mr. Chairman, there are titles in this bill about which I am not sure. It may be a fine thing, in principle, to require the setting up of annuities and to require the building up of reserve funds to take care of unemployment, because we may always have some measure of unemployment. If history repeats itself we will have recurring cycles of ups and downs. I am led to inquire if maybe we are not a little like the man who lived in the house with a leaky roof: When the sun was shining he did not need to fix the roof, and when it was raining it was an awful job to try to fix it. In other words, by these other titles in this bill, which are separate and apart from the old-age-pension feature, the care of dependent children, maternal care, and those things, we are going to say to the working people and to industry, but primarily to the working people, "When you have a job we are going to take so much out of your wages to build up a fund to take care of you when you get old or to take care of you when you do not have your job." Possibly, in view of the fact that it is raining today, we ought to try to fix that roof, because we can see the necessity for it. In connection with that, however, let me drop just this one word of caution. The crying need of the immediate present in this land is economic recovery. I trust that those of us who have charge of the policies of this Government will not go too far afield in the matter of social experimentation or social reforms and so hamper business and industry that we cannot have economic recovery.

It is my honest and steadfast belief that if we could tomorrow put every man who wants a job into a job and give him employment by giving him a legitimate job in legitimate industry and getting him off of the Government pay roll or off of the relief roll, the specter of most of our other troubles would quickly vanish.

I want to reiterate that I favor the principle of old-age pensions and I will work for and support an adequate and reasonable plan.

My good friend the gentleman from California [Mr. McGROARTY], for whom I have developed a fond and sincere affection, is here advocating a plan which has been greatly modified since its introduction, and which we are told will be further modified. I do not know how far Congress will go in providing old-age pensions. Probably it will not make a lot of difference how I vote on it, because if history repeats itself there will be enough votes over there to put it one way or the other and we can vote yea or nay and it will not make a lot of difference. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH].

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Chairman, while the old-age-pension provisions of the social-security bill are totally inadequate, other provisions of the measure are meritorious. For example, title IV, granting aid to dependent children; title V, granting aid to State services relating to maternal and child welfare, the care of crippled children, and vocational rehabilitation, are so humanitarian in their purpose that the present administration is to be commended in this regard for bringing before Congress legislation which creates a new era in humanitarian legislative principles. The bill should be amended to include the provisions of the revised McGroarty bill, for I believe it will give far more adequate security to our aged. I welcome the opportunity to support this humanitarian legislation, and if there is no alternative I shall vote for the present bill with its old-age pension provisions, because I believe in the principle involved.

As reported by the Ways and Means Committee, individual and separate action must be taken by the legislatures of 48 States, and Congress itself must take further action to provide old-age pensions for the District of Columbia. Before the bill is finally passed by both the Senate and the House fully one-half of the State legislatures will have adjourned, many of them not to meet again in regular session for 2 and, in some instances, 3 years.

In the second place, the very fact that action is required in each State does not insure equality of security for our elder citizens. Every one of the States may set up different requirements within certain general limits outlined in this measure, which requirements may bring about so much confusion as to make proper national administration of the law almost futile.

The third fundamental weakness in this bill as reported, as I see it, is that it does not set forth a definite and precise method for uniform payment of old-age pensions. Its very vagueness spells insecurity.

Ever since I have been a Member of this body I have urged that legislation be passed to guarantee security in old age. During the last two Congresses the Committee on Labor, of which I am a member, has reported favorably on bills providing old-age pensions. But the House has failed to act upon them, although the majority of us probably believed at that time that it was the proper thing to do.

The revised McGroarty bill, H. R. 7514, on the other hand, while undoubtedly having some weaknesses, is more certain of relief than that offered in the present bill. It places the responsibility squarely where it belongs—on the shoulders of the Federal Government. It provides a more certain and uniform security for every aged citizen. It provides for the payment of these pensions immediately—now, when they are needed, not 2 or 3 years hence, when many of these citizens will have passed to the Great Beyond.

There can be no just criticism of government for the enactment of this type of legislation. It is truly among the most humanitarian types of legislation man can evolve, and it should not be made a political football. [Applause.]

I have stated that this is a responsibility properly resting upon the Federal Government. Our economic structure is today national in scope. Our economic problems and depressions are consequently national in scope. The tendency toward great chain organizations removing the wealth of local communities to large financial centers is already well recognized. The handicap thus placed upon individual communities and States in problems of taxation have been great. Many States have had commissions studying these tax problems for years. If the Federal Government is to permit such conditions to continue, it must, for the safeguarding of its own interests, recognize and assume the responsibilities that necessarily follow. This principal is already well precedented in our Federal public-health laws and administration. We no longer expect a local community to alone suppress an epidemic. Physicians, nurses, and experts of the Federal Government step in because it is recognized that its continuance may be a national calamity. The conditions that have been forced upon thrifty and deserving American citizens by the national economic calamity through which we have been passing is likewise a national problem and national responsibility.

Another factor of major importance in making this a Federal problem is the terrific trend toward the mechanization of all industry. The inventive genius of America has been turned to this with renewed vigor during the years of the depression. Machinery requires youth for its operation. Formerly men had not spent their usefulness before reaching the age of 60. Today, no large employer of labor, including the United States Government itself, will employ men and women who have even reached 45 or 50. With thousands who had provided for their old age having their savings exhausted by the conditions of the past few years, the permanent unemployed in the older age groups will continue with us. It is within the power of Congress to wipe out in large measure the tragedy being wrought in their lives.

I sincerely hope that every Member of this House will give careful and thoughful study to the revised McGroarty bill. We should not be prejudiced against it by hearsay information. We should know its content and understand it.

Whether the revised McGroarty bill, as approved by Dr. Townsend, is substituted for the old-age-pension section of the social-security bill or not, I desire to take this opportunity to point out the deserving credit due Dr. Townsend and the proponents of the McGroarty bill for their success in making us nationally conscious of this responsibility. We should, as representatives of the people, give to all American citizens social and economic security in their declining years. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT].

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a letter that has a direct bearing on my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The letter follows:

ALLENWOOD, PA., April 12, 1935.

Hon. B. K. FOCHT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. FOCHT: I am enclosing a tag taken from a bag of cottonseed meal, purchased at our local feed store here in Allenwood. Positive proof that Pennsylvania farmers are using cattle food raised in China, and processed in and imported from Japan.

What are we coming to? Are the people who are responsible for the policies which permit such things to happen mad? Perhaps they are just plain fools.

In regard to the hog-processing tax. In my humble judgment it should be dropped at once. Pork has become so high that the ordinary consumer cannot afford to buy it. They are turning to substitutes. If the 2½ cents a pound tax was knocked off, it would help. Let us drop all this complicated jumble, and return to common sense and America for Americans.

I have copied the following from the tag which was on a recent shipment of "cottonseed meal" received here in Allenwood, Union County, Pa.

"100 lbs. net.

"Cottonseed meal manufactured only from Chinese cottonseed in Japan. Imported by Ashcraft-Wilkinson Co., Atlanta, Ga.

"Guaranteed analysis:

"Protein, minimum 36 percent; fat, minimum, 4½ percent; fiber, maximum 16 percent; nitrogen free; extract, minimum 25 percent. Paramount Brand."

With best regards, I am, respectfully yours,

C. V. MICHENER.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, we were all deeply impressed by the impassioned speech of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

I hesitate to mention it, but it so happens that 20 years ago I delivered an address on the floor of this House advocating an old-age-pension law. One year later I introduced a bill for that purpose. Both of these instances are a part of the records of the House.

Civil government is made necessary for self-defense and for the control of the conduct of our citizens.

Now, my friends, there is one thing about this if we understand it, and we do have a perfect understanding that something is going to pass in the shape of an old-age pension. I, of course, will vote for it, but like some others here, I am constrained to call attention to one important and essential thing.

Since the matter has been practically settled by voices expressed here on the floor that the bill will pass, the question then arises—and that seems to voice the same thing the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] spoke of—this is not a political question but a humanitarian and economic one, in fact, something closer and akin to the religious or spiritual.

You have heard of the invasion of New England by Japan with some of her products. They have come to my district where they have a rayon works which has employed 7,000 people. These foreign goods have virtually closed that factory, and the employees are walking the streets.

Mr. FOCHT. Can I have a little more time?

Mr. TREADWAY. I can give the gentleman 1 minute more, but I will have to take it out of someone else's time.

Mr. FOCHT. I had rather give 10 minutes to somebody else than to take any of their time. I will say that I tried to get time, but I have been treated discourteously in regard to it.

Mr. TREADWAY. I object to that statement. I have not treated the gentleman discourteously, and I do not propose to stand for it.

Mr. FOCHT. I have tried to get time and I have been denied it.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. This is a security bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. TREADWAY. We will take care of things on this side, and you take care of things on your side.

Mr. FOCHT. We now have an invasion of my home county of Union, in Pennsylvania, by the Chinese, which is quite as bad as the rayon importations into this country. Under a tariff duty of three-tenths of 1 percent, cottonseed meal stock feed to the extent of 44,890,000 pounds was imported in 1934 into the United States. Some of this cottonseed meal reached Allenwood, which coincidentally is the only township in Union County that went Democratic in 1934. It was billed through a firm in Atlanta, Ga. We will reserve for another time, when we are given better opportunity to discuss the matter of imports from Japan, of bleached cotton cloth, which has increased from 3,960 square yards in January 1934 to 4,347,739 square yards in February 1935.

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mrs. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] was speaking this afternoon I admired the spirit in which he tried to speak of this social-security bill. It was not a purpose of mine in any way to speak of the bill as a political bill, but I felt it my duty because of the fact that the Democratic Party is in power to call their attention to the promises they have made to the American people, to the platform they have adopted, which was a covenant with the people, which they promised to carry to completion, and which the President of the United States said that he would carry out 100 percent, and which promises have not been fulfilled. It is a question of misplaced trust by the Democratic Party. I believe this country today is best operated by two major parties, and it is necessary for the party in power to carry out those principles and promises inculcated in its platform, and which it has promised to the American people. Why should not the Democratic Party carry out its platform to the letter rather than do the opposite from what it promises?

Then I call the attention of the House to the fact that the Speaker, Mr. BYRNS, yesterday said he thought we could reduce taxation on small industry. I also call attention to the remarks made by Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL in referring to the fact that the Budget is practically in balance. Not so, according to Government Treasury statements. I say to the Democratic Party, Where are you going to get the money for these exorbitant expenses? Where are you going to get the money to balance the Budget? I say to you and to Members of this Congress that if you do not recognize that fact and assume your responsibility in trying to balance the Budget you are going to find out that instead of assisting these people to receive old-age pensions you will not only cause them to have greater misery and suffering but you will wreck this country. I tell you again it is your duty and responsibility to balance this Budget, and when the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL] says we are about balancing the Budget, I say to you that if this Budget is balanced at the end of this year I shall ask this small minority of Republicans to give you, our Democratic colleagues, the best banquet that can be had in any banquet hall in Washington, and we will permit you to write your own menu, and all this we will do if you will only balance the Budget. We would do it if we were in power. This is your responsibility. Assume it. Do it now before it is too late.

The President ran New York State into the greatest debt of its history, and he has already accomplished the same feat for the country. Will you let him continue this orgy of ruthless spending?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT].

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, since the revised McGroarty bill, H. R. 7154, was introduced on April 1, a number of clarifying and perfecting amendments, some of them of considerable importance, have been made to it. Several gentlemen, including myself, desire to discuss that bill when it is offered under the 5-minute rule tomorrow. In order that all Members may have an opportunity to read the bill with the amendments, in the form in which it will be offered as a substitute for the old-age pension provisions of the administration bill, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein at this point the text of the revised McGroarty bill, with the amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill, with amendments, is as follows:

[74th Cong., 1st sess.]

H. R. 7154

In the House of Representatives

Mr. MCGROARTY introduced the following bill, which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed

[Omit part enclosed in brackets and insert part printed in italic]

A bill to provide for the general welfare of the United States by supplying to the people a more liberal distribution and increase of purchasing power, retiring certain citizens from active gainful employment, improving and stabilizing gainful employment for other citizens, stimulating agricultural and industrial production and general business, and alleviating the hazards and insecurity of old age; to provide a method whereby citizens shall contribute to [the purchase of] and receive a retirement annuity; and for the raising of the necessary revenue to operate a continuing plan therefor; and to provide for the proper administration of this act; and for other purposes

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled—

DEFINITIONS

SECTION 1. TAXES AND COLLECTION THEREOF

SEC. 2. (a) There is hereby levied a tax of 2 percent upon the fair gross dollar value of each transaction done within the United States and Territories; also, in addition to all other taxes, a tax equal to one-tenth of the tax levied upon all incomes under the provisions of the Revenue Act of 1934 or any amendment thereto; also, in addition to all other taxes, a tax of 2 percent upon the fair dollar value of all transfers of property by devise, bequest, or other testamentary disposition or legal descent and distribution of property, as now are or hereafter may be taxable under the [provisions of the Revenue Act of 1934 or any amendment thereto:] laws of the United States; and also, in addition to all other taxes, a tax of 2 percent upon the fair gross dollar value of every gift in excess of the fair value of $500: Provided, That said taxes shall not be levied upon such transactions involving the issuance, sale, or transfer of Federal, State, or municipal bonds or other securities as would be otherwise exempt from Federal taxation under existing law, and shall not be levied upon any transaction done by the Federal or by a State or municipal Government which would be otherwise exempt from Federal taxation under existing law.

(b) Except as hereinafter otherwise provided, all tax returns for the taxes imposed by this act shall be made by, and the tax shall be paid by, the grantor, vendor, lessor, and/or legal representative thereof, and by the legal entity by whom the service is furnished, for each and every transfer of property and/or rendition or performance of service, and for all transactions arising under executory contract the return shall be made and the tax shall be paid as of the date such executory contract is entered into, regardless of the time of the completion thereof: Provided, That in every case of compensation for personal service other than for professional service, the person or legal entity by whom such payment is made shall deduct the amount of the tax and withhold it out of such compensation and shall make the return and the payment of the tax for such cases in lieu of the return and payment by the person who performed the service.

(c) All taxes imposed by this act shall be deemed levied and shall become payable upon all taxable transactions beginning and occurring on and after 30 days after this act takes effect.

(d) Every return of taxes, together with the payment of the taxes, as required by this act, shall be made to the collector of internal revenue of the United States, or to such other person as may be designated by rules and regulations issued under this act, for the district from which such return is made, as of the end of each calendar month during which such taxes become fixed and chargeable, and shall be delivered and paid to said collector of internal revenue or other person not later than 10 days after the expiration of the calendar month for which such return is made.

(e) The Secretary of the Treasury shall enforce the payment of the taxes required by this act to be paid, and shall promptly deposit in the United States Treasury all funds received by him through or from the collection of such taxes, all as required by rules and regulations to be issued and promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.

(f) Within the limitations of sections 1 and 2 of this act the Secretary of the Treasury shall by rules and regulations prescribe what shall constitute a taxable transaction within the meaning of this act, in any particular case, and may determine and prescribe the number of transactions to be taxed in the course of the production, distribution, and sale of any article or commodity. He shall also create and maintain a Board of Review which shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine any claim arising out of the administration of sections 1 and 2 of this act, upon the part of anyone paying or liable for the payment of any of the taxes imposed herein. Said board shall consist of not more than five members who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall receive a salary to be fixed by the President, not exceeding $10,000 per year. The decisions of said board shall be subject to appeal to the District Court of the United States of the district where the claim arises, in the manner prescribed by law for appeals in income-tax matters.

In making the rules and regulations herein provided for the Secretary of the Treasury shall be governed by the following basic rules, which are hereby declared to be the policy of the United States with regard to the levy and collection of said taxes:

(1) Where the transaction involves the physical transfer of property, or the ownership, title of beneficial interest therein, the tax shall be levied upon the gross dollar value of the property so transferred; except that in the transfer of real property under a contract of purchase, purchase-money mortgage, or other purchase obligation the tax shall be levied and collected upon the amounts paid under such obligation as and when the same are paid.

(2) Where the transaction consists of the rendition of service only in connection with the transfer the tax shall be levied and collected upon the gross dollar value of the service rendered.

(3) The gross dollar value in either case shall be the price actually charged for the property or service, unless it shall appear to the Secretary of the Treasury that such price is obviously inconsistent with the fair value thereof, in which case the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine the fair value and levy the tax thereon accordingly.

(4) A transaction done by a broker, commission merchant, carrier, bailee for hire, or warehouseman in the ordinary course of his business as such in connection with personal property, shall be deemed to be a service transaction.

(5) Where several transactions are done in the course of the production, manufacture, distribution, and sale of personal property and/or service rendered in connection therewith, all of such transactions, if otherwise taxable hereunder, shall be taxable whether said transactions are done in whole or in part by, within, or under the control of a single person, firm, corporation, copartnership, or association, or whether they be done in whole or in part by separate persons, firms, corporations, copartnerships, or associations; the purpose of this clause being to prevent avoidance by larger business firms and combinations of payment of the same tax for which smaller or independent businesses would ordinarily be liable under this act.

(6) Where articles are manufactured in whole or in part by the process of assembling together such component parts thereof as are ordinarily purchased from other manufacturers, such, for example, as automobiles, machinery, furniture, and so forth, the transaction tax herein provided shall be levied upon the gross dollar value of such component parts regardless of whether the same were made by the manufacturer of the assembled or completed article or whether they were purchased by such manufacturer from another, and where the manufacturer of an article upon which a transaction tax is payable hereunder is the producer of the raw material or other material from which said article in whole or in part is made, then the transaction tax upon such material, if the same has not been paid and would be otherwise taxable hereunder, shall be paid by such manufacturer.

(7) Every person engaged in the sale of goods at retail shall be deemed for the purposes of this act to be an independent operator and not the agent or employee of any producer, manufacturer, wholesaler, or distributor of such goods.

A SEPARATE FUND

SEC. 3. There is hereby created in the Treasury Department of the United States a fund to be known and administered as the "United States citizens' retirement annuity fund." All revenue derived from the taxes levied in and under this act shall be deposited by the Secretary of the Treasury in this United States citizens' retirement annuity fund, and shall be disbursed only for the payments of the sums expressly authorized by this act to be paid therefrom, and for no other purposes.

ONLY UNITED STATES CITIZENS ARE ELIGIBLE

SEC. 4 (a) Every citizen of the United States 60 years of age and over, or who shall attain the age of 60 years after the passage of this act, shall be entitled to receive upon filing application and qualifying as hereinafter provided an annuity payable monthly during the life of the annuitant, in a sum to be determined as hereinafter provided in this act.

(b) The right of any person to receive an annuity under this act shall date from and begin on the date of proper filing of an application therefor, when and if such application is supported by proper and sufficient proofs in compliance with rules and regulations issued pursuant to the provisions of this act, but subject to the limitations upon time and manner of payment as hereinafter provided by this act. In such application the applicant shall disclose the nature and extent of any annual or monthly income then being received or due to be received by the applicant.

(c) The annuitant shall not engage in any gainful pursuit.

(d) The annuitant shall covenant and agree to expend, and shall spend, all of each month's annuity during the current calendar month in which it is received by the annuitant, or within [5 days] 1 month thereafter, within the United States of America or its Territorial possessions, in and for the purchase of any services and/or commodities, and/or a home or an equity in or lease of a home, or for the payment of any indebtedness lawfully arising for any such purchase: Provided, however, That the annuitant shall not directly or indirectly expend a total of more than 10 percent of any such monthly annuity for gifts or contributions to any person or to any public or private institutions, associations, or organizations.

(e) This annuity shall not be payable to any person who directly or indirectly receives from any source a net income of any kind or nature in excess of [$2,400 per year] the amount of the annuity to which he would be otherwise entitled under this act.

(f) Any person otherwise qualified to receive an annuity hereunder and who at any time receives any net income of any kind or nature [not arising from personal services of such person and which in total amount is less than $2,400 per year] shall promptly make full and complete disclosure in writing under oath, as required by rules to be issued under this act, fully disclosing the amount and source of any and all such income, and thereupon the pro rata monthly amount of any such annual income not arising under this act shall be prorated over the year and shall be deducted monthly from the monthly annuity payment to which such person under this act would otherwise be entitled, and the remainder shall be the annuity of such annuitant payable under this act: Provided, however, That all of the income of any such annuitant, whether arising under this act or otherwise, shall be expended as required for annuity paid under the provisions of this act.

ADMINISTRATION PROVISIONS

SEC. 5. (a) The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall create and maintain boards of review within the several States as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions and purposes of this act, and he shall issue and promulgate and enforce proper and suitable rules and regulations governing the manner and place of registration by applicants for the annuities provided for under this act, and the method of identification of and registration by such annuitants, also to require and secure the proper spending of the annuity money by the annuitant as required by this act, and adequate and sufficient accounting thereof, and such other rules and regulations as he may deem necessary, all in accordance with the intent and purposes of this act; and he shall cause to be paid at regular monthly intervals, to each person who lawfully qualifies to receive annuities under this act, such amount as shall become due the respective annuitants lawfully qualifying under this act.

(b) Proper and suitable boards shall be established by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, within each State as he shall deem necessary, such boards as have exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine all issues arising under this act, subject to rules and regulations issued and promulgated under this act, concerning annuitants residing within the jurisdiction of the boards, respectively, but subject to the right of either party to have the decision of any such board reviewed by the State court having general jurisdiction over the area in which that board is situated.

APPORTIONMENT AND DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS

SEC. 6. From and out of the proceeds of such taxes collected and accumulated under the provisions of this act, disposition and disbursements shall be made in the following manner and order, to wit:

(a) All proper and necessary expense of administering this act shall first be paid or provided for, and upon a monthly basis whenever practicable.

(b) A reserve fund shall at all times be maintained sufficient to protect and provide proper payment of any and all annuities the payment of which for any cause is deferred because of delay in approval of application for the annuity or otherwise.

(c) All other money available in any month or period, from or out of said tax collections or any undistributed residue thereof, as hereinafter referred to, shall be distributed and paid monthly, pro rata, except as hereinafter provided, to all qualified annuitants who are of record on the last day of the calendar month period or longer first period as hereinafter specified, during which the tax collections and/or residue are accumulated for distribution, in such amount

[not exceeding $200 per month,] as may properly be paid from the funds accumulated during that period, and in the following manner, to wit:

(d) First. The total amount available for distribution shall be divided by the total number of the annuitants entitled to share therein, and except for cases where deduction is to be made as hereinafter referred to, the result shall be the pro rata annuity amount.

Second. The proper deductions provided for by section 4, paragraph (f), of this act shall then be made from the pro rata amount so determined, as to all persons who have any income not arising under this act as annuity.

Third. The amount so determined to be due each of the annuitants shall then be paid in manner and by method as follows, to wit:

(e) The total amount of the deductions made as provided in section 4, paragraph (f), of this act shall constitute a residue which shall be carried over into the next following month and be merged into and become a part of the fund available for that month for distribution to qualified annuitants as provided for in this act.

(f) All of the funds accumulated under this act during the period extending from the time this act goes into effect and to the end of the first full calendar month after this act takes effect and hereby designated as the "first period", shall be promptly paid for and as of the first day of the fifth full calendar month after this act takes effect, to such annuitants as are of record on the last day of such "first period" and as hereinbefore provided for in section 6, paragraph (c), of this act.

(g) All of the funds accumulated under this act during the second full calendar month after this act takes effect, hereby designated the "second period", shall be promptly paid for and as of the first day of the sixth full calendar month after this act takes effect, to such annuitants as are of record on the last day of such "second period" and as hereinbefore provided for in section 6, paragraph (c), of this act.

(h) Subsequent monthly payments to the annuitants shall be made by this same method, monthly, as follows:

Accumulation of third period to be paid on first day of seventh month.

Accumulation of the fourth period to be paid on first day of eighth month.

Accumulation of the fifth period to be paid on the 1st day of the ninth month, etc.

And continuing so long as any funds are available therefor under this act, to the annuitants identified monthly in accordance with section 6, paragraph (c), of this act.

RULES AND REGULATIONS

SEC. 7. All administrative details not specifically otherwise provided for in this act shall be governed by rules and regulations issued and promulgated by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs.

APPROPRIATION FROM THE FUND

SEC. 8. The Secretary of the Treasury, upon demand by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, is hereby authorized and directed to pay from money or moneys available in said United States citizens' retirement annuity fund the money necessary to cover the monthly annuities as designated by said Administrator to be paid to qualified annuitants, and for other purposes, in a total amount as elsewhere provided in this act, but in any event not to exceed at any time the amount on deposit in said fund; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sum or sums as may be necessary to establish and maintain this act, subject to reimbursement out of funds collected hereunder, pursuant to the provisions of this act.

PENSIONS NOT SUBJECT TO GARNISHMENT, ETC.

SEC. 9. Any annuity granted under this act, and the money proceeds thereof due or in the hands of the annuitant, shall be wholly exempt from attachment, garnishment, execution, levy, and/or any other judicial process.

DISQUALIFICATIONS

SEC. 10. No annuity shall be paid under this act to any person who is not at the time of payment domiciled within the United States or its territorial possessions.

SUSPENSION AND FORFEITURE

SEC. 11. The right of any person to receive an annuity under this act may be suspended and/or forfeited for any of the following causes:

(a) For engaging in any gainful pursuit.

(b) For violation of any of the provisions of this act.

(c) For unreasonable and unnecessary maintenance of any able-bodied person in idleness and/or for unreasonable and unnecessary employment of a person or persons or the payment to any person of any salary or wages or any other form of compensation in disproportion to the service rendered.

(d) For willful failure or refusal to obey any rule or regulation issued under this act.

(e) For willful refusal by any annuitant to pay any just obligation.

DELAY IN PAYMENT—REMEDY

SEC. 12. If in any case the payment of an annuity to any person is delayed to an extent which causes an accumulation of 2 months or more of annuities, then, and in that event, the expenditures by the annuitant for the amount of any such accumulation shall be made upon the basis of 2 months for every month of such accumulation.

CERTAIN OFFENSES A FELONY—PENALTY

SEC. 13. It shall be a felony, and punishable as such, for any applicant for an annuity, or for any annuitant, or any person required by this act to make any return for the payment of any tax, to make any false statement, or to knowingly withhold any facts material to the proper administration of this act, with intent to defraud the United States, under a penalty of a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.

CONSTRUCTION OF THIS ACT

SEC. 14. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act or the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD].

Mr. LORD. Mr. Chairman, we have in the State of New York an old-age-pension system, and we have a pension system for widowed mothers and children and have just passed at this session of our legislature a bill to provide for unemployment insurance. We should have established insurance many years ago. I am so much interested in all of those subjects that at the beginning of this session I introduced an unemployment insurance bill. I think that my bill is better than the one before us, and I am in hopes, before this bill is considered finally, we may get a change in the bill along the lines of the bill which I introduced. My bill provides that the employer and the employed and the Federal Government shall share equally in the cost of the insurance. My reason is that a person who gets an annuity should have some part in the creation of that annuity. To get the most out of an annuity a person should help create it. I hope we may be able to amend the bill before the bill is passed.

One statement has been made to us here to the effect that the employer cannot afford to pay the expense. I think that is true. It will add a burden of 9 percent to all of the employers, but we must also consider the fact that the employer will pass that on; and my question is, Can the people at large afford to pay this added expense? There is a class of people who are not going to be protected, the farmer and domestic and various others, who do not come under the insurance. How is it going to look to them when some man loses his job and gets unemployment insurance, while his neighbor who has helped pay for that insurance does not get any relief whatever? That is what may happen in our rural communities, and that is what may happen to our domestics and farmers. They will contribute under this bill just as much toward creating an unemployment insurance fund as the man who receives the money. That is something to consider seriously—and this is why I contend that the employee should contribute an equal amount along with the employer.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LORD. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Under the New York State law are farmers included in the unemployment insurance?

Mr. LORD. No; the New York State bill is the same as the bill before us, and that is the bad part of it. I believe we should have a pension for our old people and one that is adequate, built up over a period of years. We should have security for women and children, and insurance for all unemployed. I hope that we can work out of this bill a just and adequate measure for all of the people, and one to be paid for by and for the benefit of all, including the farmer and domestic.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time, 26 minutes, to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, the economic security bill now before us raises grave constitutional questions. More and more as the proposals of this administration are presented and the motives behind them are revealed, thoughtful citizens turn to the Supreme Court as the one dependable instrumentality of Government to hold the rudder of the Constitution true.

Recent decisions of this great bulwark of liberty and justice have inspired new hope in the hearts and minds of those who believe in the principles of constitutional government.

Two comparatively recent and notable decisions of the Supreme Court ought to exert a restraining influence on the Congress as well as the executive branch of the Government. The economic security bill now before us is evidence that another attempt is to be made to evade constitutional limitations and invade the rights reserved to the States. This Congress, under irresponsible executive leadership, has already attempted to delegate its legislative power in violation of the Federal Constitution, and under the same leadership it has attempted to repudiate the promises of the Government to its citizens. The same leadership that has brought the stigma of repudiation upon this Congress may be satisfied to dismiss this ugly word by issuing a statement from the White House that "the President is gratified", but the responsibility for this injustice to the citizens of the Nation rests upon Congress.

The executive branch of the Government for the past 2 years has made a spineless rubber stamp of this legislative body, and it has done so to the humiliation of the self-respecting Members of Congress and to the detriment of the Nation.

It may require a more blistering rebuke from the Supreme Court and the pressure of an aroused and enraged public opinion to restrain this Congress from continuing to be the tool of those who would destroy the Constitution; but the time is not far distant when those who believe in constitutional government will speak with force and with finality.

There are times when I enjoy to turn back the pages of our history and examine the philosophy of those who framed the Constitution, and to compare it with the philosophy of the ardent advocates of the new deal who have all but destroyed it.

One of the framers of the Federal Constitution, in commenting on the advantages to be derived from having two branches of our National Legislature, made these interesting observations:

> Each House will be cautious and careful and circumspect in those proceedings, which they know must undergo the strict and severe criticism of judges, whose inclination will lead them, and whose duty will enjoin them, not to leave a single blemish unnoticed or uncorrected.
> Every bill will, in some one or more steps in its progress, undergo the keenest scrutiny. Its relations, whether near or remote, to the principles of freedom, jurisprudence, and the Constitution will be accurately examined; and its effects upon laws already existing will be maturely traced. In this manner rash measures, violent innovations, crude projects, and partial contrivances will be stifled in the attempt to bring them forth.

When the distinguished statesman and jurist made this statement he did not have in contemplation the time when a Chief Executive would usurp the functions of Congress, bend it to his will, make the legislative committees subservient to him, formulate the legislative program, draft the bills both as to substance and form, and then demand enactment of them into law without change. It did not occur to him, I venture to say, that legislators elected to the Congress of the United States would ever become so servile. Moreover, I dare say the thought never entered his mind that a Chief Executive would engage adroit counsel and assign to them the specific task of so formulating legislative measures as to evade the spirit and intent of the Federal Constitution. Few bills that have come before Congress, I am sure, have had more time spent upon them by legal talent in an attempt to evade and circumvent constitutional barriers than has the economic-security bill now before this House.

The provisions have been cut, carved, sawed, assembled, and reassembled in an effort to make it constitutionally presentable to the Supreme Court. A resort has finally been had to an ingenious mechanical arrangement of title II and title VIII as the most likely means of diverting the attention of the Supreme Court from the real issue, viz, that these two titles are the same in purpose, spirit, intent, and substance. This clever scheme may succeed, but I do not believe this mechanical subterfuge will deceive the Court. If the purpose sought to be accomplished does escape the scrutiny of the Court because of the mere juggling of titles, then other police powers reserved to the States may in the same manner be taken over and operated by the Federal Government without let or hindrance.

But, Mr. Chairman, the courts are not dumb when it comes to detecting legislative subterfuges, even when such attempted evasions are drawn by the "brain trust" counselors. We have evidence of this in a recent opinion written by Federal Judge Charles I. Dawson in support of a decision adverse to new-deal legislation. The language and the logic expressed in the opinion are appropriate and applicable to title II and title VIII in the bill before us. Judge Dawson writes:

> It is impossible for anyone who has any respect for constitutional limitations to contemplate this law with complacency. * * *
> It is the plainest kind of an attempt to accomplish an unconstitutional purpose by the pretended exercise of constitutional powers.

In this same opinion Judge Dawson said that if the act itself shows that—

> Subterfuges were resorted to to circumvent constitutional limitations, no judge who respects his oath to support and defend the Constitution will hesitate to strike it down, it matters not how great may be the demand for such legislation.

Executive domination is responsible for including in this economic-security bill subject matter that should have been brought in under separate measures. Never under any circumstances, except under present dictatorial pressure, would the Ways and Means Committee have brought a bill in here loaded down with subject matter some of which ought to receive profound study before being launched in perilous times like these. There would be little if any opposition to Federal aid to the humanitarian subjects, such as adequate aid to the aged, grants to States for dependent children, grants in aid of maternal and child welfare, grants to maternal and child-health service, grants to aid crippled children, aid to child-welfare services, support to vocational rehabilitation, and to public-health work.

But there is included in this bill, by the direction and at the command of the President, the compulsory contributory old-age-annuity provision. As I have stated, it raises a grave constitutional question, and, beyond all this, it lays a heavy tax burden on employers and employees alike when they are least able to bear it, not to meet an emergency or to furnish immediate relief to those in need. Titles II and VIII, I repeat, were placed in this bill and kept in this bill because you were ordered and commanded to do it by the President.

This measure, like so many complex bills that have preceded it, was not brought here, and you did not dare bring it here, until it had run the gamut of administration approval. First it had to satisfy the "brain trust." Next it had to receive the benediction of the President. When the press announced that the majority members of the Ways and Means Committee had been to the White House to obtain the consent of the President to bring the economic-security bill before the House of Representatives for consideration, I was reminded of the truth that history repeats itself. Almost six centuries ago, when the King of England convened Parliament, the sole duty of the Commons was to consent to taxes. Later on, in 1354, Edward III, for some reason not revealed, asked the Commons their opinion of the French war which he was then carrying on, and this was their reply:

> Most dreaded lord, as to this war and the equipment needed for it we are so ignorant and simple that we do not know how nor have we the power to decide. We, therefore, pray your grace to excuse us in the matter.

The parallel is in the procedure only—not a reflection upon the intellectual capacity of my colleagues. I want it distinctly understood that I have a profound admiration and respect for the character and intelligence of my associates on the Ways and Means Committee. What I deplore is the lack of legislative independence so much needed to prevent constant dictatorial Executive interference with the legislative branch of the Government. A great statesman has said:

The true danger is when liberty is nibbled away for expedients and by parts.

The centralization of power in the executive branch of the Government is a menace of major proportions.

I know that the admonitions of George Washington on this point will fall on deaf ears, but I hope you will indulge me while I quote from his Farewell Address:

It is important likewise—

He said—that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration, to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism.

A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominate in the human heart is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position.

The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power by dividing and distributing it into different depositories, and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against invasions of the others, has been evinced by experiments, ancient and modern; some of them in our country and under our own eyes. To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them.

If in the opinion of the people the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation, for though this in one instance may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can anytime yield.

Again let me remind the members of the majority that even though you enact title II and title VIII as commanded by President Roosevelt the responsibility for an adverse decision by the Supreme Court as to the constitutionality of these two titles will rest upon you. It will not relieve you from it to say: We obeyed our master's voice. Will he come to your rescue? Not at all. What will his answer be? Is he not in a position to say this, "My fellow countrymen, I made my position clear on this subject when I was Governor of New York State. In a radio address broadcast on March 2, 1930, I then said"?—

As a matter of fact and law the governing rights of the States are all of those which have not been surrendered to the National Government by the Constitution or its amendments. Wisely or unwisely, people know that under the eighteenth amendment Congress has been given the right to legislate on this particular subject (prohibition); but this is not the case in the matter of a great number of other vital problems of government, such as the conduct of public utilities, of banks, of insurance, of business, of agriculture, of education, of social welfare, and of a dozen other important features. In these Washington must not be encouraged to interfere.

Federal Government costs us now $3,500,000,000 every year, and if we do not halt this steady process of building commissions and regulatory bodies and special legislation like huge inverted pyramids over every one of the simple constitutional provisions, we will soon be spending many billions of dollars more.

Mr. Chairman, what is the situation? It is this: Five years ago in the broadcast from which I have quoted, Governor Roosevelt stressed his opposition to the type of Federal legislation which you now seek to enact. His reasons then given were, viz, that—

The governing rights of the States are all those which have not been surrendered to the National Government by the Constitution or its amendments.

That among the governing rights of the States not so surrendered are insurance, social welfare, business, and others.

You on the majority side say that you cannot understand our position with reference to title II and title VIII. I venture to suggest that the minority has a clearer conception of where the President stands with reference to the unconstitutional aspects of titles II and VIII than do you on the majority side. The position taken by President Roosevelt, when he was Governor of New York State, as to the constitutional questions involved in legislation of the character of the bill now before us, was sound then, and it is sound now, and you know it and he knows it. We know it, and under our oath of office we shall support the Constitution.

You may manipulate, distort, and butcher this bill in an endeavor to evade the fundamental law of the land, but you cannot change the fundamental purpose, the facts, nor the law.

The tenth amendment to the Constitution provides that the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people.

The fourteenth amendment does not take from the States police powers reserved to them at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. Furthermore, the Supreme Court of the United States has steadfastly adhered to the principle that the States possess, because they have never surrendered, the power to protect the public health, morals, and safety by any legislation appropriate to that end, which does not encroach upon the rights guaranteed by the National Constitution. What is more, as stated by Judge Cooley in his great work, Constitutional Limitations:

In the American constitutional system, the power to establish the ordinary regulations of police has been left with the individual States, and it cannot be taken away from them, either wholly or in part, and exercised under legislation of Congress.

Neither can the National Government, through any of its departments or officers, assume any supervision of the police regulations of the States.

Furthermore, the distinguished author makes this additional observation:

And neither the power (police power) itself, nor the discretion to exercise it as need may require, can be bargained away by the State.

Aside from insurmountable constitutional objections, there are practical reasons that ought to deter you from enacting titles II and VIII. Under these two titles the Congress proposes to compel the employers and employees to assume a financial burden that will ultimately amount to over $32,000,000,000. It is proposed to set up a bureaucratic scheme like this when 12,000,000 wage earners are without employment, when one-sixth of our population is on the relief rolls, when our national and State debts are appalling, and in face of the fact that it will be years before benefits will be paid.

Mr. Chairman, speaking of the present plight of the country brings me to a discussion of title III and title IX, which deal with unemployment insurance. This is another compulsory pay-roll tax. The system that is proposed to coerce the States to adopt by means of a 3-percent pay-roll tax, imposed on employers who employ 10 or more persons, is a State function as distinguished from a Federal function. The States may or may not set up an unemployment system, but in a State that fails to do so the employers who fall within the purview of titles III and IX will receive no unemployment benefits for their employees from the 3-percent tax imposed. In such a case it is not a tax but a penalty, and, therefore, discriminatory as well.

The problem before the Nation today is to find work—not public work paid out of the taxpayers' money—but work in private industry. Private business and industry should be encouraged, not discouraged. What has been the philosophy under which our Government has operated for the past 150 years, until recently? It has been the nonintervention of government in competition with private business. When social or economic legislation has been presented the practice heretofore has been for Congress to ascertain whether the ideas proposed would produce useful or injurious results, without troubling about their theoretical value. Now all this is reversed by the apostles of Government intervention, who maintain that the brain trust, by reason of the intellectual superiority of its members, ought to control the whole complex of the Nation's industrial and commercial activities, even though it may deprive the citizen of initiative and therefore of liberty.

The gradual replacement of private initiative by that of Government domination is apparent to those whose intellectual and moral senses have not been dulled by Federal doles and assurance of "a more abundant life."

Steadily and gradually, under the powers granted by Congress to the executive branch of the Government, it is beginning to direct everything, manage everything, and monopolize everything. Day by day the Government will intervene more and more in the most trivial activities of its citizens.

The Congress has appropriated millions of dollars, in fact billions of dollars, of the taxpayers' money and made them available to Government functionaries to spend in developing Government plants and commercial activities to compete with private enterprise.

The United States of America, under constitutional government, has for 144 years, until the advent of the "new deal", surpassed every other Nation in the creation of wealth and in the wide distribution of it among the masses. The American philosophy of government has permitted the activity of the individual to reach its maximum and that of the Government to be reduced to a mimum. It is proposed now to reverse the American policy of private initiative and, instead, to make the Federal Government preponderent in the daily affairs of every individual.

Unemployment insurance is dependent on the pay rolls of private industry, not on Government pay rolls. Private pay rolls are a condition precedent to the success of the plan embodied in titles III and IX of the bill before us.

It has been truly said that—

> The man who is trying to make a living for his family and pay taxes to city, State, and Nation, always loses if he has a government for a competitor.

Mr. Chairman, the small-business man, the one who falls within the purview of titles III and IX is sorely pressed at the present time to maintain his solvency. These small concerns can meet this new burden of taxation only by either going out of business or by cutting expenses. How will the man employing 12 or 15 men reduce his expenses? He will, if possible, reduce the number of his employees to 9 to escape the tax burden.

Much has been said about the unemployment systems of foreign governments; that the United States is a backward nation in this field of social legislation. The experience of some of the other nations with unemployment insurance demonstrates clearly that if such a system is launched on a large scale during a period of depression, all that can save it from financial disaster is the Treasury of the Federal Government. The burden of keeping the system solvent will first fall on the wage earner.

Gustav Hertz, German labor economist, in a recent work on social insurance, states this:

> In Germany no one any longer doubts the fact that the employer's share of the premium is taken from the workman's wages. What the employer pays as his contribution to social insurance he cannot pay the workmen in the form of wages.

The author further adds:

> Some years ago a well-known trade unionist even had to admit that countries without social insurance have higher real wages than Germany (United States, Holland, Scandinavia), while another said: "High wages are the best social policy."

In other words—

Says Mr. Hertz—

> social insurances handicap wage development. But not only this, they also intensify wage struggles.

Mr. Hertz states that under the German system—

> Premiums started on a modest basis. The first were 1½ percent for employee and three-fourths of 1 percent for employer. Today the entire premium averages almost one-fifth of the amount of the wages, and for miners it is nearly 30 percent.

Mr. Chairman, I am not hostile to unemployment insurance, but I do maintain that such a system, to succeed, must be put in operation when the unemployment fund can be built up without retarding recovery.

British experience with unemployment insurance demonstrates the advantage of starting such a plan under auspicious circumstances. The British National Insurance Act went into effect December 16, 1911. It covered only 2,000,000 manual workers in "seven of the more unstable industries." After the outbreak of the World War, 1,500,000 were added to the insurance list. The scheme operated successfully from 1911 up to 1920. It could not do otherwise, because during that time there was practically no unemployment. Because of the war activities, it was almost impossible to find men to fill available jobs.

In November 1920 the unemployment scheme was expanded to cover a total of 12,000,000 workers. Then came the depression of 1920, followed by unemployment. What happened?

The fund of £22,000,000, accumulated prior to the depression, was exhausted by the middle of 1921. Then the unemployment system had to borrow from the Treasury, and by 1922 a debt of £14,300,000 had been incurred.

The employment-fund debt in March 1927 had increased to £24,710,000, more than twice what it had been the previous year.

Then contributions were increased and benefits reduced.

It became necessary in 1929 to borrow £10,000,000 more from the Treasury.

The annual cost in 1930 increased £13,000,000 more. The debt doubled in the next 12 months, and in March 1931 stood at £73,600,000—all this drawn from the Treasury and as an added burden to the taxpayers.

The indebtedness of the unemployment fund increased steadily at the rate of £1,000,000 a month.

In September 1931 the debt had reached £101,910,000.

Mr. Chairman, is this record and this experience of Great Britain to be ignored by the Members of this House? Theorists may do so, but ought we, as responsible representatives of the people, to do so?

It cannot be successfully disputed that the national budgetary crisis of Great Britain in 1931 was largely due from financing the unemployment system.

I want to impress on the Members of the House that during the calendar year 1931 the British Treasury paid out £16,000,000 in contributions, £28,000,000 in transitional benefits, and also loaned in addition to these sums fifty million to the unemployment fund.

Mr. Chairman, only last year, 1934, one of the great problems of the British Parliament was to find some way to establish the unemployment system on a solvent and self-supporting basis. It still remains an unsolved problem in Great Britain.

I urge you not to disregard the facts. The greatest boon that can come to the wage earners of this Nation is industrial and business recovery. The unemployed want jobs and not doles. Recovery cannot come by plunging the Nation further and further into debt by increasing Government bureaus and commissions and by imposing taxes. The way to confidence and recovery is not by squandering money on experiments that have been tried and that have failed.

Let us replace experiments with experience. "Experience," says Wendell Phillips, "is a safe light to work by, and he is not a rash man who expects success in the future by the same means which secured it in the past." [Applause.]

Analysis of Social Security Bill

Title I. Grants to States for old-age assistance

(a) Appropriation: $49,750,000 in fiscal year 1936, and so much as may be necessary in future years.

(b) Appropriation made out of Treasury; no special tax levied.

(c) Federal Government pays one-half cost of State old-age pensions, with limit of $15 per month per person. Example: If rate is $20 per month, Federal Government will pay $10; if $30 or more, Federal Government will pay $15.

(d) To qualify for Federal assistance, State's old-age-pension law must meet certain Federal standards of administration, and must not—

(1) Have an age requirement in excess of 65 years, except until January 1, 1940, when it may be 70 years.

(2) Have a residence requirement in excess of 5 years out of the last preceding 9 years, including the year immediately preceding the date of application.

(3) Deny a pension to a person otherwise eligible who is a citizen of the United States.

Title II. Federal old-age benefits (compulsory contributed annuities)

(a) Money required under this title to be raised by tax on beneficiaries and their employers under title VIII.

(b) Provides for payment of retirement annuities at age 65 to workers subject to the tax under title VIII.

(c) To qualify for retirement benefits—

(1) The worker must be 65 years of age or over.

(2) The total amount of taxable wages paid to him after December 31, 1936, and before he reached the age of 65 must not be less than $2,000.

(3) He must have received such wages in each of 5 or more calendar years after December 31, 1936, and before he reached the age of 65.

(d) The amount of retirement annuity is based upon the cumulative wages paid to the worker over a period of 5 or more years on which taxes have been paid. Where the total tax-paid wages have been between $2,000 and $3,000 the monthly annuity is one-half of 1 percent of such total wages. If the cumulative wages were more than $3,000, the monthly annuity would be computed as follows: One-half of 1 percent of the first $3,000, plus one-twelfth of 1 percent of the amount between $3,000 and $45,000, plus one twenty-fourth of 1 percent of the amount in excess of $45,000. In no case may the monthly annuity exceed $85.

Following are examples of how this method of computation will work out:

Total tax-paid wages over period of years:	Monthly annuity
$2,000	$10.00
$3,000	15.00
$5,000	16.67
$10,000	20.83
$20,000	29.17
$30,000	37.50
$45,000	50.00
$60,000	56.25
$80,000	64.58
$100,000	72.92
$125,000	83.33
$129,000 or more	85.00

(e) Where a person has paid taxes with respect to his wages, but at age 65 cannot qualify for a monthly annuity, he is reimbursed in an amount equal to 3½ percent of the amount of his total wages with respect to which taxes have been paid under title VIII.

(f) In case a worker dies before reaching the retirement age, his estate is paid an amount equal to 3½ percent of his tax-paid wages.

(g) For rates of tax, see title VIII.

(h) Exemptions from benefits: The persons exempted from the benefits under title II correspond exactly with the persons exempted from the tax under title VII, which see.

TITLE III. GRANTS TO STATES FOR UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION ADMINISTRATION

(a) Appropriation: $4,000,000 in fiscal year 1936 and $49,000,000 thereafter.

(b) To be used by States to meet cost of administration of their unemployment compensation laws.

(c) Money to be allocated on basis of, first, population; second, the number of persons covered by the State law; and, third, such other factors as the social-security board may deem relevant.

(d) In order to qualify for assistance, States must enact unemployment-compensation laws meeting certain Federal standards of administration, including acceptance by the State of the provisions of the Wagner-Peyser Act. The bill does not lay down any standards respecting the waiting period, the amount of unemployment compensation, nor the length of time it will be paid.

(e) No part of the Federal appropriation will be used in paying unemployment benefits.

(f) The money will be appropriated out of the general funds of the Treasury, but sufficient revenue will be derived from the pay-roll tax under title IX to cover the cost.

TITLE IV. GRANTS TO STATES FOR AID TO DEPENDENT CHILDREN

(a) Appropriation: $24,750,000 for fiscal year 1936 and such sums as may be necessary thereafter, paid out of general revenues of Treasury.

(b) Federal Government will match State appropriations for same purpose on basis of $1 for each $2 spent by State.

(c) Limit of Federal contribution would be $6 per month for first child and $4 for each additional child in family.

(d) To qualify for Federal assistance, States must submit and have approved by social-security board their plans for caring for dependent children. Plan must meet certain Federal standards.

These allocations must be matched by the States on a dollar-for-dollar basis. Remaining $980,000 to be allocated on basis of need and live births and not to be matched.

(d) To qualify for assistance, States must submit and have approved by Children's Bureau their plans for maternal and child services.

Part IV. Vocational rehabilitation

(a) The present authority for appropriations for vocational rehabilitation must be renewed every 3 years. It expires at the end of the fiscal year 1937.

(b) The bill authorizes the appropriation of an additional $841,000 in the fiscal years 1936 and 1937 and authorizes a permanent appropriation of $1,938,000 for each succeeding fiscal year.

(c) In addition, the bill provides $22,000 for administration expenses during 1936 and 1937 and $102,000 thereafter.

Part V. Administration

(a) Appropriation, $425,000 for fiscal year 1936.

(b) Eight million dollars to be allocated to States, $2,000,000 to be used by United States Public Health Service.

(c) Grant to States to be used in establishing and maintaining adequate State and local public-health services.

(c) Board to be independent agency.

(d) Bill authorizes appropriation of $500,000 for expenses in fiscal year 1936.

TITLE VIII. TAXES WITH RESPECT TO EMPLOYMENT

(a) This title should be considered in connection with title II, since the tax and the benefits are all part of one scheme. The provisions are separated into two different titles for the purpose of lending a color of constitutionality. If they were incorporated in a single title, they would clearly be unconstitutional, since the Federal Government has no power to set up a social-insurance scheme under the guise of a tax. Even with the two titles separated, there is still a grave doubt as to the constitutionality of the scheme.

(b) Title VIII levies a tax on certain employees and their employers for the purpose of setting up a fund out of which to pay the retirement annuities to such employees under title II.

(c) A separate tax is imposed on the wages received by workers and on the pay roll of their employers. The tax applies only to the first $3,000 of the employee's annual wage, that portion of the wage in excess of that amount being exempted. Thus if the annual wage were $2,500, it would all be taxed, and if it were $5,000 or $10,000, only $3,000 of it would be taxed.

(d) The rates of tax on employer and employee are as follows: 1 percent on each in 1937, 1938, and 1939; 1½ percent on each in 1940, 1941, and 1942; 2 percent on each in 1943, 1944, and 1945; 2½ percent on each in 1946, 1947, and 1948; 3 percent on each in 1949 and subsequent years.

(e) The following classes of employees are exempt from the tax, and therefore from the benefits under title II:

(1) Agricultural labor.

(2) Domestic service in a private home.

(3) Casual labor not in the course of the employer's trade or business.

(4) Service performed in the employ of the United States Government or instrumentalities thereof.

(5) Service performed in the employ of a State or political subdivision or instrumentalities thereof.

(6) Service performed in the employ of a church, school, hospital, or similar religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational institution not operated for private profit.

(7) Offices and members of the crew of American or foreign vessels.

(f) Wages paid to employees over the age of 65 would not be taxed.

TITLE IX. TAX ON EMPLOYERS OF 10 OR MORE

(a) The purpose of this tax is to force the States to enact unemployment-insurance laws.

(b) The object is achieved by levying a pay-roll tax on employers of 10 or more persons during any portion of 20 or more weeks during the year. Against this tax, a credit would be allowed, up to 90 percent thereof, for any contributions paid to a State unemployment-insurance fund. No credit would be allowed for private unemployment funds set up by the individual employer.

(c) The rate of tax is 1 percent of the pay roll in 1936, 2 percent in 1937, and 3 percent in 1938 and subsequent years.

(d) The exemptions from the tax, in addition to employers of less than 10 persons, include the following classes of employment:

(1) Agricultural labor.

(2) Domestic service in a private home.

(3) Service performed by an individual in the employ of his son, daughter, or spouse, and service performed by a child under the age of 21 in the employ of his father or mother.

(4) Service as an officer or member of the crew of a vessel on the navigable waters of the United States.

(5) Service in the employ of the United States Government or instrumentalities thereof.

(6) Service performed in the employ of a State or political subdivision or instrumentalities thereof.

(7) Service performed in the employ of a church, school, hospital, or similar institution not operated for private profit.

(e) In order for an employee to be able to credit against the Federal tax his contribution to a State unemployment-insurance fund, the State law must have been approved by the Social Security Board as meeting the standards laid down in the bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield the remainder of my time, 1 hour, to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON].

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, it is always a pleasure to hear the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] upon any subject. He is one of the most capable members of the minority on our committee of the House of Representatives. He is a splendid lawyer. I endeavored to hear every utterance he made. I assume from his remarks that the constitutionality of title III and title IX is not involved in this discussion. As I heard the gentleman, the constitutionality of those titles was not attacked. The gentleman from New York dealt with title III and title IX as a question of policy. As I understood the gentleman, he favored the humanitarian titles in the bill. If I caught his statements, he favored title I, the old-age pension phase of the bill, and title IV, which deals with dependent children; title V, maternal and child welfare; and title VI, public health. He attacked title II and title VIII upon the ground of unconstitutionality.

While I have great faith in the gentleman from New York, I have confidence in his judgment, I submit to the House that his statements referring to the unconstitutionality of titles II and VIII were generalities and conclusions, and while I have confidence in the gentleman's judgment, I prefer, after the study I have made, to follow the opinion of the Department of Justice that the House of Representatives, the Congress of the United States, should not be deterred from the passage of titles II and VIII because of fear of unconstitutionality.

Further, in that connection, I submit to the House that the reasons the gentleman assigned for the unconstitutionality of titles II and VIII can, with more force, be applied to the titles of the bill which the gentleman supports.

It is a difficult matter, when a bill is under attack from so many sectors, to know just wherein the real attack lies. We have our friends on the minority saying we should do this and we should do that. Some say that the benefits under the bill are not sufficient; others say that the moneys necessary to pay the benefits provided in the bill will bankrupt our Government; that to pay the benefits under the bill, too heavy a burden will fall on industry.

I dare to state that this pioneer in the White House is the cause of bringing to the floor of the American Congress legislation affecting humanity, legislation affecting folks, legislation affecting people, old people, young people, afflicted people. I can say without chance of contradiction that since my sojourn in this House, in former days it was legislation for vested interests; it was legislation affecting property rights that always had the right-of-way. No legislation of this character was ever conceived or considered.

No criticism or attack can detract from the glory that will come to this great humanitarian who occupies the White House; no partisan criticisms can detract from this Congress when they write upon the statute books this legislation affecting men, women, and children. [Applause.]

It is pioneer legislation for this country. In this character of legislation this country has been backward. It has been out of step with the world when it comes to humanitarian legislation. It is a happy day when the Congress of the United States takes under consideration legislation that will reach out into every nook and corner of this country, benefiting the unfortunates who are citizens of our country.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] would have you, and the country, believe that the only people appearing before the committee during the hearings and the only people favoring this legislation were those connected with the new deal administration of President Roosevelt—" new dealers ", as he termed them.

Let us examine the record and see what the facts are. A total of 103 witnesses were heard by the committee. Seven others either filed letters, telegrams, or briefs, making in all a total of 110. Of this number, only 11 persons connected with the administration were heard, namely, the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau; the Secretary of Labor, Mrs. Perkins; the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Miss Roche; Second Assistant Secretary of Labor, Mr. Altmeyer; Federal Relief Administrator, Mr. Hopkins; Surgeon General United States Public Health Service, Dr. Cummings; Assistant Surgeon General Public Health Service, Dr. Waller; Chief of the Children's Bureau, Miss Lenroot, daughter of Ex-Senator Lenroot, Republican, of Wisconsin; Chief Economic Analyst, State Department, Mr. Hansen; Chairman Railroad Retirement Board, Mr. Latimer; and Chairman National Mediation Board, Mr. Leiserson.

In addition to those directly connected with the administration, there were 10 Members of Congress who testified, including the following Republicans: Senator HASTINGS, chairman Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee; Representative BURNHAM, of California; Representative COLLINS, of California; and Representative MOTT, of Oregon.

Only 15 of those comprising the 14 advisory groups working with the President's committee were witnesses during the hearings, and, of course, these men and women cannot be classed as being connected with the administration, except insofar as they are with the administration in advocating and supporting this legislation.

It might be well to devote a little attention to the manner in which this legislation reaches the floor of the House. It has not been hastily prepared or hastily considered by your committee.

In the last Congress a subcommitee of the Ways and Means Committee spent weeks upon one very important phase of it, unemployment compensation. We realized it should take more time and should have more study, and the President of the United States appointed the Economic Security Committee. One hundred and sixteen men and women, in every walk of life, served in an advisory capacity on that committee. Industry, labor, farmers, insurance, social workers—every phase of our life was represented. The President's committee was composed of four members of the Cabinet, Secretaries of Labor, Treasury, and Agriculture, the Attorney General, and the Relief Director. This committee worked for 6 months, with the experience of the world behind them.

Opportunity was given for anyone to testify before that committee. They made their report. Then the original bill, H. R. 4120, was introduced.

I wish time would permit calling the attention of this Congress to the difference between H. R. 4120 and H. R. 7260. I would not have you think for a split second that the central theme running through H. R. 4120 is not in H. R. 7260, the bill under discussion. The central theme, security for unfortunates, is embodied in H. R. 7260 from beginning to end. One hundred and ten witnesses appeared before our committee, 103 in person and 7 filed briefs. Only 11 people connected with the administration were numbered among those witnesses. It was a splendid array. In the hearings we have something that can go forth to the 48 States in regard to social security that will be of benefit to mankind the rest of the way out.

I listened with a feeling almost of shame when I heard a member of that committee, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] say that those who constituted the advisory committee of the President "had never earned an honest dollar in any day of their lives."

Let us examine this list and see the character of citizens the gentleman from Massachusetts sarcastically refers to as "new dealers", and who the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] says "are not yet dry behind the ears and have never earned an honest dollar in their lives."

Who are these dishonest people? Examination of the list of those comprising these groups, shown on pages 39, 40, and 41 of the report, discloses the following men and women in this group who, with the others, formulated a general policy that is going to be of never-dying benefit to the aged, to women, and children—America's unfortunates: Frank P. Graham, president University of North Carolina; Gerard Swope, president General Electric Co.; Walter C. Teagle, president Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey; Marion B. Folsom, assistant treasurer Eastman Kodak Co.; William Green, president American Federation of Labor; George M. Harrison, president Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks; George Berry, president International Printing Pressmen and Assistants Union; Monsignor John R. Ryan, director department of social action, National Catholic Welfare Conference; Grace Abbott, University of Chicago, and former Chief of Children's Bureau; George H. Nordlin, chairman grand trustees, Fraternal Order of Eagles; John G. Winant, former Republican Governor of New Hampshire; Louis J. Taber, master National Grange; M. A. Linton, president Provident Mutual Life Insurance Co.; Louis I. Dublin, vice president, Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.; Dr. Walter L. Bierring, president American Medical Association; Dr. A. L. Chelsey, secretary Minnesota Board of Health; and many other equally patriotic and public-spirited citizens whose integrity and honesty need no defense.

Some say the old-age pension in title I is too small. Others say it is too large. I say that whatever amount is paid in grant to any State in the Union for old-age pensions is more than has ever been paid by the Federal Government under any former administration. Am I right or wrong? Any dollar that goes in grant to the States under title I for pensions to the unfortunate aged is more than has ever been paid under any administration.

It is said that $30 a month is inadequate. There is nothing in this bill that would prevent any State from making the pension to its citizens more than $30.

Distinguished men on this floor have attempted to say that the cost of administration under title II is 41⅔ percent of the money paid by employers, when, as a matter of fact, the cost of administration will not exceed 5 percent of the benefits paid. The difference the gentleman [Mr. TABER] had in mind goes to the men and women of this country in the form of unearned annuities.

My friend, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], in his opening remarks, said that 90 percent of this bill was good. Ninety percent of it. This is a pretty good record; this would be a pretty good batting average if you were playing on a baseball team—9 hits out of 10 times at bat, hitting 0.900; this is better than the President of the United States in one of his early messages said he would be satisfied with. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] is a splendid lawyer, one of the best in this House. While he feared unconstitutionality, I had not heard him, the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED], or any other Member on this floor attempt to put his finger on the point that involved unconstitutionality; no single case from any court is cited as authority for its unconstitutionality.

The gentleman from California [Mr. MCGROARTY] stated that the President of the United States never advocated titles I and II of this bill.

If he did not advocate titles I and II, why should we be chastised and criticized by Members who say that, except under the lash of the President, title II would not be in the bill? I think I can say that the President of the United States approves the purpose, the policy, the effect of H. R. 7260. I feel that I can say that the President of the United States believes in title II of this bill. In many respects it is the strongest part of the bill. The trouble with lots of folks is that they quit reading the bill before they get to title II, and I say this with all charity and tolerance. I do not want to be intolerant; it is so easy for a person to be intolerant. I recognize that those of us who have eaten breakfast, dinner, and supper with this bill, and slept with it for 3 solid months, might be prone to intolerance, but I trust I shall not be.

TITLE I. OLD-AGE PENSIONS

The sufficiency of the $49,750,000 provided in title I has been questioned. Suffice it to say that if you match $50,000,000 with $50,000,000 raised by the States, you have $100,000,000 to be spent the first 12 months. This is three and one-third times the amount of money that was paid out in old-age pensions throughout the entire United States in the year 1934.

The original bill placed a limit at $125,000,000 the second year and the years thereafter. The bill under consideration authorizes the appropriation of such amount as is necessary to match the States $15 per individual. The payments are made to the States. There is no trouble about the initial amount. If it does not meet the demands for the first 6 months of the next fiscal year, Congress will then be in session to meet the needs.

We have had many Federal grants in aid to States, but let me say to the House—and this is a statement that cannot be contradicted—that the powers under this bill that rest in the State are greater than those resting with the States in any other statute granting aid to States. Perhaps I should put it the other way around and say that under this bill there is less Federal power to be exercised in the administration of the act than in any grants-in-aid statutes on the books. We made it a point to preserve the rights of the States. You will find that in the question of administration the selection, the tenure, the salary, all that went with personnel, is left to the States.

There is no yardstick laid down in this bill by the Federal Government with respect to the aged who will get the benefits under title I. The States have that power; it is theirs under the Constitution of the United States. No effort was made to deprive them of it. One State may have one yardstick, and a second State may have another yardstick; only subject to the age limit of 65 or 70, up to 1940, the question of 5 years' residence within the States during the preceding 9 years, the last year of which must have been spent in the State immediately prior to time the application was made; and thirdly, that no citizen of the United States can be excluded from the provisions of the act.

The question is raised that $15 per individual per month is not a sufficient amount. Will gentlemen who oppose the bill because they say it is not enough join with those who oppose the bill because they say it is too much and defeat the purpose of the bill?

I shall read a few lines from the message of the President of the United States which he issued 3 months ago today as the foundation rock upon which you can build this structure. The pending measure is not proposed as a perfect bill. In the committee we had contests, and they were honest-to-God contests. The minority joined in and they were quite helpful up to the time they had the Republican conferences, and then, instead of voting their judgment, they voted "present."

Why, at the time my friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] read from that message which was written 600 years ago to the King when the representatives of the House of Commons bowed in obeisance and wanted to know what he would have them do, I could not keep from thinking that if it had been in this day, and they had received advice from the Republican conference, they would have received the mandate, to vociferously vote "present." Think about it. There were 3 months of open hearings and executive sessions. All the time they helped a lot. They made intellectual contributions to this measure in order to perfect it the best we could, and then after voting affirmatively to report out every title in this bill except titles II and VIII, most of the time unanimously, when it came to the scratch, they very loudly voted "present."

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. How could a man, in keeping with his conscience, who is opposed to titles II and VIII, vote any other way at that time except to vote "present"? He has no other alternative.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I may say to the gentleman from Ohio that he was one of those who from the beginning objected to titles II and VIII. His conscience was squarely fixed early in the game. However, there were some other gentlemen on his side of the aisle that did not make up their minds to vote "present" until the Republican conference. I think the gentleman will bear me out in that statement.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I must go along.

Mr. MOTT. I think the gentleman made a misstatement which he himself will correct.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. As the gentleman suggests a misstatement, I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman stated that Members on the Republican side objected that the amount of the old-age pension provided in this bill was too large. I would like to have the gentleman state who on the Republican side, or even on the Democratic side, made such a statement.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] was quite emphatic in asking where we were going to get the money. Many gentlemen on the Republican side have asked that same question. Some other gentlemen have made that statement, and then in the next breath said that the amount was inadequate.

Mr. MOTT. With reference to title I?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Title I; yes.

Mr. MOTT. I never heard such a statement made.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I cannot help it if the gentleman has not heard the statement.

Mr. MOTT. I have been here continuously since the debate started.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Then something is wrong with the gentleman's hearing.

Mr. Chairman, I want to read a paragraph from the President's message which should guide us in framing this bill. This is the first time that the Congress of the United States ever attempted legislation of this kind. I say in all seriousness that we must be cautious in the laying of the foundation rocks upon which this structure will be built. I quote from the President's message:

> It is overwhelmingly important to avoid any danger of permanently discrediting the sound and necessary policy of Federal legislation for economic security by attempting to apply it on too ambitious a scale before actual experience has provided guidance for the permanently safe direction of such efforts. The place of such a fundamental in our future civilization is too precious to be jeopardized now by extravagant action. It is a sound idea—a sound ideal. Most of the other advanced countries of the world have already adopted it, and their experience affords the knowledge that social insurance can be made a sound and workable project.

Mr. Chairman, as I have stated previously, other countries have had old-age pension laws. There is an old-age pension law on the statute books of Canada. There they have an average monthly payment of $18.61. The maximum pension allowed in Canada is $20. May I say that when you provide an old-age pension of $30 a month it is more than any legislative body of any country has ever paid to its unfortunate people.

I insert herewith table showing the operation of the Canadian old-age-pension system.

Great concern has been shown over the number of persons that would come under the benefit of the old-age-pension title. I have disposed of any reasonable fear as to the sufficiency of the amount. But I would refer to the error as to the number that would be affected. There are 7,500,000 persons in the United States above the age of 65; 2,200,000 are gainfully employed. The best figures that we can get is that there are now 1,000,000 persons in the United States above the age of 65 on the relief rolls; there may be 1,225,000 or more persons that may be eligible for the old-age pension. It is a difficult matter to say just what number would qualify from those eligible. In the State of Ohio, with 414,000 eligibles under their State law, only 24,000 qualified after about 9 months' operation.

It might be interesting to know the number of old-age pensioners in foreign countries and the number of persons of eligible age. We insert herewith table setting forth this picture.

TITLE II. OLD-AGE BENEFITS

I go now to title II, Federal old-age benefits.

It has been said that ingenuity was exercised in the preparation of titles II and VIII. We have been charged with the crime of endeavoring to write provisions of law that were constitutional. That is what the charge amounted to. They say much effort has been made to make titles II and VIII constitutional. Is that a crime? Is it not the province and duty of a Member of Congress, and especially a committee, to bring to Congress a bill that is constitutional? May I say, with reference to this question, that the same constitutional basis for title I underlies title II.

I do not believe that anyone can question the constitutionality of title VIII. Mr. Chairman, title VIII is a tax. Congress has the power to tax. Title VIII has two sorts of taxes, an income tax and an excise tax, and no lawyer here, able as they are, has pointed to anything that would indicate that title VIII is unconstitutional.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Would title VIII be of any benefit in this bill if title II is stricken out?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. If title II is stricken, the money would be collected under title VIII under the power of the Congress to levy taxes. You would have the excise taxes collected. You would have the income taxes collected. What would become of them? The same thing would happen to that money that will happen under this bill, namely, the money will be covered into the Treasury of the United States. The money raised under title VIII goes into the general fund in the Treasury. That tax money does not go into the old-age reserve account, but goes into the Treasury of the United States.

I say that we have the same power to enact title II that we have to legislate with reference to titles I, IV, V, and VI. May I say, incidentally, that similar legislation to title V has been upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Sheppard-Towner decision.

Title II is complementary to title I. It is a complement to the old-age pension. I submit that we have the power to appropriate moneys called for in title II. The old-age reserve account is built up by regular annual appropriations. The collection of the tax is one operation under taxing power. The expenditure of regular appropriations for benefits under title II is another operation—under other powers.

You have in title II the purpose effectuated that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] wants. He said, "Why do you not balance the Budget?"

Title 2, in setting up the old-age reserve account and payments thereunder purposes to relieve from taxation, and not only relieve the Federal Government from taxes in taking care of the aged under the old-age pension plan, or direct relief, but it purposes and will relieve the States and the units of the States from taxation. It purposes to balance the Budget on that particular line and to have a businesslike, self-sustaining policy with respect to the aged.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. And to assure security in old age, as a matter of right.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman is correct.

The taxes under title 8 are not added taxes. In the years that have gone by the aged, the destitute, the young, the crippled have been taken care of somehow. They have not been taken care of as they should have been, or as they will be under this bill. But you have had local taxation, you have had State taxation, you have had Federal taxation to take care of that burden and you have such burden today. I say to you that in my opinion title 2, in building up this reserve account, is in aid of the taxpayer of this country, in the very aid of industry who has not complained of it.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. SAMEUL B. HILL. On that same point, as shown by the testimony of the experts, in the course of time, when they get this reserve fund built up, it will save the Federal Treasury $800,000,000 a year that otherwise would have to be paid out in old-age pensions.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The way I understand it, it is about $1,000,000,000 a year, and at the same time it saves the States untold added millions.

Now, under the original bill that came in here—and I wonder what our friends of the opposition would have said about it—when it was submitted to us, title 2, providing for old-age benefits, was not self-sustaining. They would have used the money put into the reserve account to pay the unearned annuities provided therein. In 1980 there would have been a burden of $1,400,000,000 on the Federal Treasury every year for old-age benefits and $500,000,000 for old-age pensions. We would have saddled upon the Federal taxpayers of that time a burden of almost $2,000,000,000 annually.

Now, our friends on this side of the aisle state there is a 9-percent pay-roll tax. Well, 3 plus 3 plus 3 does make 9, but you know they mix it up. They did not do it intentionally. You have not heard much about that in the last 2 or 3 days, because they have squared off and now understand it is not a 9-percent pay-roll tax until 1949, or 15 years from now, during which time you will have something like six Congresses to relieve, if this burden becomes too heavy upon industry. However, only 6 percent is paid by employers—3 percent is paid by employees.

The tax under title 8 starts on January 1, 1937. For 3 years it is 1 percent, 1937, 1938, and 1939. Then in 1940, 1941, and 1942, it is 1½ percent; in 1943, 1944, and 1945 it is 2 percent; in 1946, 1947, and 1948 it is 2½ percent; and in 1949 and following, it is 3 percent, both on employer and employee.

We had no testimony from any witness, as I recall, except Mr. Emery, inveighing against the levying of this tax. We were told, on the other hand, that there were private concerns today that paid as high as 9 percent on pay rolls for private pension funds; that the employer paid 9 percent on pay rolls for private pension funds, and that the employees paid 5 percent under these private pension plans or a total of 14 percent, as contradistinguished to the total of 6 percent 15 years from now.

I call to your attention that Federal employees under civil service have a retirement fund. I call to your attention that the railroad workers of this country fought for years to get Congress to give them the right to set up a retirement fund, to give them the right to participate in such a fund, to pay a pay-roll tax. So persistent were they that they finally won their fight in the Congress. Today the measure is in the Supreme Court, where the railroad workers of this country are fighting to uphold and maintain the Railway Pension Act, providing benefits for them, benefits for their wives, and benefits for their children; fighting in the courts to be permitted to help build up a retirement benefit for himself and dependents.

Tell me that the working man of this country is not entitled to an opportunity to construct a bill upon this plan in order that his widow and his children may be better cared for when the breadearner is gone!

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. BEITER. The gentleman is making a very enlightening address. Can he inform the House what will happen to the funds in private companies that are now carrying a pension fund?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. There is nothing in this bill that affects them. They can continue to have their private pension plans. The employer and the employee will be under the provisions of the law. There is a real question as to the treatment of those concerns that have private pension plans.

But it was thought best in this initial legislation to build the structure as we have, then look at it with the experience of years and meet that problem at a later date.

TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES

Criticism has been directed to this old-age reserve account. The statement was made here in the early hours of debate that this reserve would continue a public debt of $32,000,000,000 when the reserve account meets that figure. It takes many years for the reserve account to reach the figure of thirty-two billion, but I submit to you, on both sides of the aisle, and it seems to me this would be attractive to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], who has introduced a resolution calling for a constitutional amendment for the prohibition and abolition of tax-exempt securities, that in this old-age reserve account and the unemployment trust fund there is an answer to that problem. It will take some years to build up this old-age reserve account, but the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to invest the funds above the current needs in Government bonds and bonds the principal and interest of which are guaranteed by the Federal Government.

I say to those who have inveighed against the existence of tax-exempt securities you will not have to have any constitutional amendment. Build up this old-age reserve account, and you will see the withdrawal of tax exempts. There is no trouble about that. If, finally, the reserve account gets large enough and you have not Government bonds to withdraw, I take it some future Congress will provide that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to buy State tax-exempt securities yielding a proper rate of interest, in order to have the money there for the aged when they reach 65 years.

TREASURY FINANCING

The question of financing is an important thing. The saving of millions of dollars in interest is involved in the old-age reserve fund. Discretion is lodged in the Secretary of the Treasury to invest this money in Government bonds, if the time is ripe, under the unemployment trust fund—and I hope a similar provision will be incorporated in title II—he may use a special obligation if the interest rate on governments is not sufficient.

We have been told that the Secretary of the Treasury has full and complete authority, under existing law, to invest the appropriations placed in the old-age pension reserve account in special obligations; that heretofore other funds have been invested in similar manner to the funds which are to be deposited in the old-age reserve account; that such funds as those in the adjusted-service-certificate fund, the civil-service retirement fund, the Foreign Service retirement fund, and the Canal Zone retirement fund have been invested in such manner. In order to provide a security which meets the requirement of this fund, the Secretary of the Treasury issues special obligations direct to the fund, bearing interest at the rate specified in the basic law. While it may not be necessary, it seems to me to be the practical thing to give express directions to the Secretary of the Treasury to issue these special Treasury obligations direct to the old-age reserve account at an annual interest rate of 3 percent. We feel that this is particularly fitting due to the obligation assumed by the Federal Government to have a yield of at least 3 percent on the appropriation made to the account in order to build up the reserve required under the law.

Mr. HARLAN. If the gentleman has time, I would like to have him tell the committee why the old-age annuity is distributed directly by the Federal Government and not through State agencies, as the unemployment insurance.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Of course, the gentleman recognizes that you have something like ten or twelve milion persons involved. It runs over a period of from 20 to 65 years, a period of 45 years, and it was thought best that the tax money paid under title VIII should go into the Treasury of the United States. These benefits are not paid from the money but from moneys appropriated to the reserve account. That money must be invested by the Secretary of the Treasury, and that fund should be kept intact. The matter of security is involved. There must be no doubt that the aged should have that money when the proper time came. I think if the gentleman will think his question through he will see that security of payment should be the first thought in respect to the obligation of the Federal Government toward the aged in this respect, and that the Federal Government is the best agency to that end.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. I also call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN] to the fact that the contributory annuity is different in its administration from the other titles; that there is no social feature involved therein that there is in noncontributory old-age pensions, and we wanted to have our dual system of government preserved by having the noncontributory pensions administered by the local authorities, who would be responsive to local public opinion, which is the best medium of expression under our dual system of government. The contributory annuity is uniform. It has none of the sound service characteristics of noncontributory old-age pensions and administrative features where the State should be protected against encroachment by the Federal Government. It is best that the duty of administering this title should reside in the Federal Government. We have none of those questions that arise in the case of a gratuitous gift by the Government.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I might suggest that under the unemployment-insurance title of the bill the Federal Government pays the moneys back to the States, and the unemployment-insurance benefits are paid out through the reemployment agencies in the State. Hooked up with this payment of unemployment insurance is the thought that when the reemployment agencies throughout the State know that a person is drawing unemployment insurance, they may be able to provide a job for that man so that he can earn a living wage.

I suggest that we ought not to have fears as to the effect of this pay-roll tax under title VIII.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. That is the point I wanted to ask. How can the gentleman figure by any process of imagination that a pay-roll tax will not be handed on to the consumer and result in a reduction of wages by the employer?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I would answer the gentleman from Massachusetts that it could have no more effect than the taxes now levied and collected in local communities, the taxes levied and collected by State governments, the taxes levied and collected by the Federal Government to do the thing that these benefits do—to care for these unfortunates.

The very able gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY], the distinguished Chairman of our great Committee on Labor, knows that we have unemployment and old-age burdens. We have had it for years. We have it now. We will have it in the future. Consequently, as I said a moment ago, the taxes levied under title VIII are not additional tax burdens, but, as I see it, they are in great part in lieu of present tax burdens.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Conceding for the sake of argument that it did have the effect which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] says, the employee would have the benefit of it. If he paid it he would get it back, together with an equal amount paid by the employer. So that where he lost $1, he would get that dollar back and get an additional dollar from the employer.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] that it will have much less effect, there will be much less burden on the worker and the consuming public than would be if a certain plan that is proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts were enacted into law. In other words, I heard someone say that the proposition which the gentleman from Massachusetts intends to offer calls for a burden of $10,000,000,000 annually. Now, how can the gentleman say that that tax burden, paid by somebody, will not finally be passed on to the consuming public?

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. If the textile man or the shoe man or the United States Steel Corporation man, out of his income, has to pay for everybody in the United States on unemployment insurance, he cannot take that out of his worker right there in his steel plant.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I am fearful that the gentleman misunderstands what will happen. I am fearful that if his proposal is enacted into law there would be an increase of about a dollar per pair of shoes in order to take care of this burden.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I invite the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts to the fact that when Mr. Green appeared before the committee, speaking for labor, he specifically and definitely approved this very method of dealing with the question of unemployment insurance.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. And, as a matter of fact, as the bill was originally drawn, it called for one-half of 1 percent per year on employer and employee, and Mr. Green insisted that the initial rates be increased, in order to build up this fund quickly, in order that the benefits would be certain to be there for the workingman.

Now, in regard to the burden that comes from this pay-roll tax; I will not have time to read this entire table, but I want to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] that according to this table, boots and shoes would have a burden of a little more than one-fourth of 1 percent, if we had a 1-percent pay-roll tax it amounts to eighty-seven hundredths of 1 percent for the 3-percent pay-roll tax. I am speaking of the employer. Certainly he cannot charge the employees' part up to the employer, but when the gentleman from Massachusetts votes for this bill on final passage, I feel certain that his working men friends, and they are legion, and rightfully so, will place a star in his crown. They and their children will rise up to call him blessed. [Applause and laughter.]

I will say to the gentleman that when the 3-percent tax, the maximum tax on the employer under title VIII for old-age benefits, is reached it would have little effect upon the sale price. The average increase on all commodities per 1-percent tax is twenty-one hundredths of 1 percent. Let me say again to my beloved friend from Massachusetts—and he is my friend—he is a splendid type of American citizenship. [Applause.] Let me say to him that in 1980, from this old-age reserve account there will be expended approximately $4,000,000,000. One billion dollars of that is annual interest increment, due to these payments throughout the years. That is a real economic stabilizer in buying power—a godsend to your worker friends.

EXEMPTION FROM TAXATION

Now, I want to deal with the exemption features in title VIII. We have been actually criticized because agriculture, casuals, and domestics, and certain other people have been exempted from title VIII. I would like to know, and I am willing to yield in my time for reply, what Member of this House is willing to stand on this floor and say that agriculture, domestics, and casuals should be taxed for old-age benefits.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I would like to say that the millionaires and billionaires and the men who have fortunes and incomes over $5,000 ought to be taxed.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Oh, yes; and the gentleman would talk loudest and longest if the farmers of his section had to pay a tax under title VIII. Am I right or wrong?

Mr. LUNDEEN. If there is a farmer who has an income of over $5,000, I would tax him.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Oh, no. I am not talking of incomes over $5,000. Do not dodge it, my friend. The amount of income is not involved in title VIII. If farmers were subject to the tax under title VIII, he would pay $1 for each $100 he earned; if it were $10 he would pay 10 cents. Does the gentleman from Minnesota assert that the farmer of his district should pay that tax? [After a pause.] The gentleman is eloquent as usual, but it is the eloquence of silence. I say to you there were real reasons why those exemptions were made.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I gave the gentleman an opportunity to answer. If I am wrong, I will give the gentleman time to answer it.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The gentleman will hear from me later on.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The farmer, the casual, and the domestic were not taxed in this bill, because we knew that the House and Senate would not keep it in the bill. Nobody would want a farmer to pay a dollar a year for 45 years, with all of the nuisance features attached thereto, with all of the cost of administration. Suppose a man plowed for a farmer for a day, and he paid him a dollar a day, the employer would have to take out a penny and give him 99 cents for his day's work.

Then at the end of the road he would not have accumulated enough money to have paid for any substantial old-age benefits.

This bill exempts the farmer, exempts casuals, and exempts domestics, because the amount of the tax would be inconsiderable and its collection would be such a nuisance and cause such a clamor that the very ideal of the structure—the ideal to which the President refers—would be endangered. It would be too ambitious; no comparable benefits would come from it. No Member on the floor of this House, seriously understanding the bill, is going to complain about not taxing the farmer, the domestic, and the casual and the others exempted under the bill.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Did not the administrative authorities, in fact, the present Secretary of the Treasury, appeal to us not to extend it into those fields at this time because he felt that its administration would break down?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes, sir. He said that in his opinion it would be very difficult if not impossible of administration. In other words, I repeat, if you had put that in there, it would have been analogous to the situation that obtains in regard to the ambitions of certain folks under the N. R. A. legislation. You would have such confusion and such clamor that the good in the legislation well might be destroyed.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. BUCK. Will not the gentleman add to his statement also that for the same reasons seamen were exempted?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. They were exempted in unemployment insurance because there is no power under State law to collect the tax from them. They come under maritime or admiralty jurisdiction, and the State sovereigns have not the power to collect the taxes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Seamen are exempted under the employment-compensation title because of constitutional reasons that do not apply to the contributory annuities.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That is what I just said. They were exempted under title VIII because of administrative difficulties.

Mr. McCORMACK. If the gentleman will yield for one suggestion, I would like to point out that the pending bill provides that should a person die before reaching the age which entitles him to participate in the benefits, that 3½ percent of his salary is payable to his estate. So, in effect, he gets it back.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That is correct. Now, let us see what these benefits are. I made the statement when I was discussing title I that more liberal benefits could come from title I, more liberal and larger old-age pensions could come from title I, than any citizen of any other country of the world has ever received as an old-age pension. I make the statement that in some of the countries of Europe for more than 50 years have had the contributory annuity system. Germany started hers in 1881. There are 15 or 20 countries throughout the world which have contributory systems, and only 2 of which also have noncontributory systems, these 2 being France and England. In days past other countries had the noncontributory system that is similar to our title I, old-age pensions, but that broke down and they were compelled to come to the contributory system. I say to you here and now that benefits under title II are larger, in many instances several times larger, per month than the benefits other countries give to their citizens.

I come now to the maximum of $85 a month. It is very simple in computation; anyone can know what their benefits will be simply by knowing the total wages he has earned from January 1, 1937, to the time he reaches age 65. If you have earned $3,000 annually during a period of 5 years, your benefit will be one-half of 1 percent per month the rest of your life—in other words, $15 per month. This compares splendidly with benefits paid by European countries. But we do not stop there. Between the total wage of $3,000 and $45,000 you add to that $15 per month one-twelfth of 1 percent of $42,000, or $35 per month. If a person earned over a period of 40 years $42,000—counting in no one year more than $3,000—he would have an annuity of $50 a month. Now, if it goes up to the maximum of $3,000 a year for 45 years, the annuity is $85 a month.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Would a person be entitled to both old-age insurance and benefits under this particular title after he reached the age of 65?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Undoubtedly, if the benefit under title II were not sufficient under the law of the State where the person lived he would be entitled to supplement the benefits under title II with the old-age pension under title I.

VOLUNTARY ANNUITIES

At one time we had what we called the "voluntary annuity plan." I may say that in the original bill, H. R. 4120, those who earned more than $250 a month were not entitled to the benefits under what would be title II of this bill, but that the plan was changed and the basis adopted was the first $3,000 per year of total wages. If a man earns $10,000 a year, he pays a tax upon $3,000, under title VIII. Only $3,000 is counted in wages earned.

Now, as suggested by the Economic Security Committee, voluntary annuities up to $50 a month were suggested. Some thought that would be an invasion of private business in the insurance field. In connection with this new arrangement, there is not such particular need for the voluntary annuity plan, since you include many who would have been excluded originally, and you can have an annuity of $85 a month. Many of us think the time will come when the voluntary annuity plan which rounds out the security program for the aged will be written into law.

TITLES III AND IX.—UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION

Two titles of the bill deal with unemployment compensation, less accurately called "unemployment insurance." Title III provides Federal grants in aid to the States for the administration of unemployment-compensation plans. Title IX levies a tax upon employers against which contributions to State unemployment-compensation plans may be credited up to 90 percent of the Federal tax. This tax is designed to remove the principal obstacle to the adoption of State unemployment-compensation systems by providing a uniform tax upon employers throughout the country for this purpose. The principal features of this tax are as follows:

First. Coverage: Employers of 10 or more employees within 20 weeks of any year, with the same exemptions as the tax, to pay for old-age benefits.

Second. Rates: 1936, 1 percent; 1937, 2 percent; 1938, and thereafter, 3 percent.

Third. Credit of up to 90 percent of tax allowed for payments to State unemployment-compensation plans under the following conditions:

(a) Compensation to be paid through public employment offices.

(b) No compensation to be payable until after 2 years.

(c) State unemployment fund to be deposited with the unemployment trust fund of the United States Treasury.

(d) State fund to be used exclusively for unemployment compensation.

(e) Compensation not to be denied any eligible person for refusal to accept work if, first, the position vacant is due to a strike, lockout, or labor dispute; second, the wages, hours, or conditions of work are substantially less favorable to the worker than those prevailing in the locality; or, third, if the worker would be required to join a company union or to refrain from joining a bona fide labor organization.

(f) State to retain the right to repeal or modify its system.

(g) The State unemployment-compensation fund must be a general, State-wide, pooled fund.

Federal aid to the States for the administration of unemployment-compensation plans is provided in title III of the bill. It is assumed that this will be sufficient to pay the cost of administering the State unemployment-compensation plans, no matching by the State being required. The 10 percent of the Federal pay-roll tax for unemployment compensation, which is not subject to a credit and must be paid into the United States Treasury, will about equal the Federal aid for this purpose. In order to qualify for this aid the State plans for unemployment compensation must conform to the following conditions:

First. "Such methods of administration (other than those relating to selection, tenure of office, and compensation of personnel) as are found by the Board to be reasonably calculated to insure full payment of unemployment compensation when due";

Second. Payment of unemployment compensation through public employment offices in the State;

Third. Opportunity for a fair hearing, before an impartial tribunal, for all individuals whose claims for unemployment compensation are denied;

Fourth. The payment of all money received in the unemployment fund of such State to the Secretary of the Treasury to the credit of the unemployment trust fund established in the United States Treasury;

Fifth. Expenditure of this money exclusively for unemployment compensation;

Sixth. The making of reports to the Social Security Board;

Seventh. Making available employment records of individuals to any agency of the United States charged with the administration of public works or assistance.

If the Social Security Board finds that a State is failing substantially to conform to these conditions it may, after notice and opportunity for hearing, refuse to certify a State for further grants-in-aid for this purpose.

These two measures are designed to encourage the States to enact unemployment-compensation legislation. The uniform tax throughout the country will remove the principal obstacle. The Federal aid will permit a necessary minimum of Federal assistance and supervision.

TITLE IV—DEPENDENT CHILDREN

For the first time in the history of our Federal Government it is proposed to assist the States in the preservation of the home. It has been and it is now recognized to be the primary function of the State. The home is the foundation rock of our Government. Under existing State laws, approximately 109,000 families with 280,500 children are now provided some mothers' assistance. Three and one-half times this many families fall within a group roughly comparable to the mothers' pension group, namely, families of widowed, separated, or divorced mothers with dependent children under the age of 16 years, which are estimated to be receiving emergency relief. In the 358,000 relief families of this type, it is estimated that there are 719,000 children under the age of 16 years. Many other thousands of children are in orphan asylums and children's homes, separated from their mothers or close relatives who could act in loco parentis except for financial need.

It occurs to me that it would be a waste of effort to stress the benefit that will come to the dependent children in the enactment of this title. The gentleman from New York, Dr. SIROVICH, portrayed the picture and the benefits flowing from the legislation in such an eloquent and forceful manner that it seems unnecessary for me to urge it further.

The approximate annual expenditures for mothers' pensions is $37,200,000, of which about $6,000,000 comes from State funds, the remainder coming from local governmental units. Crude estimates of expenditures from emergency relief funds, of which approximately three-fourths comes from the Federal Treasury, for relief of families headed by widowed, separated, and divorced women, total $120,000,000; more than three times the amount spent for mothers' pensions.

This bill authorizes an appropriation of $24,750,000 for the first fiscal year and for each fiscal year thereafter a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of this title. The President's committee was of the opinion that it would require an estimated sum of $25,000,000 for the second fiscal year and not more than $50,000,000 per year thereafter as the program developed. This is an inconsiderable sum in comparison with the benefit upon the children of today who have suffered so horribly in the depression years.

The Federal Government, under this legislation, will pay to each State which has an approved plan for aid to dependent children a sum equal to one-third of the total amount expended by said State with respect to any dependent child. The maximum Federal payment is $6 per month for the first dependent child and $4 for other dependent children. This insures a maximum benefit of $18 per month for the first child and $12 per month for each additional child.

At the present time 45 States of the Union have mothers' aid or mothers' pensions, but in many of these States the law is only partially operated—effective only in the richer counties. The State of Connecticut, which provides an average monthly grant per child of the sum of $18.70, is the only State in the Union which at the present time has a grant more than $18 per child per month. New York pays $17.30, Massachusetts $17.20. While the payments are made to the States on a matching of $2 on the part of the State to $1 Federal grant, State participation in this work in materially increased amounts would provide real home life for these unfortunate children.

The enactment of this title would not involve any larger expenditures than the Federal Government has been making for the support of these families on relief, but will very materially aid the States in caring for this group of their unemployables, for whom they must now assume responsibility.

I insert herewith table furnished me by the Economic Security Committee, which gives a comprehensive picture of the present status of State laws affecting dependent children.

MATERNAL AND CHILD WELFARE (TITLE V)

Maternal and child health

Part 1 of this title provides for Federal grants and aid to States to help them extend and improve their service in promoting the health of mothers and children. Twenty thousand dollars is to be allotted by the Secretary of Labor to each State, and $1,800,000 is to be divided among all the States on the basis of the number of live births in each State in proportion to the total number of live births in the United States. The remaining $980,000 is to be allotted by the Secretary of Labor according to the financial need of the States for assistance in carrying out the State plan. All State allotments, except those on the basis of need, are to be granted on an equal-matching—50-50—basis.

The able Chief of the Children's Bureau, Miss Katherine Lenroot, presented the experiences of that Bureau in previous administration of Federal aid in maternal and child-health work. This work presents no new departure. Experience has indicated that it is needed. Before the depression the infant death rate had been markedly reduced in every State in the Union. However, during the depression, between 1932 and 1934, there has not been the usual annual decrease—the rate remaining stationary.

The maternal-mortality picture is similar, but it is well known that the death rate among mothers has not decreased in anything like the proportion that the death rate among infants has decreased. This causes us to feel that increased facilities for maternal care and maternity nursing services are essential, not only for saving the lives of mothers, who are so necessary, both for their new-born and the older children in their family. The most effective way of reaching the problem of infant and maternal mortality is the development of public-health nursing services in connection with the public-health departments. All of the work under this title is done through State departments of health and the entire control of policies is reserved to the States.

In the following table, I am showing the amount which will be granted to each State per million dollars of appropriation.

Crippled children

Part 2 of the title provides for services for crippled children and authorizes Federal grants to help the States extend and iimprove their services for discovering crippled children, and providing such children with medical, surgical, corrective, and other services and care in connection with their physical disability.

I am personally familiar with this type of service. In my State it has been under the supervision of the crippled children's commission, of which former United States Senator Ben Williamson has been chairman since its creation. Hundreds of children who were permanently disabled have been so far restored that they have been able to walk and play and to return to school to take their part in normal life. Careful surveys have shown that in Kentucky, and most other States, less than 40 percent of the crippled children who are in need of correction cannot be served on account of the limitation of funds. These additional grants-in-aid will restore hundreds of crippled children to usefulness and happiness.

Child welfare

Part 3 of the title authorizes the appropriation of $1,500,000 to enable the United States, through the Children's Bureau, to cooperate with State public-welfare agencies in the work of establishing and extending public-welfare services for the protection and care of dependent, homeless, and neglected children, and children in danger of becoming delinquent.

The money authorized hereunder is to be divided as follows:

Ten thousand dollars is to be allotted to each State and the balance to be divided among the States in the proportion which the rural population bears to the total rural population of the United States.

State welfare agencies are required to investigate many conditions requiring special welfare service for children, such as situations of extreme neglect in homes, feeblemindedness in parents and children, cruel and abusive parents, illegitimate children without competent guardians, children who are delinquent and come before the juvenile court, and many other types of problems.

The basic service necessary to deal with these situations is a child-welfare service which makes available skilled investigation as to the needs of the child and the use of whatever agency in the community or the State may be adapted to the particular situation. The development of such social service is of extreme importance, especially in the rural areas and in the areas suffering from extreme distress and destitution.

Vocational rehabilitation

Part 4 of this title provides permanent legislation for the work which has been undertaken by the Federal Government under temporary authority extended from time to time.

This is in no sense new work, but continues and expands worthy work which has been prosecuted quite successfully.

TITLE VI. PUBLIC HEALTH

Mr. Chairman, when we come to the consideration of title VI, we are speaking of work which is not in any sense experimental, work for the folks about which I know something personally. I wish every Member of Congress could have had the opportunity to see this work at first hand as I have had. I am carefully weighing my words when I say that no dollar of the taxpayer's money, local, State, or Federal, in my opinion, receives as much dividend as the money that is appropriated for the support of county health units.

I lived in Kentucky before we had county health units. I have lived there while they have been operating, and I live there now. It is the most remarkable piece of work for humanity that I have ever had the opportunity to observe, and I want to repeat that I know of no dollar of the taxpayer's money that gets the results in Kentucky as this particular money; that is, if health and life have any value—to me they have.

This plan of full-time county health departments was first developed in Kentucky, and the first county health unit in the United States was established in Jefferson County in 1907 and 1908. In 1911 similar departments were developed in North Carolina and the State of Washington, and the second department in Kentucky was in Mason County, which is in my district; and the fourth was in Boyd County, which is also in my district. Nineteen of the 20 counties in my district now have fully developed and active health departments. Seventy-eight of the 532 full-time county health departments in the United States are in Kentucky. There remain 2,468 counties in the United States without county health departments. Ohio, North Carolina, Maryland, Oregon, Montana, Alabama, and other States have made similar progress, and the great States of Pennsylvania, Vermont, and New York have had like development in the form of public-health districts.

All of these departments, in all of the States, have been developed under the supervision of the United States Public Health Service, with Federal aid or aid from the Rockefeller Foundation. However, in their development there has been no weakening of State and local authority. That this title is developed along sound lines, after years of research and demonstration, is indicated by the monumental report of the New York State Health Commission to its then Governor, the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, entitled "Public Health in New York State", and published in Albany in 1932. In appointing this committee, Governor Roosevelt said:

As an agency for serving the needs of the people, government should not be a static force, but should evolve to meet a changing and developing body of knowledge. This is particularly true in the field of public health in which, during the past decade or two, the far-reaching development of scientific facts upon which governmental action is based makes particularly necessary a periodic examination of the extent to which the State is meeting the needs of the people in this vital field.

He further quoted, with approval, a statement made by the respected Dr. William H. Welch, late dean of American medicine:

While public health is the foundation of the happiness and prosperity of the people and its promotion is recognized as an important function of government, how wide is the gap between what is achieved and what might be realized; how inadequate is the understanding of the public concerning the means adopted to secure the best results?

He requested this commission—to take into consideration the activities of State and local health authorities and their relations one to another, the recent progress in public health in other States and abroad, and to examine critically the extent to which the health needs of the people were being met.

The recommendations of the Roosevelt New York commission in regard to State aid are not only so pertinent to the discussion of that important policy, but apply so forcefully to the whole question of Federal aid, that I am quoting it in its entirety, substituting "Federal" for "State":

Careful consideration has been given to the policy of Federal aid in public health which has been in operation for more than a decade. The conclusion has been reached that Federal aid is a necessary policy, particularly for rural areas and in the development of new health activities.

Public health problems are never wholly local. For example, the existence of a communicable disease threatens other communities besides that in which it arises. There are very practical reasons, therefore, why the United States should give financial and technical advice to stimulate better local health conditions should precedent for it be found in other phases of community welfare. In fact, the commission is of the opinion that the only alternative to Federal aid for rural health service is operation by the Federal Government itself of direct health services to the people. Those who believe that Federal aid is undesirable must concede that its inevitable alternative is even less desirable from the standpoint of preserving local responsibility in the administration of health work.

Under the present conservative policies of granting Federal aid for county nursing services and county health departments in rural areas and similar health services, much has been accomplished in promoting the public health which otherwise would not have been done.

The commission recommends, therefore, that Federal aid be continued for the development and operation of local health activities.

The whole matter of local health service is summed up by the New York commission briefly and forcefully as follows:

Three successive legislative enactments indicate an increasing official recognition that the care of the public health is a responsibility of government and that it is more than a local responsibility.

Equally well said:

In the modern health program, qualified health officers, nurses, engineers, laboratorians, and other professional personnel on a full-time basis are essential if satisfactory service is to be expected.

In summing up its recommendations in regard to local health service, the Roosevelt commission said:

The United States Public Health Service, as a result of exhaustive studies of rural health needs, for many years has actively sponsored the county health idea through financial aid to demonstration counties and otherwise. This program has received the endorsement of the physicians of the country through resolutions of the house of delegates of the American Medical Association.

The Rockefeller Foundation, created "to promote the well-being of mankind throughout the world", has directed the major energies of its international health division to the development of local health departments on a county basis with full-time qualified personnel. It is significant that this great philanthropic organization, with the world as its theater of action and with the well-being of mankind its concern, centers its activities so largely upon health and its health activities so largely upon the county health unit.

The recent White House conference on child health and protection, after reciting the needs of childhood in health education and welfare, concludes its "children's charter" with a forceful statement of the organization necessary to give effect to the principles of child-health conservation: "To make everywhere available these minimum protections of the health and welfare of children, there should be a district, county, or community organization for health, education, and welfare, with full-time officials, coordinating with a State-wide program. * * * This should include trained full-time public-health officials, with public-health nurses, sanitary inspectors, and laboratory workers * * *." The health section of the League of Nations has devoted much consideration to the rural health problems of the world and has done much to promote local health service and improve the qualifications of health officers in many different countries.

The national leaders of both political parties have expressed approval of the plan.

There is authorized under this title an annual appropriation of $8,000,000 to be allotted to the States for the purpose of developing local health services through the State health departments.

The amount of the allotments are to be determined on the basis of first, population; second, special health problems; third, financial need of the respective States.

I have heretofore testified as to the splendid services performed by the county health departments of my State. Those who do not have such units cannot appreciate the real value of such work. With your permission, I insert excerpts from the testimony before the committee with reference to this splendid work.

STATEMENT OF DR. C. E. WALLER, ASSISTANT SURGEON GENERAL, UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

Mr. TREADWAY. You are assistant to Surgeon General Cumming?

Dr. WALLER. Yes, sir; in charge of the State's Relations Division of the Public Health Service.

Before I start on the functions of a county health unit, Mr. Chairman, I think I have approximately the answer to the first question that Mr. Vinson asked. He wanted to know what percentage of our total appropriation goes for health work. I may say that it is slightly over a million dollars, or a little over one-tenth of the total appropriation to the Public Health Service.

Mr. VINSON. That actually goes into public-health work?

Dr. WALLER. Yes, sir.

With respect to the functions of a county health unit, I should like to say, in the beginning, that the work of a county health unit is preventive in character. It is not for the purpose of providing medical care. In that respect it does not interfere in the slightest degree with the medical profession.

Mr. TREADWAY. You mean the local medical profession?

Dr. WALLER. The practicing physician. In fact, it has the opposite effect. The educational activities of a county health unit make more work for the practicing physician in that they bring our needs for medical care that otherwise would not be discovered, and direct cases into the hands of the private physicians.

The education work carried on by these units stimulates parents into having their children vaccinated against diphtheria, typhoid fever, and smallpox, and this work is added to the work that the practicing physician is called upon to do.

The personnel of a county health unit consists, first, of the full-time medical health officer, who is the director of the unit. This health officer is not just an ordinary practicing physician. He has to have special training in preventive work. That is his specialty, and it is just as much a specialty as is the specialty of practice on the eye, ear, nose, and throat, or the specialty of surgery.

In addition to this director of the unit, we have public-health nurses on the staff. We also have sanitary engineers or sanitary inspectors as members of the staff, and then, finally, we have the clerical personnel that must be particularly skilled in the handling of vital statistics, records, and so forth.

As to the functions of the unit, one of the primary functions is the control of communicable diseases. The health officers and nurses carry out the quarantine procedures in the control of cases of communicable diseases, to prevent the further spread of these diseases from cases that have occurred.

One of the most effective means that they employ in the control of communicable diseases consists in urging parents to have their children vaccinated against diphtheria, scarlet fever, typhoid fever, smallpox. Typhoid fever and diphtheria today are almost entirely preventable, and it is now regarded almost a disgrace for any community to have an outbreak of either of these diseases.

Just lately we have also discovered a means of immunizing children against scarlet fever. We have a new immunizing agent that can be used successfully for this purpose. It has been shown by officers of the Public Health Service to be almost as effective as the toxoid against diphtheria.

Mr. VINSON. Your statement, Doctor, is eminently true, but it is a statement in generalities. It does not paint the picture that I want to present to the committee. I wanted you to tell this committee and the House just how they operate in these county health units. I should like the committee to know how they get into their automobile and travel out into the school districts, and hold a clinic out there for these vaccinations and innoculations. They go through the districts and get samples of the water supply, and all that sort of thing. Those are the things that actually do the work.

Of course, what you said was true, as far as it went.

Mr. TREADWAY. Suppose we put the gentleman on the stand.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I am perfectly willing to testify, because I have had personal observation and knowledge of how those things work in my own country. It is the hardest-working crowd that I know about. They go out into these school districts and they vaccinate all the children that have not been vaccinated. Of course, that is a continuing proposition.

Then they go back and give them a second vaccination or a third vaccination, whatever the number of times is that they have to vaccinate these children. In other words, they carry this preventive medicine into the roots of our rural society and, to my mind, it is the most splendid work that the Federal Government participates in. In Kentucky it is done in cooperation with the medical profession, I am very happy to testify.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask Mr. VINSON, or let me ask the doctor, whether the testimony that our colleague has just given correctly represents the work of the public-health units in the 580 counties that cooperate with the Federal Government?

Dr. WALLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is a correct picture, is it not?

Dr. WALLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. TREADWAY. Therefore you are willing to corroborate the testimony given by our colleague, and you are willing to have it made a part of your own testimony as a description of the work of the Public Health Service?

Dr. WALLER. I think, so far as he has gone, he has told the story better than I could tell it.

Mr. TREADWAY. I thought perhaps you would say that.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Let us testify some more. Not only do they do these things, but they make examinations of children who otherwise would not be examined for physical defects, and call that condition to the attention of their parents. You have mentioned how they bring these matters to the attention of the parents. Not only is the child improved when the defect is corrected, but you have the happiness of parents, all growing out of that activity.

Dr. WALLER. Exactly.

The CHAIRMAN. In that connection, it is also part of their work frequently to look after the dental needs of the children, is it not?

Dr. WALLER. That is quite an important part of the work.

The CHAIRMAN. I know it is in the country where I live.

Dr. WALLER. That is an important part of the health program of these units in the schools.

Mr. TREADWAY. Doctor, I am glad to know that we have one expert on this committee in connection with a part of this bill at least. I wish we were sure we had experts on all of it.

THE WORK OF THE COMMITTEE

Mr. Chairman, I desire to express again my appreciation to the House for the privilege of serving on the Ways and Means Committee, particularly during the 3 months that have been so intensely devoted to a study of what history will probably consider the greatest piece of humane legislation that has been before any one of the 74 Congresses since the Constitution was adopted. During these 3 months I have had the pleasure of that close personal contact with our able and distinguished chairman and members of the committee that has enabled me to properly appreciate and evaluate their interest and their worth. As we approach the termination of general debate on this epochal measure, I wish to pay particular tribute to the great Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON]. Sprung from the soil of the rugged mountains of North Carolina, acquainted with the rugged simplicity of mountain life, and knowing the problems of the folks on the hillside and in the hollows along the creeks, he has approached the consideration of the several titles of this bill with a profound knowledge of the real folks who sent him to represent them in Congress. In my whole public experience I have never known more devoted service. Sincere, interested, impartial, unbiased, capable, he has proceeded in extracting his real views from every witness; and in trying to make this measure as broad and as useful to the folks back home as was intended when our great President wrote the message which provided the underlying philosophy for this legislation. The gentleman from North Carolina is a most distinguished statesman, coming from a State which has produced leaders since the days of the Revolution, and he has earned the confidence and gratitude not alone of the people of his own district and State, but of every district and State in this Union.

Being a mountaineer myself, I particularly enjoyed the fine, humane philosophy of two great mountaineers on this committee—the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS]. Mr. LEWIS was the chairman of the subcommittee in the last session which held extended hearings on the subject of unemployment compensation. I am sure that I represent the attitude of every member of the Ways and Means Committee when I testify to the tremendous value, not only of those hearings, but of the learning and interest displayed by these gentlemen in the perfection of the bill. You have heard their great addresses before this Committee of the Whole House and to what they have said on these subjects, but little can be added.

I desire also to pay a particular tribute to all the other members of the committee. They have been constant in their attendance at the meetings of the committee and took an active part in the formulation of the legislation and the reports bearing upon it.

In my sincere judgment no bill ever received more intensive study and effort by any committee in any Congress than has this measure.

I also desire to express the profound appreciation which the committee feels to its permanent staff and to the legislative counsel and the technical staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue and Taxation who, because of their expert knowledge, have been of invaluable assistance in the preparation of this bill. I would not overlook Tom Eliot, Assistant Secretary of Labor, who rendered most valuable service.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, for 3 months we have been laboring during most of the hours of the day and during many of the hours of the night in consideration of the tremendous accumulation of information, the study of which has been necessary to enable us to prepare and support this legislation. It is presented to you as the first great step toward economic security for the masses of America.

TRULY A SECURITY BILL

This measure, H. R. 7260, comes to the Congress with two messages from our President. On June 8, 1934, with a message that resounded throughout our land—the great security message—the President said " among our objectives, I place the security of the men, women, and children of the Nation first.

Security is the central theme of this program. Security is the name of each corner rock which upholds this structure. We see security for the aged in pensions and benefits, security for children in those sections dealing with dependent children, crippled children, and child welfare. Caring for each end of the life span, the youth and the aged, we next find in this measure, security in health in the maternal and child-health sections thereof, and also in the separate title that treats of the development of local health units together with the research activities that will mean added health security to the citizenship of our country. Then we find titles looking toward security in employment, which with the benefits provided for the aged, not only perform a humane obligation, but provides a stabilizer and gives added security to the economic future of our country.

Security is the thread that runs throughout this legislation. The philosophy that the strong will care for the weak, that the more fortunate will lend a helping hand to their less fortunate brothers and sisters.

For the first time in the history of our American Government there is presented for consideration a well rounded out social-security program. We recognize that the experience of the years will call for supplementary legislation, yet we urge its passage as the first substantial step toward a worthy goal.

We urge with all the seriousness at our command that our colleagues hesitate long before they strike at its just and carefully considered provisions. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an analysis of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include a statement concerning constitutionality as published in the Labor Committee hearings.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.,

TITLE I—GRANTS TO STATES FOR OLD-AGE-ASSISTANCE

APPROPRIATION

SECTION 1. For the purpose of enabling each State to furnish financial assistance assuring, as far as practicable under the conditions in such State, a reasonable subsistence compatible with decency and health to aged individuals without such subsistence, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $49,750,000, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year thereafter a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of this title. The sums made available under this section shall be used for making payments to States which have submitted, and had approved by the Social Security Board established by title VII (hereinafter referred to as the "Board"), State plans for old-age assistance.

STATE OLD-AGE-ASSISTANCE PLANS

SEC. 2. (a) A State plan for old-age assistance must (1) provide that it shall be in effect in all political subdivisions of the State, and, if administered by them, be mandatory upon them; (2) provide for financial participation by the State; (3) either provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to administer the plan, or provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to supervise the administration of the plan; (4) provide for granting to any individual, whose claim for old-age assistance is denied, an opportunity for a fair hearing before such State agency; (5) provide such methods of administration (other than those relating to selection, tenure of office, and compensation of personnel) as are found by the Board to be necessary for the efficient operation of the plan; (6) provide that the State agency will make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Board may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as the Board may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports; and (7) provide that, if the State or any of its political subdivisions collects from the estate of any recipient of old-age assistance any amount with respect to old-age assistance furnished him under the plan, one-half of the net amount so collected shall be promptly paid to the United States. Any payment so made shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the appropriation for the purposes of this title.

(b) The Board shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a), except that it shall not approve any plan which imposes, as a condition of eligibility for old-age assistance under the plan—

(1) An age requirement of more than 65 years, except that the plan may impose, effective until January 1, 1940, an age requirement of as much as 70 years; or

(2) Any residence requirement which excludes any resident of the State who has resided therein 5 years during the 9 years immediately preceding the application for old-age assistance and has resided therein continuously for 1 year immediately preceding the application; or

(3) Any citizenship requirement which excludes any citizen of the United States.

PAYMENT TO STATES

SEC. 3. (a) From the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has an approved plan for old-age assistance, for each quarter, beginning with the quarter commencing July 1, 1935, (1) an amount, which shall be used exclusively as old-age assistance, equal to one-half of the total of the sums expended during such quarter as old-age assistance under the State plan with respect to each individual who at the time of such expenditure is 65 years of age or older and is not an inmate of a public institution, not counting so much of such expenditure with respect to any individual for any month as exceeds $30, and (2) 5 percent of such amount, which shall be used for paying the costs of administering the State plan or for old-age assistance, or both, and for no other purpose.

(b) The method of computing and paying such amounts shall be as follows:

(1) The Board shall, prior to the beginning of each quarter, estimate the amount to be paid to the State for such quarter under the provisions of clause (1) of subsection (a), such estimate to be based on (A) a report filed by the State containing its estimate of the total sum to be expended in such quarter in accordance with the provisions of such clause, and stating the amount appropriated or made available by the State and its political subdivisions for such expenditures in such quarter, and if such amount is less than one-half of the total sum of such estimated expenditures, the source or sources from which the difference is expected to be derived, (B) records showing the number of aged individuals in the State, and (C) such other investigation as the Board may find necessary.

(2) The Board shall then certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount so estimated by the Board, reduced or increased, as the case may be, by any sum by which it finds that its estimate for any prior quarter was greater or less than the amount which should have been paid to the State under clause (1) of subsection (a) for such quarter, except to the extent that such sum has been applied to make the amount certified for any prior quarter greater or less than the amount estimated by the Board for such prior quarter.

(3) The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon, through the Division of Disbursement of the Treasury Department, and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, pay to the State, at the time or times fixed by the Board, the amount so certified, increased by 5 percent.

OPERATION OF STATE PLANS

SEC. 4. In the case of any State plan for old-age assistance which has been approved by the Board, if the Board, after notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of such plan, finds—

(1) that the plan has been so changed as to impose any age, residence, or citizenship requirement prohibited by section 2 (b), or that in the administration of the plan any such prohibited requirement is imposed, with the knowledge of such State agency, in a substantial number of cases; or

(2) that in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with any provision required by section 2 (a) to be included in the plan;

the Board shall notify such State agency that further payments will not be made to the State until the Board is satisfied that such prohibited requirement is no longer so imposed, and that there is no longer any such failure to comply. Until it is so satisfied it shall make no further certification to the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to such State.

ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 5. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $250,000, for all necessary expenses of the Board in administering the provisions of this title.

DEFINITION

SEC. 6. When used in this title the term "old-age assistance" means money payments to aged individuals.

Mr. SNELL (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand it, the Clerk is reading title I, and when he completes the reading of title I the Committee will rise?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Chairman, that will not preclude anyone from offering amendments tomorrow?

The CHAIRMAN. It will not.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CONNERY. When the Committee rises that will not preclude the offering of an amendment, which will be offered in the form of a new title before title I?

The CHAIRMAN. It will not.

The Clerk concluded the reading of title I.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCREYNOLDS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 7260, the social-security bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I shall have to object.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including in the speech that I made today a statement of the cost of the Lundeen plan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

SOCIAL-SECURITY BILL

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks upon the social-security bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I do not feel the need of making a speech for "home consumption" on this present bill for social security. The people of the First Congressional District of the State of Washington, whom I have the privilege of representing, know how I feel about such legislation. I have before me my campaign pamphlet from the 1932 campaign, wherein I promised to fight for social insurance covering accidents, sickness, old-age, and unemployment. In 1934 the keynote of my campaign was that economic planning of consumption rather than production was the paramount issue of this day; that we must see that every person who is willing to work must be guaranteed a security of income and the purchasing power of the people must be increased to insure permanent prosperity; that social insurance covering accidents, sickness, old-age, and unemployment must be regarded as a matter of right rather than a matter of favor—because there is plenty for all if we only work out a sane and sensible scheme of distribution.

But at the same time I promised to fight for increased gift, income, and inheritance taxes in the higher brackets to break up huge incomes and thus equalize the distribution of wealth. I also promised to fight against sales taxes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I feel that I am compelled to vote for the final enactment of this bill because of the broad recognition of at least partial responsibility for taking care of the aged, unemployed, dependent children, maternal and child welfare, crippled children, vocational rehabilitation, and public health. Such a recognition is a great step in itself, but my vote for this present bill does not mean that I approve of many of its provisions. The fact of the matter is that I do not approve of this bill in many respects, and feel it to be my duty in my representative capacity to point out what, in my opinion, are its defects, and at the proper time to try to help improve it by way of amendments.

My chief criticism of this so-called "social-security bill" is that it does not place the burden where it properly belongs; that is, on the higher income group of our Nation and on those receiving large gifts and inheritances. The fact of the matter is that the burden is placed on the lowest income groups in this bill. The ultimate 6-percent tax on pay rolls will be passed on to the consumer, of which the working classes compose approximately 80 percent. This type of taxation in effect amounts to a sales tax, just the same as the processing tax has resulted in increased prices, and, despite its name, it has proven itself to be a sales tax nevertheless. The additional 3-percent tax on the employee, which is deducted from his wages and paid over by the employer to the Government, decreases the employee's buying power in just that amount. Such taxes are wrong in principle and can only aggravate our distressing economic mess. It seems that every measure that is coming before Congress today is still based upon the economy of scarcity rather than the economy of abundance.

I feel that the old-age pensions that are not to exceed over $30 a month are miserly and inadequate. Just what can an aged person do with merely $30 if he has no other source of income or relatives to support him? It would require at least $15 a month for rent alone, and that would leave but $15 a month for food and clothing. Think of it—50 cents a day. To me this sounds like anything but social security. The $30-a-month pension is particularly inadequate from a Federal standpoint, when the Federal Government is to match State funds on a 50-50 basis, the Federal responsibility at no time amounting to more than $15 a month. In my opinion, the Federal Government should provide the entire amount of an adequate pension necessary to give the aged the necessaries and comforts of life as a matter of right, looking upon these pensions as merely deferred payments to the aged, for everyone knows that those people produced a great deal more in their productive years than they ever received for their work in wages.

The provision in this bill that a person must be 65 years of age or over is entirely too high, and I for one am going to do what I can to reduce it to 60 or even 55 years. It is virtually impossible for a man of 50 years to obtain gainful employment under our present industrial system, and would it not be better to provide adequate pensions for all those of 55 and over, and remove them from the labor market, and thus make room for the young people who today find themselves unemployed?

The provisions in this act for unemployment insurance are totally inadequate and in no way provide for insurance or relief for the present unemployed. According to experts, technological unemployment under our present profit system will be a constant and ever-increasing problem. Labor saving devices and machinery today are displacing workers by the thousands, and, according to those who have studied this problem, if we were to increase our production to that of 1929 we would still have from six to eight million unemployed.

The remedy for this depression is not unemployment insurance. Employment is the only solution, and if those who own and control the means of production have not the sense and social vision to adjust their profits, interest, and dividends, and get a more reasonable balance between consumption and production, then it is high time for the Government to step in and do it for them. In the interest of maintaining order, as well as providing a good life for all the people, our minimum program must be that every man and woman who is able and willing to work must be given employment at a wage that will get for him and for her the necessities, comforts, and some of the luxuries of life, for there is plenty for all if we but work out a sane and sensible scheme of distribution. In my humble opinion, any government that does not do just that does not justify its existence.

THE SOCIAL-SECURITY BILL

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Speaker, it is not difficult for critics to pick flaws in proposed legislation, especially when it traverses new fields and deals with such enormous problems as those in this bill. I compliment the committee upon this example of sincere study and high intelligence. The comments I make are in no sense critical of the committee but are mere "obiter dicta", and because of the character of the men and their intense application to this subject, it is my inclination to support their recommendations. But I feel impelled to make some random comments, for I cannot help but feel that the best unemployment insurance is to aid business, the employer, and I am concerned about the recurring effort to have our Government attempt to cure all national ills. It is well to reflect upon the demands of all groups and classes upon our Federal Government and to consider not only the worthiness of the cause but the ability of our Government and its citizens to carry the load and the far-reaching effect upon the character of our people.

We are prescribing remedies for all of our country's maladies, and the medicines, no doubt, are efficacious as far as the disease is concerned, but the doses are so numerous and heroic that I fear for the patient, our country.

One thing is encouraging to observe in the treatment of social security, and that is the unanimous sentiment of sympathy for the aged, the unemployed, the afflicted mothers and children, and the other unfortunates to whom life has willed misery and misfortune. Every man in this Congress is interested in aiding the casualties of the strife of life, and to that extent all is well. Even this much idealism is a basis of hope for our country, but beyond the generous spirit of sympathy for the unfortunates, certain characteristics arise in our midst which are less idealistic and quite contrary to the Golden Rule so well exemplified in our sympathies.

Through failure to analyze ourselves, through mistaken loyalties to groups to which we belong, to intense State and partisan devotions, we sometimes forget American traditions and lose our fundamental ideas of American justice and liberty. The greatness of our country and the inheritance of the rare gift of American citizenship have been due to the wisdom and conscience of the founders of our country and their successors. They kept uppermost in their minds the freedom of its citizens and that no citizen might be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law and without just compensation. Imposition of an unequal or too heavy tax is closely akin to attainder and confiscation.

Our forbears enjoyed the greatest liberty ever granted to mankind because the conscience of America and its leadership kept ever in mind the sacred rights of the individual to work, to improve his condition, to be provident and to retain that which he won by effort, character, and self-denial. When work and ambition in America, as we knew it, drove men on to greater achievement, there seemed to be less class and group selfishness, and men scorned to seek or accept that which belonged to another. There was pride in every American that he could carry his part of the burden and he asked favors of no man, and did not seek to place his obligations upon another. In my opinion, that spirit of independence made America great, and the loss of it will mean that our country, as we knew it, will be no more. So it is of the greatest importance in passing legislation that we think not only of the condition to be corrected, but also of the far-reaching alterations of citizen character and individual morale. The greatness of America was built upon stern reality, courage, and conscientious work. Today there seems to be a class philosophy of jealousy of those who have succeeded, a weakening of moral fiber, an ambition to avoid work, and a group selfishness which breeds disunion and the death of American ideals.

It appears to me that we, in Congress, should strive to foster the true American spirit of personal pride and independence, and be careful that we do not develop a national weakness of character. It should be brought home to the people that our Government will be fair to every group of its citizens; that special privilege shall not be granted to individuals or to groups; that the malingerer cannot live at Government expense; and that the care of our unfortunates is the obligation of every citizen in the United States.

We hear much these days of the socialization of America. In my opinion, when you arbitrarily place a tax on business or the individual without considering their ability to pay nor the justice of making them carry the common load, you are breaking with American experience and American tradition. Our country's trials are grievous at this time, and they challenge America for a solution. But we cannot solve the problem by arbitrary seizures against business or other singled-out groups of our citizens. In order to preserve America we must attack our problem "with malice toward none" and charity, or, at least, justice, to all.

There was a time when one's country was aroused at the favors granted to special interests through special privileges. America awakened and has remained awake to the menace of great corporations and great wealth which took advantage of the people. In a different way our citizens have now divided, and many groups are seeking special privileges from our country, which is not true to the American tradition of equality before the law. This problem will never be solved by hating, and much of our proposed legislation is born of temper and nourished by fancied wrongs. The attack too often is punitive and not guided by equitable principles. When America disunites to give special advantages to one or to place common burdens on the back of another, it is un-American and confusion or worse will result. Let groups in America seek to do equity and each assume its just burden. When that is again the rule, our country will have regained its birthright.

I do not believe that we have given sufficient consideration to, nor correctly analyzed, the place of business in American life. It is the keystone of America as we know it. We who believe in the profit motive as a fundamental of human character and happiness believe that there would be no profit motive without business. Therefore, it should be encouraged, and interfered with as little as possible. The products of the farmer, the labor of the worker, the existence of the professions are indissolubly linked with business. Our country would not be what we have cherished should it become the employer. Our socialistic theorists would find the result to be a national flabbiness, deteriorating into moral paralysis. The only cure for unemployment is employment, and business is the employer, and honest work is the salvation of every man. In our legislation we should recognize that business must be treated justly and freed from oppression, or even fears of oppression, if all of the rest of America is to labor and prosper.

We draw our laws with little thought as to the psychology of our people, whereas we should consider their effect upon our national character. Yesterday the average American was as a group frugal, thrifty, proud, and conservative. Today, because of our laws drawn without considering their effect upon character, we find our citizens wasteful and extravagant in their demands upon our Government. The Federal Government apparently is a boundless reservoir of money, upon which they can draw without limit for every need or even whim. It is time in drafting our laws that we emphasize fair play to all, and the fact that every Government expenditure eventually means an expense to each individual citizen, and that each national extravagance culminates in an individual charge. When our people realize the true situation America will return to the faith of its fathers.

In conclusion I wish to compliment the committee for the intelligent and conscientious effort that has been put forth. My remarks are in no sense critical. But I wish the start could be made here and now to appeal to the abiding American spirit in the hearts of most of our citizens. Just as in a war of defense, everyone is called to arms, so in the case of human misery in America let us tell our people that it is a burden upon every one of us. Let us not attempt to aid the worthy causes in this bill by charging its costs alone to business or to any other group of citizens.

Let us assemble the cost of alleviating the suffering of America as described in this bill, and tell our country that these burdens must be borne by all Americans, and that it will cost each year a certain definite amount. Let us say to them that their burden cannot be shifted to the backs of the successful only, or upon business or any other class, and if it could be, it would not be right to do so. A load of this kind is an obligation of every man who is earning any money and the latent character of our country would revive and courageously meet the challenge. It has been found in our churches that the widow's mite was gladly given and the spirit of it made many of our American institutions great as they have been through the generations. If we could carry the need of the unfortunates back to every earner in America, I am idealist enough to believe that America would respond with approval, enthusiasm, and a renewed faith in our country. Every citizen in America should be required to pay a part of his earnings for the care of the unfortunates of America.

I concur heartily in the worthy intentions of this bill, but I regret that an effort is not made to test the spirit of our people by offering to them all the right and the privilege of assuming, according to their individual ability, the care and protection of their less fortunate fellow countrymen. If such were the case, I would dare to hope that the pride, independence and the cherished freedom of America might return.

In the Senate of the United States of America

PETITION OF HENRY D. HATFIELD, OF HUNTINGTON, W. VA.

To the Honorable the Senate of the United States of America:

Your petitioner, Henry D. Hatfield, of Huntington, West Virginia, humbly complaining, respectfully represents unto your honorable body:

That on the 7th day of August 1934, in a primary election held in the State of West Virginia, he was selected by the Republican Party to be its candidate for the office of United States Senator, having received a plurality of the votes cast therein;

That at the same time Rush D. Holt, of Weston, Lewis County, West Virginia, received a plurality of the Democratic votes cast for the same office and became the candidate of the Democratic Party;

That, as provided by section 69 of the Official Code of West Virginia, then in effect,

"Any person who is eligible to hold an office * * * may file with the Secretary of State, * * * a certificate declaring himself a candidate for the nomination for such office; which certificate shall be in form or effect as follows:

"I, ———, hereby certify that I am a candidate for the nomination for the office of ——— to represent the ——— party, and desire my name printed on the official ballot of said party to be voted at the primary election to be held on the —— day of ———, 19——; that I am a legally qualified voter of the county of ———, State of West Virginia; that my residence is number —— of ———, in —— county in said State; that I am eligible to hold the said office; that I am a member of and affiliated with said political party; that I am a candidate for said office in good faith.

_____,

"Candidate.

"Signed and acknowledged before me this —— day of ———, 19——.

_____,

"Signature and official title of person before whom signed.

"Such announcement shall be signed and acknowledged by the candidate before some officer qualified to administer oaths, who shall certify the same: Provided, That no person may be a candidate for nomination for office in any political party, unless it be openly known that such person is a bona fide member of such party.

"Such certificate shall be filed at least 30 days before the primary election day."

That under the various decisions of the Supreme Court of the State of West Virginia it is mandatory that this certificate be filed; and cannot be filed by one who is not eligible to hold the office for which it is filed; and that certificates as provided above were accordingly filed by your petitioner and the said Rush D. Holt;

That in the general election held on the 6th day of November, 1934, your petitioner, according to the official returns filed in the office of the Secretary of State of the State of West Virginia, received 281,756 votes, the said Rush D. Holt 349,882 votes, and John Wesley McDonald, the Prohibition, and only other candidate, received 2,931 votes. Following the said election his Excellency, the Governor of the State of West Virginia, issued a certificate showing the vote cast at said election as aforesaid; that thereupon the said Rush D. Holt claimed that he had been duly elected to the office of United States Senator to represent the State of West Virginia in the Senate of the United States and still claims to be entitled to that office, although he does not now even assume to discharge the duties thereof and is not acting as such.

That on the said 6th day of November 1934 your petitioner was, and had been, a citizen of the State of West Virginia for more than 1 year, and of the United States of America for more than 9 years, and was at the time more than 30 years old.

That at the time of the said general election, i. e., the 6th day of November 1934, the said Rush D. Holt was not 30 years old, and will not reach that age until the 19th day of June 1935, which date your petitioner alleges is 7 months and 13 days after the said election and 5 months and 16 days after the opening of the 74th Congress, which was the beginning of the term of office for which the said election was held.

Your petitioner would show that, whereas section 3, article 1, of the Constitution of the United States of America provides:

"The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State.

"No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the age of 30 years, and been 9 years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of the State for which he shall be chosen."

And that the courts of last resort of the various States of the United States have been quite consistent in interpreting statutes relating to eligibility, about half holding the disqualification applies to the date of election, and the others that if the disqualification can be removed, it refers to the beginning of the term of office; but none holding it applies to a date long after the beginning of the term for which the candidate was elected. That this honorable body has never in the history of the Constitution passed upon this particular question, but has, upon several occasions, determined and declared void the election of men to the Senate of the United States who had not been at the time of election citizens of the United States for 9 years prior thereto, which decisions, your petitioner respectfully submits, are peculiarly applicable, in that they concern a qualification tantamount to the one in issue, and, like it, is an indispensable part of this constitutional ternary qualification.

Your petitioner would further show unto this honorable body that the said Rush D. Holt throughout his campaign in 1934 for the said office of United States Senator, upon numerous occasions, proclaimed to the voters of the State of West Virginia he was eligible for the said office because of the fact that Henry Clay, of Kentucky, was permitted to take his seat in the Senate of the United States before he was 30 years old, which, your petitioner charges, misled innumerable people to cast their ballot for him, believing they were voting for an eligible candidate and one who could represent them for the full term of the office for which they voted.

Your petitioner is informed, and being so informed, would further show, the said Rush D. Holt is now living in the city of Washington, D. C., has since the opening of the 74th Congress been assigned an office in the Senate Office Building, is drawing the salary of, and enjoying all the privileges of, a United States Senator, with the exception of the right to vote; but that, due to his ineligibility, has not presented himself before the body of the Senate of the United States to become a Member thereof, and, because of which, the sovereign State of West Virginia is, and has been, without that representation which is guaranteed it by the Constitution of the United States of America.

That the said Constitution guarantees each State shall have two Senators during the full deliberations of Congress; that, in the peculiar scheme of our republican form of government, it is fundamental that the sovereignty of each State be represented equally at all times in the Senate of the United States; and that sec. 4, art. 4 of the Constitution provides:

"The United States shall guarantee to every State in this union a republican form of government * * *."

And whereas sec. 5, art. 1, of the Constitution provides:

"Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members * * *."

Your petitioner would, therefore, submit that your honorable body alone can determine this question, and it, therefore, becomes its duty to speedily hear his petition and dispose of the questions therein presented.

Your petitioner respectfully insists that the said Rush D. Holt was not a legal or qualified candidate for the office of United States Senator and the vote cast for him on the 6th day of November 1934 for the said office was of no effect, and due to this he cannot now, nor, until properly elected, at any time in the future legally become a Member of the said Senate; and your petitioner, as heretofore shown, having been a legal and qualified candidate for said office and having received the next highest number of votes cast in the said election, under the law is entitled to have and hold the said office and to represent the said State of West Virginia in your honorable body.

Your petitioner would further show unto your honorable body that the above allegations are made in good faith and that he is ready to verify the same.

Your petitioner, being without remedy elsewhere, therefore prays:

That this, his petition, be received by your honorable body, read, and given the consideration which the gravity of the case justifies;

That a hearing be had upon the issues therein as soon as the exigency of the business of the Senate will permit; and that he be permitted to be present in person and by counsel to submit his proof and argument therein;

That the vote cast for the said Rush D. Holt to represent the State of West Virginia in the United States Senate on the 6th day of November 1934 be declared void; and

That your petitioner having received the next highest vote in the said election, and being eligible therefor, be declared the legally elected candidate to the Senate of the United States of America and be permitted to take the oath of office therefor;

And grant unto your petitioner such further relief as to your honorable body may seem meet, and the law in such cases requires; and as in duty bound he will ever pray, etc.

HENRY D. HATFIELD,
Petitioner.

GRANT P. HALL,
Charleston, W. Va., Counsel for Petitioner.

Henry D. Hatfield, the petitioner named in the foregoing petition, being duly sworn, says that the facts and allegations therein contained are true, except so far as they are therein stated to be on information; and that so far as they are therein stated to be upon information, he believes them to be true.

Petitioner.

Whereas the State planning board, in its preliminary survey of New York State, has recommended the acquisition by the State of areas bearing partly grown forests for the purpose of producing a sustained and regular yield of timber products for the maintenance of wood-using industries, and to stimulate forest management on privately owned forest lands: Now, therefore, be it

By order of the assembly.

HOMER W. STOREY, Clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing Congress to provide for repayment of Federal relief loans made to farmers in drought-stricken areas by working on highways and other public projects, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

(See joint resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. LA FOLLETTE, p. 5918.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate petitions of sundry citizens of the United States, praying for an investigation of charges filed by the Women's Committee of Louisiana relative to the qualifications of the Senators from Louisiana [Mr. LONG and Mr. OVERTON], which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. CAPPER presented letters in the nature of petitions from Local Union No. 165, United Association of Journeymen Plumbers and Steam Fitters, of Topeka, and John Brown Lodge No. 523, Brotherhood Railway Carmen of America, of Osawatomie, both in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of the so-called "Wagner labor-disputes bill" and the "Black 30-hour work week bill", which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution adopted by the executive committee of the Onondaga Farm Bureau, Syracuse, N. Y., favoring the appropriation of additional funds for agricultural research and extension work, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Harmony Council No. 21, Sons and Daughters of Liberty, Syracuse, N. Y., favoring the enactment of legislation to strengthen the existing law pertaining to the deportation of aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the North Shore of Long Island Chapter, Reserve Officers Association of the United States, Manhasset, Long Island, N. Y., protesting against discriminations in benefits accruing to members of the Officers' Reserve Corps suffering death, illness, or injury while on active duty and not as a result of their own misconduct as compared with benefits accruing to officers of the Regular Army, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Western Union Stamp Club, of New York City, N. Y., favoring the passage of the bill (H. R. 1411) to foster American industry, promote education, and facilitate pursuit of the avocation of philately, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Presbytery of Utica, N. Y., favoring such revision of the statutes controlling the protection of neutral trade in time of war as will absolutely remove the protection of the American flag from citizens seeking to profit from war carried on in other countries, and also the enactment of legislation to take the profit out of war as respects American citizens, which was referred to the Special Committee on Investigation of Munitions Industry.

He also presented a letter from the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, New York City, N. Y., denying authorship or sanction of a leaflet sent out upon stationery bearing the inscription "New York Chamber of Commerce, 65 Liberty Street, New York, N. Y." under date of March 30, 1935, beginning with a quotation from an address in 1839 by Lincoln, and closing with a paragraph to the effect that "the framers of the Constitution planned to have the Members of Congress, rather than the executive heads of the Government decide how the taxpayers' money was to be spent", which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TRAMMELL presented the following memorial of the Legislature of the State of Florida, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A memorial to the Congress of the United States of America now convened in session as the Seventy-fourth Congress of the United States of America

Whereas the navigable waterway by name and known as the Steinhatchee River, traversing the counties of Taylor, Lafayette, and Dixie, with its outlet in the Gulf of Mexico, possesses and has within its channel sand bars and obstructions preventing travel of river boats and boats of similar character; and

Whereas the said citizens of the State of Florida are using their best efforts in the expenditure of moneys, labor, and materials to their best ability in the opening up, removing sand bars and other obstructions from the channel of the said Steinhatchee River; and

Whereas the said Steinhatchee River would prove and be of great importance to the United States of America and to the State of Florida in the protection of life and property in time of war, and would provide a safe harbor for ships in time of storms, and add to the commerce and shipping within this particular part of the State; and

Whereas it is the desire of the citizens of Florida that the said work of removing such sand bars and obstruction from the channel of the said Steinhatchee River, and desiring to secure the assistance of the United States Government to carry on and complete the work now in progress; and

Whereas expenditure of moneys by the United States Government, in conjunction with moneys now being expended by the counties and citizens, would provide employment for labor and for usage of materials and supplies in the removing of said sand bars and other obstructions from the channel of the said Steinhatchee River: Be it therefore

Resolved by the Florida Legislature, That the Senators and Representatives of the United States Congress of America now convened in this the Seventy-fourth Congress be, and they are herewith and hereby, respectfully requested and urged to make every effort and to appropriate such sums of moneys by their acts, for the purpose and usage to be spent and used in the removing of all sand bars and other obstructions from the channels of the Steinhatchee River, traversing the counties of Taylor, Lafayette, and Dixie, with its outlet in and to the Gulf of Mexico; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives of Congress, now convened in this the Seventy-fourth Congress of the United States, be, and they are hereby, respectfully requested and urged to appropriate sufficient sums of money, in addition to the removing of sand bars and other obstructions from the channel of the Steinhatchee River, to maintain a channel in the said river clear of all obstructions and sand bars; and be it further

Resolved by the membership of the Florida Legislature now convened in regular session, That a copy of this memorial be immediately forwarded under the great seal of the State of Florida, by the secretary of state of Florida to the President of the United States of America, a copy to the Vice President of the United States of America, a copy to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of Congress, and a copy to each of the United States Senators from the State of Florida, and a copy to each Member of the House of Representatives from Florida now serving in the Congress of the United States, and a copy to be furnished to the press for publication.

Approved by the Governor April 12, 1935.

Mr. TRAMMELL also presented the following memorial of the Legislature of the State of Florida, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

A memorial to the Congress of the United States requesting the immediate passage of appropriate legislation for the payment and cancelation of interest charges upon United States veterans' service-adjusted certificates

Whereas it appears that the Government has proposed plans and programs of spending moneys, and desires circulation, and whereas it appears that this would be a proper method of getting money into circulation and retiring a just obligation by the payment of what is known as "soldiers' bonus", and whereas we deem it a just debt and liability of the United States of America to those who served their country in time of war: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Congress of the United States of America is hereby requested and petitioned for the immediate passage of appropriate legislation for the payment of what is known as the "bonus" or United States veterans' adjusted-compensation certificates, now held by ex-service men of the World War; be it further

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States, in its wisdom, for the immediate passage of appropriate legislation for the payment of what is known as the "bonus", or adjusted certificates, that they do include therein such legislation provisions for the cancelation of interest charged and assessed against such adjusted-certificate loans outstanding; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial, under the great seal of the State of Florida, be immediately forwarded by the secretary of state to the President of the United States of America, to the President of the United States Senate, Hon. JOHN N. GARNER; a copy to Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS, Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress; and copies to be forwarded to the delegation representing the State of Florida in both the House and Senate of the United States Congress; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be spread upon the journal in both the house of representatives and State senate; be it further

Resolved, That sufficient copies of this resolution be furnished to the press.

Approved by the Governor on April 11, 1935.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution memorializing Congress to provide for repayment of Federal relief loans made to farmers in drought-stricken areas by working on highways and other public projects

Whereas the Congress of the United States, by the provisions of Public Law No. 11, has provided for relief loans to farmers to meet the conditions created by the 1934 drought; and

Whereas the Governor of the Federal Farm Credit Administration has made loans to needy farmers in drought- and storm-stricken areas for feed for livestock and other purposes; and

Whereas the terms of such loans call for repayment in money; and

Whereas farmers need their money to replace and increase their livestock which was reduced by reason of the drought to a point where it would not support an average farm; and

Whereas repayment of such loans in cash will work a severe hardship on such farmers, hindering such restocking and delaying a return to normal production; and

Whereas, if enabled, many of such borrowers could repay such loans by work performed on highways and other public-works projects without hindrance to recovery on the farm: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That this legislature respectfully memorialize the Congress of the United States to enact legislation permitting farmers receiving drought-relief loans to repay the same by working on roads and other public-works projects; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be transmitted to both Houses of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

THOMAS J. O'MALLEY,
President of the Senate.
LAWRENCE R. LARSEN,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
J. W. CAROW,
Speaker of the Assembly.
LESTER R. JOHNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Mr. DUFFY presented a joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing Congress to provide for repayment of Federal relief loans made to farmers in drought-stricken areas by working on highways and other public-works projects, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

(See joint resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. LA FOLLETTE, p. 5918.)

Mr. FLETCHER presented a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Florida, favoring the making of appropriations to be expended in the removing of all sand bars and other obstructions from the channels of the Steinhatchee River traversing the counties of Taylor, Lafayette, and Dixie, and also in addition thereto to maintain the channel in that river, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

(See memorial printed in full when presented today by Mr. TRAMMELL, p. 5917.)

Mr. FLETCHER also presented a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Florida, favoring the prompt enactment of legislation providing for the payment and cancelation of interest charges upon veterans' adjusted-service certificates (bonus), which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

THE COTTON CLOTH TEXTILE INDUSTRY

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, George A. Sloan, chairman of the Cotton Textile Code Authority, chairman of the Consumers Goods Industries Committee, and recent head of the Cotton Textile Institute, recently appeared before the Finance Committee of the Senate in favor of the continuance of the National Recovery Administration Act.

At my request, he recently wrote me a letter supplying detailed information in reference to the recent condition of the cotton-textile industry, in which is set forth "the number of factors which have undoubtedly been operating to produce" the decline in this industry. In view of the authentic source from which this information comes and the different views that have been expressed, I consider Mr. Sloan's letter to be of special importance. It is to be noted "that approximately $185,000,000, or about 40 percent of the amount paid in wages to its employees", have been paid to the Government as a result of the processing tax.

I also present a letter from Bertram H. Borden, president of the American Printing Co., of Fall River, Mass. Mr. Borden has mills at Fall River, Mass., and at Kingsport, Tenn. He states in his letter that he was forced to liquidate his Fall River mill last fall, and in consequence has dropped from his pay roll approximately 5,000 employees. He also states that if present conditions shall continue he will be forced to close his plant in Tennessee.

I request that these letters be treated as in the nature of petitions and that they be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, which Committee has jurisdiction of legislation dealing with the processing tax.

There being no objection, the letters were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

APRIL 12, 1935.

GEORGE A. SLOAN,
Chairman Textile Code Authority,
320 Broadway, New York City.

MY DEAR MR. SLOAN: In your testimony before the Finance Committee in favor of the continuance of the National Recovery Administration Act, I note that you emphasized the benefits that this law has been extended to the cotton textile employees, and I inferred that the operations of this law had been beneficial to the industry as a whole.

It seems to me that you failed to show, unintentionally, of course, the change that has been taking place in the industry since the summer of 1934. The information that has come to me from various sources is to the effect that there has been a constant decline in the activity of this industry and that the industry is in a very serious and precarious condition at the present time.

Will you kindly let me know to just what extent the industry has declined in recent months and what, in your opinion, are the causes for this condition. In other words, I would like to be informed if the demand for cotton textiles has fallen off materially and to what you ascribe this.

Sincerely yours,

DAVID I. WALSH.

THE COTTON TEXTILE CODE AUTHORITY,
New York, April 17, 1935.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: Complying with your request of April 12 for some further statement as to recent conditions in the cotton-textile industry, the facts confirm your impression that recent months have shown a decline in demand for the products of the industry. For the first quarter of 1934 the sales amounted to 1,854,098,000 yards. For the first quarter of this year they amounted to 1,440,375,000 yards, or a decrease of 22 percent. There are a number of factors which have undoubtedly been operating to produce this result. There has been the effect of demoralization of the market occasioned by overhanging overcapacity, and some accumulation of stocks, uncertainty as to the future price of raw material, the effect of actual and threatened increase in low-cost Japanese imports, the throwing of cotton prices out of previous relationships by increased costs of raw material, labor, and the processing tax, diminishing exports, due to low-cost competition in markets in which we have heretofore participated. I will go into some further details as to these matters, but first let me point out the difficult situation into which these and other factors have brought the industry.

In 1930, 1931, and 1932 the deficits for the industry indicated by income-tax returns amounted to $91,506,000, $63,569,000, and $53,662,000, respectively, or aggregating $208,737,000. After a brief period of moderate return on investment in 1933 and the early part of 1934, due in large part to enhancement of inventory, the industry is showng a tendency toward resuming the discouraging losses of the previous years. The Federal Trade Commission survey shows that in July and August 1934 losses for 43.8 percent of the industry amounted to $3,388,000. The adverse conditions of inadequate demand that produced these losses during July and August 1934 persisted throughout the remainder of 1934 and have become even more acute during the first quarter of 1935. The Cotton Textile Institute has compiled income data for the last 6 months of 1934 from 37 percent of the industry, which show an aggregate loss of $7,650,000. If this rate of loss is fairly representative of the entire industry, the deficit during the last 6 months of 1934 must have amounted to $20,600,000, or at the rate of an annual loss of $41,200,000.

Persistence of these losses during the current year are indicated by the increasing number of mills that are closing and by the diminishing employment. Some of the large mills in the industry that have recently closed entirely or are in process of running out their stock preparatory to closing are the B. B. & R. Knight Co., Providence, R. I.; nearly half of the Berkshire Fine Spinning Associates, operating mills in various centers in New England (this is the largest cotton-mill organization in the United States); the American Printing Co.; two units of the Hoosac Mills Corporation, the Butler Mill, of New Bedford, and the Nemasket Mills, of Taunton, Mass.; the Aldrich Bros. Co., of Moosup, Conn.; the Tucapau Mills, Tucapau, S. C.; and two units of the Chadwick-Hoskins group in North Carolina and Virginia. In the aggregate, since August of 1934, 71 mills, employing 20,825 persons, have closed their doors and have not since reopened. There were 33,000 fewer employees in cotton mills in March 1935 compared with March 1934.

While there are no data showing the actual loss during the first quarter of 1935, the unfavorable relationship between the price of raw cotton and the selling price of cotton goods points conclusively to heavier losses than in the last 6 months of 1934. The margin of difference for staple cotton products during the first quarter of 1935 averages 5 percent below the margin prevailing during the last 6 months of 1934. This margin represents the source from which cotton mills must meet the greatly increased labor cost under the Cotton Textile Code, as well as other expenses in manufacture and selling, over and above the cost of raw material, including the processing tax. The current 14 cents per pound margin for print cloths, combined with a 40-hour week for labor at the same wage as for the longer week prevailing before the code, should be compared with the margins prevailing in earlier years, when longer weekly schedules were in effect. During 1926 to 1929, inclusive, when the average workweek for the industry was 54 hours, the margins averaged as follows:

	Cents
1926	18
1927	18.1

This relationship for print cloths is practically identical to other groups of staple cotton goods. The Secretary of Agriculture recently in defending the processing tax stated that the current margins were about in line with those prevailing in 1930 and 1931. This is true enough, but he did not refer to the fact that in those years the working schedule per week was 35 percent greater than now prevails and that the industry in those 2 years, as above mentioned, had a deficit of $155,000,000.

During the 20 months in which the processing tax has been in effect the amount due the Government at the rate of 4.2 cents per pound on all cotton put into process has aggregated approximately $185,000,000, or about 40 percent of the amount paid in wages to its employees. Although the mills have not been able to add to the selling price of the goods the entire amount of the tax (witness the losses that have been incurred in recent months), the tax, combined with the higher costs of manufacture necessitated by the Cotton Textile Code and increased cost of raw material, have raised the price of cotton goods to a level out of line with their customary relationship to general commodity prices. During the period 1926–29, inclusive, the index of general commodities at wholesale was 96.9, while the index of cotton goods at wholesale was 99.1. During the last 6 months of 1934 the general commodity index has averaged 76.5 and the cotton-goods index 85.8, which indicates a distinct change in the normal relationship and tends toward a diminished demand for cotton goods as compared with the demand during 1926–29. In the current crop year, i. e., August 1934 to March 1935, inclusive, 3,634,000 bales of cotton have been processed compared with an average of 4,640,000 bales during 1926–29, inclusive, or a decrease of 22 percent. At this the effective demand was unable to absorb the resulting production.

There has been a steady reduction in the volume of exports of cotton cloth, which in recent years has been as follows:

	Square yards
1929	564,460,000
1930	416,290,000
1931	367,951,000
1932	375,341,000
1933	301,950,000

The above figures indicate that the exports in 1934 have decreased 60 percent from 1929 and 46 percent from 1930. The most important outlet for American cotton goods, namely, the Philippine Islands, has been almost entirely lost, notwithstanding its special governmental relationships.

Many cotton mills are also discouraged over the heavy imports of cotton cloth from Japan. The bulk of these Japanese goods are bleached fabrics falling in the class of print cloths and on the basis of imports in January and February of this year, comprise more than 25 percent of the goods of that type produced in this country. The extremely low price at which these Japanese goods are offered, combined with the threat of a mounting volume of such imports because of these low prices, have demoralized the competing branch of the domestic industry.

The sudden increase in imports of bleached goods from Japan can be noted from the following tabulation:

Year:	Square yards
1929	176,308
1930	47,624
1931	100,266
1932	51,397
1933	256,624
1934	6,043,345
January 1935	2,633,295
February 1935	4,917,404

It is not merely a loss of volume that is important in this import competition. Goods produced at a wage rate, indicated by the Department of Commerce reports to approximate 23½ cents a day, lead to sales below the domestic cost of production and not only inflict the injury of loss in volume but by the resulting price demoralization cause loss on the American product which is still sold. The matter of volume is serious enough but the situation is rendered far more serious by the disparity between the price at which it is offered and the domestic price. A very small actual import offered at such a disparity in price, and with a large potential supply in back of it, can break and hold down the market, and occasion a loss that bears no relation to its volume.

The industry recognizes that there is no one short and easy road to relief from this situation. Costs should not be reduced by the lowering of wages but they can be reduced by collecting payments for farm benefits by general taxation instead of by the special tax on a necessity of life involved in the collection of processing taxes on the manufacture of cotton. Under the National Industrial Recovery Act it should be possible to check the low-wage competition which is invading and demoralizing the domestic market by holding imports to something like their normal proportions through the use of quotas.

Further, it should be possible to regain some of our lost export business through special trade arrangements with such areas as the Philippines. It is not unreasonable to ask where we are large customers or have some special governmental relationship that our trade agreements be such as to preserve a long-established reciprocal export business.

What the industry needs most is a revival of demand to come from the general improvement of the economic condition of the country. Until there is such a revival of demand, it needs to be protected from a further increase in destructive over-capacity that would result from 24-hour running, which is at present prevented by the maximum of two-shift operation provided by the code. An extension of the National Industrial Recovery Act should be broad and flexible enough in its scope to permit the working out of measures by concerted action of the industry under governmental supervision for the rehabilitation of the industry and for dealing in an orderly way with the problem of facilities that may temporarily or permanently be found to be surplus.

Respectfully yours,

GEO. A. SLOAN.

THE COTTON TEXTILE CODE AUTHORITY,
New York, April 17, 1935.

HON. DAVID I. WALSH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: Supplementing my letter to you of even date, I think you might be interested in the enclosed copy of one just received from Mr. Bertram H. Borden, president of the American Printing Co., of Fall River, Mass.

Respectfully yours,

GEO. A. SLOAN.

AMERICAN PRINTING CO.,
New York, April 16, 1935.

MR. GEORGE A. SLOAN,
Chairman Cotton Textile Code Authority,
320 Broadway, New York City.

DEAR MR. SLOAN: I have read with interest the account of your recent appearance before the Senate Finance Committee in connection with the extension of the N. I. R. A., and particularly your discussion of conditions in the cotton-textile industry. As president of the American Printing Co., of Fall River, Mass., which for the past 50 years has been one of the largest textile employers of labor, I have been deeply concerned with discussions of our problems in the Congress, in the press, and by Government officials.

It occurs to me that you would be interested in the viewpoint of a practical millman, familiar with the industry's conditions North and South, and whose company may now be considered a casualty in the struggle which all cotton mills are making for their very existence.

I agree with you as to the vital necessity of continuing the N. R. A. in substantially its present form. In my opinion, our major difficulties are traceable directly to the cotton-processing tax and to increased Japanese importations. I consider that the processing tax has greatly retarded demand and consequently the recovery of this important industry. Added to that, the Japanese situation is most alarming.

As you know, the American Printing Co., with its finishing plant of 42 printing machines and a large dyeing capacity, and its cotton mills, with 360,000 spindles at Fall River, had a conspicuous position in the trade. As a result of deplorable conditions which are now receiving national attention, we were forced to start liquidation of our business last fall. Since that time we have been compelled to drop from our pay rolls approximately 5,000 employees. Today our Fall River plant is entirely closed, and unless conditions improve, will probably not reopen.

Added to the Fall River plant, we own Borden Mills, Inc., at Kingsport, Tenn., consisting of about 90,000 spindles, employing about 800 operatives. If the present conditions continue we will probably be forced to close this plant as well. I mention our situation in the South by way of emphasizing the fact that our fundamental difficulties are industry-wide and not of a sectional character. In other words, the effect of the processing tax and Japanese imports has been to decrease the consumption of cotton goods manufactured in the United States and to demoralize our primary market. Altogether, the industry since last July has suffered such continued losses as to force many mills, North and South, to cease operations.

For the mills now closed, for the idle employees who formerly operated these closed spindles and looms, any action taken now may be too late. For them it would be a case of "locking the stable after the horse had been stolen." Nevertheless, it is not too late for our Government to eliminate the processing tax and provide adequate protection from low-cost foreign producers—steps which can preserve the business and jobs for workers of what is this country's largest single employing manufacturing industry.

We feel very strongly that prompt and effective Government action is the only alternative to further wholesale shut-downs of cotton mills, North and South. As I have been asked on several occasions to comment on this situation, I am sending a copy of this statement to the press.

Sincerely yours,

BERTRAM H. BORDEN, President.

A bill to authorize the incorporated town of Seward, Alaska, to undertake certain municipal public works, including the construction of an electric generating station and electric distribution systems, and for such purposes to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $118,000 (Rept. No. 530).

Mr. BONE also, from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2316) to authorize the incorporated town of Petersburg, Alaska, to undertake certain municipal public works, including the filling, grading, and paving of streets and sidewalks and construction of necessary bridges and viaducts in connection with the same, and for such purposes to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $40,000, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 531) thereon.

Mr. BANKHEAD, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 2228) to provide for the further development of cooperative agricultural extension work and the more complete endowment and support of land-grant colleges, and agricultural experiment stations, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 532) thereon.

Mr. SCHALL, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2045) to set aside certain lands for the Leech Lake Band of Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 535) thereon.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on today, April 18, 1935, that committee presented to the President of the United States the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 93) to extend the time within which contracts may be modified or canceled under the provisions of section 5 of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1934.

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT CONVENTION

Mr. DUFFY. As in executive session, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, I report back favorably Executive E (73d Cong., 2d sess.) the International Convention of the Copyright Union as revised and signed at Rome on June 2, 1928, being a convention for the protection of literary and artistic works, and I submit a report (Exec. Rept. No. 4) thereon.

I desire to announce at this time that this convention involves the copyright situation, and there has been proposed and is now pending before the Patents Committee legislation on the subject that we expect will have been considered before this matter shall be taken up. That is the understanding and agreement of the various conflicting interests with reference to this particular convention.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection the report will be received and placed on the Executive Calendar.

THOMAS JEFFERSON—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BURKE

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an address on Thomas Jefferson, delivered by the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] before the Jeffersonian Society of Connecticut at Providence, R. I., on April 14, 1935.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Thomas Jefferson stands out in history as the greatest champion of liberty the world has ever known. He was a champion, it is said, who never lost a cause in which the freedom of the people was concerned. It will profit Americans today, as they gather to celebrate the anniversary of the birth of this great man, to review the contribution which he made to the cause of human liberty.

In limiting our discussion to this subject, we are not unmindful of so much of importance in the life of Jefferson that must be omitted. A lawyer of high standing, he served Virginia in the Colonial Legislature, and followed Patrick Henry as its Governor during the most trying period of the Revolution. He was sent as Ambassador to France to carry on the great work so well begun by Benjamin Franklin. When the Union of States was perfected, Washington called Jefferson to be the first Secretary of State. As Vice President, he presided over the Senate, and while so engaged, prepared a manual of procedure which is still authoritative. Eight years as President marked him as one of our greatest Executives. All of this remarkable record of achievement we pass by and likewise a most unusual versatility which gave him skill as an architect, a landscape gardener, an inventor, a scientist, a musician, and a man of letters.

We speak tonight of Jefferson as the champion of liberty. We may well believe that he would have it so. For, after his death, there was discovered among his papers a private memorandum in which he suggested that if a memorial to mark his resting place should be considered, he would like to have inscribed upon the granite these words, and none other:

"Here was buried Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence, of the statutes of Virginia for religious freedom, and father of the University of Virginia."

AUTHOR OF THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

Jefferson was studying law at Williamsburg in May 1765 when the Virginia Legislature engaged in the celebrated debate upon Patrick Henry's resolution denouncing the Stamp Act. The young law student heard the entire debate. He tells in his own words how deeply impressed he was by the fiery oratory of Patrick Henry, concluding with that familiar quotation:

"Caesar had his Brutus, Charles the First his Cromwell, and George the Third (interrupted by cries of 'treason') may profit by their example. If this be treason, make the most of it."

Jefferson at that moment became the champion of liberty. He changed his seal to the Latin motto which reads:

"Resistance to tyrants is obedience to God."

He wrote and talked and lived freedom for the Colonies. That spirit he carried with him as a delegate from Virginia to the Continental Congress in June 1775. Such an impression did he make upon his associates, that when a year later the Congress voted to select a committee to draft a declaration in support of a resolution setting forth the reasons for independence, Jefferson was named as chairman. To him was given the task of preparing the declaration to present to the colonists, to the mother country, and to the world, what Webster calls the "Title deed of American liberty." That Declaration, which will be cherished in every patriotic heart as long as civilization shall last, was presented to the Congress, and, after several days of debate, was adopted on July 4, 1776.

On the committee with Jefferson was John Adams, of Massachusetts. In the debates preceding the adoption of the Declaration, Adams took the leading part. I refer to this because of a most remarkable circumstance. Jefferson and Adams went forth from that Congress to lives of most distinguished service, each filling in turn the highest positions abroad and at home. Fifty years rolled by. On July 4, 1826, this country had become a world power with 12,000,000 inhabitants. On that day great gatherings were held to celebrate the completion of a half century of freedom. On that day, 50 years from the hour of the adoption of the Declaration of Independence, Jefferson, at his home in Virginia, Adams, in his beloved Massachusetts, passed each to his reward. The citizens of the country were awed by this manifestation of the destiny that rules the affairs of men. In all of the great cities of the land, and no doubt here where we meet tonight, the people gathered to renew their pledge of allegiance to the cause of freedom, so nobly exemplified in the lives of these two departed heroes. Daniel Webster addressed the citizens of Boston, William Wirt those of Washington, John Tyler of Richmond. If Thomas Jefferson had no other claim to fame than as author of the Declaration of Independence, his name would be honored as long as time shall last.

AUTHOR OF THE STATUTES OF VIRGINIA FOR RELIGIOUS FREEDOM

We pass from Jefferson the champion of civil liberty to Jefferson the exponent of religious freedom. Contrary to the general belief, which rests no doubt, on the assumption that it must be so, since the New World was settled by men and women in search of a place where they could worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience, religious freedom was unknown in most of the Colonies. In Virginia there was an Established Church, to the support of which all must contribute, whether or not they believed in its doctrines. More than that, dissenters were persecuted and imprisoned. Those who attempted to preach any doctrine other than that of the Established Church were arrested as disturbers of the peace. Instances are given of such men in jail preaching through the bars of their cells, while the mob without used every effort to circumvent those who would listen.

Jefferson tells us that the first republican legislature, which met in Virginia in 1776, was flooded with petitions to abolish spiritual tyranny. He says:

"These brought on the severest contests in which I have been engaged. * * *

"* * * The petitions were referred to the committee of the whole house on the state of the country; and, after desperate contests in that committee, almost daily from the 11th of October to the 5th of December we prevailed so far only as to repeal the laws which rendered criminal the maintenance of any religious opinions, the forbearance of repairing to church, or the exercise of any mode of worship; and, further, to exempt dissenters from contribution to the support of the Established Church."

It was not until December 1785, after continuous struggle, aided by the constant plea of Madison that "men's thoughts are free in religion as in politics", that the Legislature of Virginia adopted the bill drafted by Jefferson, being "An act for establishing religious freedom." A quotation from that act will show that it deserves to rank with the sublime phrases of the Declaration of Independence.

"Whereas Almighty God hath created the mind free—that all attempts to influence it by temporal punishments or burthens, or by civil incorporations, tend only to beget habits of hypocrisy and meanness, and are a departure from the plan of the Holy Author of our religion, who, being Lord both of body and mind, yet chose not to propagate it by coercions on either, as was in His almighty power to do; that the impious presumptions of legislators and rulers, civil and ecclesiastical, who being themselves but fallible and uninspired men, have assumed dominion over the faith of others, setting up their own opinions and modes of thinking as the only true and infallible, and as such endeavoring to impose them on others, hath established and maintained false religions over the greater part of the world, and through all time—and, finally, that truth is great and will prevail if left to herself; that she is the proper and sufficient antagonist to error, and has nothing to fear from the conflict, unless by human interposition disarmed of her natural weapons, free argument and debate, error ceasing to be dangerous when it is permitted freely to contradict them.

"Be it enacted by the General Assembly, That no man shall be compelled to frequent or support any religious worship, place, or ministry whatsoever, nor shall he be enforced, restrained, molested, or burthened in his body or goods, nor shall otherwise suffer on account of his religious opinions or belief; but that all men shall be free to profess, and by argument to maintain, their opinion in matters of religion, and that the same shall in no wise diminish, enlarge, or effect their civil capacities."

As the Declaration of Independence shall stand forever as the most sublime presentation of the cause of civil liberty, so the act for establishing religious freedom shall take equal place in the cause of religious liberty. That two such immortal documents should come from the brain and soul of a single individual is cause for wonder and rejoicing. Together they make the name of Jefferson synonymous with that word which has sustained the martyr in the dungeon or at the stake, the wounded patriot on the battlefield, the humble worker at his daily task—the sweetest word that ever fell from the lips of man—liberty.

FATHER OF THE UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA

There remained one other battle to be won, Jefferson felt, before man could really be called "free." Civil liberty was essential in order that society, having overthrown the tyrant, might govern itself. Religious liberty must be maintained whatever the cost so that the soul of man may develop under the light of God's blessing. Jefferson saw that neither civil liberty nor religious liberty would ever be secure while people remained in ignorance. At a very early age, he became devoutly attached to the cause of public education. That devotion he maintained throughout his long life. After nearly 40 years of constant effort to spread the blessings of public education, Jefferson said in 1818:

"A system of general instruction which shall reach every description of our citizens, from the richest to the poorest, as it was the earliest, so it will be the latest, of all the public concerns in which I shall permit myself to take an interest."

In the year 1779 Jefferson introduced in the Virginia Legislature a bill for the establishment of a system of popular education. As the basis of his proposal there was to be a system of free education for all free children, girls as well as boys. The inclusion of girls was in advance of any similar movement anywhere. It was 10 years later before the first girls were admitted to the public schools of Boston.

Jefferson proposed that each county should be divided into "hundreds" corresponding to the old militia districts. In each of these divisions there should be erected and maintained at public expense a district schoolhouse which should be as well the seat of local governmental assembly and primary education. Every free child within the district should have a minimum of 3 years of free training in reading, writing, and arithmetic. Here we witness the birth of the three "R's."

The bill provides that "the books which shall be used therein for instructing the children to read shall be such as will at the same time make them acquainted with Grecian, Roman, English, and American history." It was Jefferson's opinion that the most valuable instruction was imparting a knowledge of what men have actually done in this world. To quote his own words:

"History, by apprising them of the past, will enable them to judge of the future; it will avail them of the experience of other times and other nations; it will qualify them to act as judges of the actions and designs of men."

Next above these primary schools, Jefferson's plan called for the cooperation of an appropriate number of counties in establishing and maintaining grammar schools or classical academies. A system of selection of the most worthy students was provided so that only those who had the required aptitude would proceed with their education beyond the primary schools.

Finally, he envisoned, and aided in developing, to cap the system of public education, a State-supported university. He set forth the objects to be attained so clearly that his own language must be quoted:

"To form the statesmen, legislators, and judges, on whom public prosperity and individual happiness are so much to depend; to expound the principles of government, the laws which regulate the intercourse of nations, those formed municipally for our own Government, and a sound spirit of legislation, which, banishing all arbitrary and unnecessary restraint on individual action shall leave us free to do whatever does not violate the equal rights of another; to harmonize and promote the interests of agriculture, manufacture, and commerce, and by well-informed views of political economy to give a free scope to the public industry; to develop the reasoning faculties of our youth, enlarge their minds, cultivate their morals, and instill into them the precepts of virtue and order; to enlighten them with physical and mathematical sciences, which advance the arts and administer to the health, the subsistence, and the comforts of human life; and, finally, to form them to habits of reflection and correct action, rendering them examples of virtue to others and of happiness within themselves. These are the objects of that higher grade of education, the benefits and blessings of which the legislature now propose to provide for the good and ornament of their country, the gratification and happiness of their fellow citizens."

As a result of the efforts of Jefferson, a beginning was made of the establishment of the University of Virginia. It was a long and hard struggle. Finally the university buildings and grounds began to shape themselves into an attractive campus. Learned men came from near and far to assume positions on the corps of instructors. It was not long until the University of Virginia came to be recognized as one of the outstanding institutions of higher learning in the country. Three distinguished Americans are listed as holding in turn the office of President of the University of Virginia, namely: Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, James Monroe. This is a record that will never be equaled by any institution of learning.

In this brief and imperfect manner I have attempted to refresh your memory concerning Thomas Jefferson, the champion of liberty. Civil liberty is ours today because Jefferson wrote that inspiring call to freedom which the world knows as the Declaration of Independence. Religious liberty is our proud heritage because Jefferson had the courage and determination to devote himself to that task until Virginia wrote into law a Statute for Religious Liberty. Free education, which means liberty from the enthralling yoke of ignorance, became a reality because Jefferson looked into the future and saw that civil liberty could not stand, and religious liberty must perish, unless the common people had the scales of ignorance stricken from their eyes.

So, it is fitting that we gather on this anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson, and live over again some of the stirring scenes in which he took always so prominent a part. Liberty is at stake today as ever. We must so guide our steps and shape our actions that we will not endanger that civil liberty for which Jefferson so valiantly struggled. That we sanction no interference with religious liberty which was dearer to him than his own life. That we perpetuate and safeguard that system for the diffusion of learning through free public education, without which, as Jefferson knew there can be no liberty at all. If a review of the life and work of Thomas Jefferson will aid us in pledging anew our allegiance to the cause of human liberty, then this observance will not have been in vain.

COMMENT ON CONGRESS, BY FRED BRENCKMAN

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a radio address delivered on March 16 by Mr. Fred Brenckman, representing the National Grange, entitled "Comment on Congress."

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The present Congress has now been in session for two months and a half and it is proceeding at a much more leisurely pace than its predecessor, the Seventy-third Congress.

All thought of early adjournment has been abandoned. The prospects are that the session will be prolonged until midsummer. The committees of both Houses have held extended hearings on the administration's social-security program, the so-called "Eastman bills" for coordinating rail, water, and motor transportation, the proposed amendments to the A. A. A., which are designed to strengthen Government control, and various other important measures.

After passing the House with little debate, the $4,880,000,000 public-works appropriation bill has been a veritable bone of contention in the Senate. There has been an almost equal division of sentiment there regarding the President's proposal for what he terms a security wage on public-works projects undertaken for relief purposes.

WAGES ON PUBLIC-WORKS PROJECTS

According to the President's line of reasoning wages on such projects should be sufficient to sustain the workers and their families, but should be so graduated as to give workers an incentive to get off the Government pay roll and to find employment in private industry wherever possible. The American Federation of Labor, on the other hand, has stoutly contended that for the Government to pursue such a course could have no other effect than to depress wage levels throughout the country and to injure the cause of labor.

Senator MCCARRAN, of Nevada, the chief spokesman for labor in this controversy on the floor of the Senate, offered an amendment to the administration bill calling for what is known as the "prevailing wage." This means that wages paid by the Government on relief projects should be in accord with those of the community in which the work is done. This issue was compromised yesterday when the Senate adopted a substitute amendment offered by Senator RUSSELL, of Georgia, under which the Government will pay the prevailing wage in connection with the construction of all Government buildings.

It is now conceded by everyone that it is unsound policy for the Government to pay higher wages on relief projects than the going wage of the community. Under such a system the public debt would rapidly mount to higher and higher figures, and it would be virtually impossible for private industry to reabsorb the unemployed.

SENATOR GORE STANDS BY HIS GUNS

Recently two Oklahoma mayors attempted to dictate to Senator THOMAS P. GORE, of that State, as to how he should vote on the McCarran amendment to the public-works bill. They received from him a telegram which shows that there are still men in Congress who are captains of their own souls. Following is the message sent by Senator GORE:

"This will acknowledge your exceedingly diplomatic and hospitable telegram. It shows how the dole spoils the soul. Your telegram intimates that your votes are for sale. Much as I value votes, I am not in the market. I cannot consent to buy votes with the people's money. I owe a debt to the taxpayer as well as the unemployed. I shall discharge both. None but the bully resorts to threats and none but the coward yields to them."

Aside from the merits or demerits of the question here involved, it is naturally impossible for any legislator to vote in such a way as to please everybody. Mr. GORE, who is always willing to give his constituents or anyone else a fair hearing, nevertheless belongs to that breed of statesmen who cannot be intimidated, coerced, or bulldozed by anyone. He is a credit to his State and has always upheld the best traditions of our highest legislative tribunal.

GRANGE FAVORS LOWER INTEREST RATES

The Farm Credit Act of 1935, which passed the Senate a month ago, is still in the hands of the House Committee on Agriculture. While the bill was pending in the Senate, Senator WHEELER, of Montana, offered an amendment which was adopted, reducing interest rates on farm mortgages held by Federal land banks from 4½ to 3½ percent. The Grange has given its hearty support to this amendment. The interest rates on Government bonds has been materially lowered during the past year, and with the Government standing behind land bank bonds to the extent that it does under present conditions, the benefit of lower interest rates should be reflected to the farmer.

As I remarked during our broadcast of last month, the Grange is asking Congress to take action directing the Federal Trade Commission to investigate the manufacturers of and dealers in agricultural implements and machinery to definitely determine whether or not unfair trade practices and price fixing are responsible for the continued unreasonably high prices that farmers must pay for such equipment. There has been very little recession from war-time prices on agricultural implements and machinery. The falling off in employment in this industry is largely due to the fact that the prices charged for its products are to all practical intents and purposes prohibitive. Congressman A. L. BULWINKLE, of North Carolina, has introduced a joint resolution asking for an investigation. We trust that this may be enacted and that it will result in more reasonable prices for farm implements and machinery.

The State Department is still busy drafting reciprocal trade agreements with various countries. Treaties have now been consummated with Cuba, Brazil, and Belgium. Agreements with the Netherlands and her colonies and with Italy are nearing completion. The Grange has been keeping a watchful eye on these agreements and has been active in protecting the interests of American producers of farm products.

HEARINGS ON TRANSPORTATION BILLS

I have already referred to the fact that congressional hearings have been in progress on the Eastman transportation bills for the unification and coordination of rail, water, and motor transportation. We hold Mr. Eastman in high esteem. However, in presenting the views of the Grange at these committee hearings, I emphasized the Grange contention that Federal regulation of water and motor transportation, especially as to rates and practices, would result in serious handicaps to the farmer, the stockman, and the horticulturist.

There has been no demand by shippers for the regulation of boat or trucking rates. The demand comes from the railroads. It likewise comes from those who are engaged in the operation of trucks on a large scale. This latter group is trying to strangle the little fellow, the "forgotten man", if you please, and to establish a monopoly for its own benefit. Every feature of this proposed legislation clearly indicates the intention to raise the rates of motor and water transportation to higher levels for the benefit of the railroads.

Under no circumstances do we believe that Congress should approve any regulation of motor or water carriers, the purpose of which is to increase the cost of or to restrict the use of such transportation in order to protect any other form of transportation. If any change is necessary in the existing order of things to bring about equal competitive opportunities, we favor a reasonable elimination of some of the restrictions on the railroads which were necessary when they had a monopoly of land transportation.

To the Grange it seems utterly preposterous that Congress should take any action which would result in higher rates for motor and water transportation. Such action could not fail to retard our industrial recovery and act to the detriment of the Nation as a whole.

FARMERS' HOME CORPORATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2367) to create the Farmers' Home Corporation, to promote more secure occupancy of farms and farm homes, to correct the economic instability resulting from some present forms of farm tenancy, to engage in rural rehabilitation, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in advocating the passage of the pending bill my brief remarks will fall under two heads: First, the purposes and provisions of the bill; second, the justification for the proposed legislation.

In beginning my statement let me impress on Senators the thought that, considering the rapid growth of farm tenancy in the United States, there is necessity for general or national action designed under present conditions to give to tenants and share-croppers the opportunity of acquiring and owning their own homes.

Recognizing the importance of the subject matter of the pending legislation, as heretofore stated, I was working on a draft of a bill relating thereto when the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] introduced his measure. Believing that his draft is well considered and that with such amendments as the Senate may find necessary the bill should command support, I have abandoned any independent proposal relating to the subject, and take this occasion to submit some views as to the reasons for giving my support to the measure now before the Senate.

First, let me review some of the important provisions of the proposed legislation.

In section 2 the purpose of the measure is set forth. It contemplates checking the increase of farm tenancy, aiding in rural rehabilitation, and encouraging the ownership of small farm homes.

For the accomplishment of the purposes stated, a corporation is to be created, to be known as the "Farmers' Home Corporation", with a board of 5 directors, 2 of whom, officers of the Government, shall be ex-officio members, the remaining 3 to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The two ex-officio members of the board of the Farmers' Home Corporation are to be the Secretary of Agriculture and the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration. Manifestly, these two officers, more than other officers, are interested in the subject matter of the proposed legislation. Their duties are closely related to it, and their experience qualifies them for rendering efficient service.

There is a limitation imposed by the bill to the effect that no director, officer, or employee of the Corporation shall receive a salary in excess of $10,000. It is further provided that the capital stock in the beginning shall consist of $50,000,000, to be subscribed by the President and paid out of the funds carried in the Emergency Relief Act of 1935. When occasion requires, and in the discretion of the directors of the Corporation, the capital stock may be increased.

One of the most important provisions relates to the issuance of bonds by the Corporation. Paragraph (d) of section 3 authorizes the issuance of bonds in an aggregate amount not to exceed $1,000,000,000, the bonds to be sold by the Corporation for the purpose of obtaining funds with which to carry out the provisions of the act. The form of the bonds, their denominations, terms, and conditions, as well as the rates of interest which they may bear, are to be fixed by the Corporation, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I desire to ask the Senator his interpretation of the particular section to which he has referred. Does the Senator construe the section as giving the Secretary of the Treasury a complete veto over the issuance of the bonds, or merely a control over their form, maturity, and so forth? In other words, could the Corporation order the bonds issued, and would the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury be confined to their terminology, and so forth?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, since their terms and conditions must be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, I do not believe the Corporation could issue bonds without his approval. It seems to me the language of the measure removes any substantial doubt as to that conclusion.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I assume, then, from the Senator's response, if he will permit me further, that there would be no objection to clarifying this point completely by amending line 7 on page 4 to read:

> The Corporation is authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to issue bonds—

And so forth.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas permit me to interrupt him at this point?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The provision in the bill for bond issues follows the provision in the home owners' law.

Mr. ROBINSON. In reply to the inquiry of the Senator from Michigan, I will say that the necessity for an amendment of the nature he has described does not appear to me at this time. Personally I see no objection to it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think it is wise to give to the Secretary of the Treasury, plus the board which is to be set up by the bill, the authority to issue bonds to the extent of $1,000,000,000, or to commit the Government to the issuance of bonds to that amount, which, of course, means that the Government guarantees a billion dollars? It seems to me that is too much authority to give even to the Secretary of the Treasury, notwithstanding any former legislation of the character indicated by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in answer to the question of the Senator from Utah, I stated in the beginning of my remarks that I advocate the principles and purposes of this proposed legislation. It naturally follows that I do favor authorizing the bond issue, and authorizing the Corporation, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to fix the terms of the bonds.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. My construction of the bill is that it will not become effective at all until, first, the President shall determine to make the subscription, and, secondly, until the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine to issue the bonds.

Mr. ROBINSON. In the course of legislation, as is well understood, the President must sign the bill, or it must be passed over his veto. Then, under the terms of the bill, he must make the allocation relating to the stock before the bill can actually become effective. The Senator from Idaho is correct about that. So that not only is the approval of the Executive required as to the passage of the proposed legislation, but under it he would have the power to withhold the subscription of stock, although in all fairness it must be stated that I do not think the Executive would do that. If we shall pass the legislation, and it shall be approved by him, I think it will follow logically that he will make the subscriptions of the stock which the bill contemplates.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BYRD in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think I understand the statement of the Senator from Arkansas in response to the question of the Senator from Idaho; but, as I read the bill, while it is true, as the Senator has very properly stated, that the signature of the President to the bill is necessary, and also to the subscription to the $50,000,000 of stock, it does not require any action by the President of the United States with respect to the issuance of the bonds.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; that is certainly true; and it is my recollection that usually bond issues authorized by the Congress must be approved in one way or another by the Secretary of the Treasury rather than by the President. If the Senate should choose to impose that responsibility upon the Executive, I should not have the slightest objection to incorporating in the bill a provision to that effect. There is no authority on my part to speak for the Senator from Alabama, but I do not believe he would object.

Mr. President, one of the provisions of this section is to the effect that the bonds shall be unconditionally guaranteed, both as to principal and as to interest, by the United States. Of course, the purpose of this guaranty is to make certain that the bonds will find a ready market. There is also a provision that if the Corporation shall fail or be unable to pay the bonds as they mature, the Secretary of the Treasury shall arrange to take them up.

The powers of the Corporation are further defined on pages 7 and 8. Passing over mere formal authority usually granted to Federal corporations, I point now to subparagraph (3) on page 8, which is to the effect that the Corporation shall be authorized—

> To establish, make loans for, and to assist in the establishment of small individual farms and farm homes, together with the necessary buildings and other structures, livestock, equipment, implements and machinery, furnishings, supplies, and facilities.

Manifestly, the purpose is not merely to provide the purchaser with a small tract of land on which he may make his home but it is also to add to that the resources which are necessary to enable him to secure the equipment and other things essential to the making of a home.

In this connection I wish to refer briefly to the suggestion made by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] during the course of the debate 2 days ago. He pointed out as an alleged defect in the bill the fact that there is no limitation on either the acreage or the amount of the loan which is to enter into the making of the home.

From one standpoint, the Senator's suggestion presents a difficulty. Much thought has been given to that subject. There is a serious matter in the way of fixing an arbitrary limitation on acreage. In some localities lands are of so much greater value than in others that comparatively smaller areas would be adequate for the purposes of the proposed legislation. A 40-acre tract in the alluvial valley of the Mississippi River, for instance, would seem to be all that would be necessary, but if the home is to be located in a mountainous or hilly region, or in the semi-arid regions of the West, a larger area would be required if the purposes of the proposed act are to be consummated. Therefore, there is a difficulty in the way of fixing an arbitrary limitation. I should not object to a maximum and a minimum if the Senate should see fit to incorporate them.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. GORE. I have given some further thought to the point raised by the Senator from Arkansas, and I should like to suggest that there be provided a double limitation, such as—merely by way of illustration—that the farm purchased should not exceed 40 acres in extent, and, say, $2,500 in value. I mention these figures merely as tentative.

I have a feeling that if a man cannot make a living on 40 acres, he ought not make the venture on that kind of land at all, and my desire, if this measure is to be enacted, is to provide as many people as possible with small homes. As I suggested the other day, in ancient Rome the average farm consisted of four and a half acres. I should like to have the Senator consider the practical application of the double standard I have suggested.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have considered it, and recognize the weight of the argument which the Senator from Oklahoma presents. It might be that if no limitation were incorporated, an ill-considered management of the Corporation might result in the granting of excessive acreage, which naturally would have a tendency to diminish the number who could be benefited.

At the same time, I wish to point out and to emphasize, for the consideration of the Senator from Oklahoma, that a 40-acre tract of land in some areas of which I know and in which some persons seeking benefits of the act might desire to reside would be inadequate. We can hardly fix an arbitrary limitation unless we place in the statute a maximum and a minimum acreage, giving leeway within the two for the exercise of discretion.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I recognize the difficulty, and I also recognize the reason advocated in favor of such a limitation; but let me point out to the Senator, if he will permit, another difficulty. If we should fix a maximum acreage, for instance, and make the area large enough for a section where a large number of acres would be necessary to make a home, the limitation would be so much larger than was necessary in some other locality, where a 40-acre or even a 20-acre tract would be sufficient, as to make it possible that danger would arise of the purchase of an area much larger than would be necessary in such a community, where a small tract would be sufficient. I wonder whether I make myself clear.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think the Senator does.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me there would be great danger of such a result. A 40-acre limitation in some localities would mean that there would be no homesteading.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have so stated. If a homestead were to be located on the semiarid lands of the West, or in the mountainous regions of certain States, where there are strong influences attracting people to citizenship notwithstanding the sterility of much of the soil, there would be no homesteads.

Mr. NORRIS. There would be no homesteads.

Mr. ROBINSON. There are other considerations which I think should be given weight. A 20-acre tract might be adequate for one with a very small family; it might be more attractive to him than a much larger area differently located. It might be in a community in which he has lived, where his children are in the habit of going to school, where he has formed attachments and connections which he would not like to disrupt or discontinue, and a tract smaller even than 40 acres might be found sufficient for his requirements. That is the reason, I think, perhaps, in the initial stages of the legislation it would be best not to fix a limit on acreage. At the same time, one must recognize the arguments which may be presented on the other side of the proposition.

With respect to a proposed limitation on the amount which may be advanced by the Corporation to an individual purchaser of a home, there are a number of difficulties which suggest themselves in that connection.

The object of the bill is to assure to persons within certain classes or groups the opportunity of attaching themselves to the land, of making homes. There are many large plantations in the United States, some of them in my own State, held by what may be termed "absentee owners." For the most part, during recent years, such plantations have proved unprofitable; many of them are mortgaged, and, with some others, they might be cut up into small areas, with the approval of the owners, and sold for homes to those who are at present tenants and share-croppers. In some cases the lands are highly improved; in many cases they are very fertile. Quite naturally under any conditions they cannot be acquired at the prices received for land that is comparatively sterile.

I think a limitation of $2,500 would be too small. There would be cases in which it would be adequate. It seems to me certain that there would be cases in which it would prove inadequate if the prospective beneficiaries are to have a real opportunity to get homes.

Of course, precautions and safeguards must be taken to prevent real-estate speculation or kindred transactions. Any administrator who would not be cautious in connection with so important a measure as this, and who would not do everything possible to prevent the making of profit to plantation owners through sales of their lands would be unworthy. At the same time I doubt the wisdom of fixing a limitation of $2,500 on the amount which may be loaned to any one purchaser.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. GORE. I merely rise to say to the Senator from Arkansas that my suggestion, both as to 40 acres and $2,500, was merely provisional to indicate what I had in my mind; merely to suggest some sort of double standard alternating between acreage and value.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes, Mr. President, I understand that; but the difficulty arises in practical application. I ask the Senator now, if he were called upon to fix the limits, on what basis he would rest them? What would he say as to acreage, and what would he say as to amount?

Mr. GORE. So far as acreage is concerned, I would say 40 acres. There is not any doubt that if the land is fit to cultivate as a farm at all he can make a living on 40 acres. If he cannot make a living on 40 acres, the experiment ought not to be tried on that sort of land. The question of value is a little more difficult, but I am not concerned about the exact figure.

The Senator from Arkansas suggested that in the Mississippi Delta 40 acres would be ample. The cost would perhaps be excessive. With regard to the western part of Oklahoma, in the arid section, 40 acres would be too small a tract; then, under this bill and under my suggestion, a larger tract could be provided, subject to the limitation as to the value.

Mr. President, if we fix no limit upon the acreage and fix no limit upon the value, and John Doe applies and obtains a loan or an advance for 250 acres, and Richard Roe makes application for 250 acres, I do not know how a governmental official can say "no" to the latter when both citizens occupy practically the same position. He may say, "John Doe is a better man than you are; he is a man of better character; he is more industrious; and he will probably pay for his land; and you will not."

Mr. President, that sort of answer will not suffice, and I do not want to subject Government officials to an ordeal which human nature cannot withstand. I think the Senator from Arkansas will appreciate the force of that observation.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, this is not an act to encourage immigration. There is no element of that nature in the suggested legislation. But by limiting to 40 acres in all cases the area which may be acquired by a purchaser, it will become an incentive to migration, so that thousands of persons now living in hilly and mountainous regions and in the semiarid regions will leave their present places of residence and all seek homes within very limited areas, thus complicating the task of the managers of the Corporation.

As I have previously said, there is much which can be urged in favor of maximum and minimum limitations which would give opportunity for the exercise of a reasonable measure of discretion respecting the subject. That is not only true as to acreage, but it is also true as to amount. However, when we come to the latter, difficulties present themselves which seem wellnigh insurmountable. Inevitably there would be complaint of discrimination or favoritism should no rule or limit be prescribed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. On that point I should like to suggest that if this bill shall be passed and become a law, its success or its failure will, in my judgment, depend upon the administration of the law more than upon the law itself. It can be made a failure if dishonestly or inefficiently managed. In my judgment, it can be made a great success and accomplish a vast amount of good if it is administered properly.

If we limit the area to 40 acres, we might fix a limit, and probably would, which is higher than would be desirable in some localities. In the case of truck farming, for instance, in the vicinity of a large city, or farming under irrigation where vegetables are raised, and so forth, a farmer could get along on a much smaller area of land; sometimes perhaps even with as little as 10 acres. But a 40-acre limit would be impossible for the man who wanted to live in the mountain country or other sections of the great West, where a 40-acre tract would be absurdly low. It would be impossible to make a living on it.

It is not only the man who is highly cultivating the soil and raising an intensive crop whom it would be desirable to have acquire land under this bill, but likewise the home owner who has a couple of cows or some other stock. If he should want to graze his stock, he would have to have a larger area of land, which probably would be less valuable than a smaller tract; but, if we should limit him to 40 acres, we would make such a thing an absolute impossibility under this bill.

After all, we cannot escape the fact that if the administration of the law shall be inefficient or dishonest it will fail; if it shall be honest and efficient, it will succeed and we shall not need a limitation.

Mr. ROBINSON. What the Senator has said is undoubtedly correct.

Mr. President, I again emphasize the fact that we do not wish to invite an exodus of citizens from their present localities to centers where they know rich lands are available, and thus create competition which will increase the difficulties of the management of the Farmers' Home Corporation. The subject is by no means so simple as it seems at first statement.

There are other provisions in the bill authorizing the establishment of periods of amortization, the maximum limit being fixed at 60 years.

The terms of the proposed act relating to interest have given me some difficulty. The committee has written into the bill a provision which will give to the beneficiaries of the legislation the advantage of the lowest rates that the Government can obtain when the sale of the bonds is negotiated, and I am not cetrain but that is about as good language as can be enacted.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COOLIDGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. At that point I again ask for the Senator's interpretation. If the language stands as written in the committee amendment, page 10, line 7, to wit, "as low rate of interest as the Government can secure the money", I invite the Senator's attention to the fact that the provision might be interpreted to mean the short-term cheap money which the Government can get, but which it would not get for this particular purpose.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; I think that suggestion is well worthy of consideration. The language may be clarified, and I do not think there will be difficulty in doing that.

There are a number of penal provisions in the bill which it does not appear to be necessary to review or summarize.

Let me pass now for a few moments to a consideration of some of the reasons which prompt me to support this proposed legislation. There is real ground for alarm to be found in the rapid growth of farm tenancy in the United States during recent years. An excellent statement regarding that phase of the subject is printed in connection with the report, no. 446, on this bill. The country is subdivided into geographical areas, and there is a showing made as to the total number of farms, the number of farms operated by tenants, and the percentage of all farms operated by tenants according to divisions and States.

It is surprising to observe that in a number of the States as many as two-thirds of the farmers are tenants, and that this condition is growing. In my own State, where this problem is acute, in 1880, according to the census report, 21 percent of all farmers were tenants. The number then was 29,188. In 1890 the number of farmers who were tenants was 32 percent of all farmers, and the number of tenants was 40,054. In 1900 the percentage had increased to 45, the number of tenants to 81,000 plus, the number of acres rented to five and one-quarter millions plus, which was 32 percent of all farm lands. In 1910 the percentage of farmers who were tenants had increased to 50, in 1920 to 51, in 1930 to 63, and the figures are now approximately 66 percent, or about two-thirds; and those figures are below comparative figures affecting other States, the statistics being given in the statement to which I have referred.

The first question that arises in the mind of the student of this problem is whether it is of sufficient importance and of such great present interest as to require action by the National Government.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas permit an interruption at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. I just happened to come into the Chamber, having been in attendance in a meeting of the Committee on Finance. I desire to ask the Senator from Arkansas has he disclosed any reason for this trend toward tenancy?

Mr. ROBINSON. That point has not as yet been reached in the course of my remarks, but I will say to the Senator that it has been due to a combination of causes, some of which have gathered increased force during recent years. Formerly there was a vast public domain, which was subject to homestead entry, and almost anyone who wished to establish for himself a home could secure, without any cost whatever, or by the payment of trivial fees, a tract of land upon which to build his home. During the period when homestead entries were in progress literally hundreds of thousands of citizens of this country established homes in that way.

With the passing of time, however, the area subject to homestead entry became restricted. In addition to that, the choice lands had been taken; so that homestead entry was less inviting than formerly. Now practically all valuable lands have been taken up, and there no longer exists a public domain that invites the homesteader. Of course, that statement requires some modification. There are still some tracts of land in a number of the States that are subject to homestead entry, but they are comparatively few in number.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there are practically no lands left that really are available for homes.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is the point I am making. That avenue being closed, the result was a large increase in the number of persons who sought to farm, but had no opportunity of obtaining homes. During recent years economic conditions have accentuated the situation. Many people who owned homes have had the humiliation and discouragement of seeing them sold under the hammer of the auctioneer, foreclosed under mortgage, or by other processes of law, and they have found themselves wanderers again, seeking some place where they could establish themselves permanently.

In addition to that, unfortunately, there are large numbers of citizens who are not thrifty, who have not the faculty of accumulating, and who have lived from day to day dependent upon the opportunities of the hour or the period in which they live. That number, I may add, has been augmented and many persons of that class, who were formerly self-sustaining, have gone on the relief rolls.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. Does the Senator know what group or class of people own all this land that is occupied by tenants, and how they acquired it?

Mr. ROBINSON. There is no brief answer that can be given to that question. The present owners obtained it in different ways. Some of them purchased tracts of land adjoining their homes; others made loans which they were compelled to foreclose in order to recover their investment; others still have desired to possess large areas and to operate them, in the belief that they would be profitable. So that in many of the States considerable areas, comprised of the most valuable cultivated lands, have passed into large holdings. These large holdings may well be divided into two classes: First, holdings occupied by their owners and operated by them either through the employment of day labor or by the employment of tenants and share-croppers; and, second, areas held by absentee owners. Some of these areas were acquired by corporations. I recall that in my own State a lumber company, for illustration, with no thought of cultivating land, acquired vast timber resources. When the timber had been removed, drainage enterprises were instituted; the lands were heavily taxed, and they felt compelled to put them in cultivation, with the result that a number of large plantations are still in the ownership of those who do not particularly care to have farm lands, pay little attention to them, and often lose money in their operation. There are, of course, other processes by which these large holdings have been accumulated, but the description given will, I think, suffice for the present consideration.

There has been a back-to-the-farm movement, which constitutes another reason for the increase in farm tenancy. While the industries were operating full time and profitably literally thousands of people throughout the country left their farm homes in the belief that they could make greater earnings in factories, mills, and other industrial enterprises that employed large numbers. When the factories and the mills shut down or ceased to operate full time, and began operating only part time, there followed a flow back into the country, and that process, as we all know, was encouraged and is now being encouraged. The people who came back had sold their homes, if they owned them before they went to the cities, and they were compelled to rent or to become share-croppers.

I think it is pretty well known that in the State of Arkansas there has been, in some counties of the State, an acute condition relating to this subject. Along the eastern borders of the State are to be found some of the richest lands in all the world. For the most part those lands have been reclaimed and placed in cultivation during the last 40 years. In that section there are a large number of plantations. In the fall of the year people come down from the hills and the mountain regions, not only of Arkansas, but from adjoining States, to engage in gathering the crops. They find it profitable.

Usually when the crop-gathering season has ended they return to the places of their permanent residence. However, last year and year before last there was a great drought, which touched with its blighting hand a large section not only of the State of Arkansas but also of neighboring States. When these people came down to gather the crops and had concluded their work many of them, thousands of them, decided they would rather stay in the section where the moisture supply was abundant, where the soil was fertile, where they could be assured of liberal production, than to return to the places of their former residence. That created a surplus of farm tenants. That was one of the circumstances which brought about a condition which is difficult to describe fairly because the individual cases differ from one another and the causes of the controversies are varied.

In the crop-reduction contracts entered into last year there were certain clauses under which controversies have arisen. It is claimed on behalf of some of the tenants that in instances landowners have disregarded the spirit of their contracts with the Agricultural Adjustment Administration and have wrongfully evicted them.

From as careful a study of the subject as my other duties have permitted, the fact appears to be that during the last 2 years a large number of persons from other parts of Arkansas and neighboring States have moved into the territory in which the controversy exists. Many of them have remained there, as already stated. During the last 2 years, and particularly in 1934, the number was increased because of a complete crop failure due to drought in certain cotton-growing areas in that part of the world. The production was abundant in eastern Arkansas counties. When the cotton picking had been concluded, many who had come from the drought-stricken areas remained, as I have stated, for the purpose of becoming tenants in the fertile sections composed of Poinsett and other eastern Arkansas counties.

The cotton-acreage reduction contract obligated the farmer to—

> Endeavor in good faith to bring about the reduction of acreage contemplated in the contract in such a manner as to cause the least possible amount of labor, economic, and social disturbance, and to this end, insofar as possible, to effect the acreage reduction as nearly ratable as practicable among tenants on the farm; insofar as possible, to maintain on the farms the normal number of tenants and other employees; to permit all tenants to continue in the occupancy of their homes on the farm, rent free for the years 1934 and 1935, unless any such tenant should so conduct himself as to become a nuisance or a menace to the welfare of the landlord; during such years to afford such tenants or employees, without cost, access for fuel to such woodland as he may designate; to permit such tenants to use an adequate portion of the land to grow food and feed crops for home consumption and for pasturage for domestically used livestock; and for use on the rented acres, to permit the reasonable use of work animals and equipment in exchange for labor.

Under this contract the landlord had no right to evict any tenant willing to continue in the cultivation of the land unless the tenant so conducted himself as to become a nuisance or a menace to the welfare of the farmer. There are cases where tenants have been evicted and others have taken their places. The claim on behalf of the tenants is that the eviction was in violation of the contract. The contention on behalf of the farmer is that the eviction was necessary and in conformity with the contract.

The surplus number of tenants already described was added to from other sources. Along the rivers in normal times a considerable number of persons occupy houseboats and engage in hunting, fishing, trapping, and some of them in bootlegging. In a few instances where tenant houses have been found vacant, they have been occupied temporarily by such persons as those last described, who do not substantially engage in farming, but who have felt entitled to relief inasmuch as they have no considerable source of income and are threatened with want.

The trouble is thus accentuated by the exceptionally large number of tenants available, the number being so great that provision cannot be made for them all on the farms in the neighborhood in which the tenants are found. It is my information that approximately 10 percent more tenants, as a rule, in the troubled area are on the farms this year than were there last year. A number of them refused any form of employment, private or public.

Finding a fallow soil in which to sow the seeds of discontent, professional agitators, representatives of communistic and socialistic organizations and schools have gone into the neighborhoods affected, organized the tenants, and insisted that their rights have been disregarded and that to secure what is due them they should resort to violence.

Labor has the right to organize everywhere at all times. The tenants have that right. The general belief in the localities affected, however, is that the agitators referred to are prompted more by a desire to create trouble than to assist the tenants. For instance, in one case where the person was arrested, fined and imprisoned, the severe treatment inflicted upon him followed a speech which he delivered at Marked Tree, Ark., on January 15, 1935. The speech was taken down in shorthand and transcribed. In that speech the orator was quoted as saying that he was ready to lead a mob to lynch the landowners; and in recrimination for that speech there was resort to violence, regrettable in every case, but not surprising in some of the cases.

What I have just said does not apply to all the agitators. There are other cases where colored organizers went among the colored tenants and share-croppers to organize them into a union, which they had the right to join, and which was legally proper, so far as I know; but the organizer was charging $7.80 a member to the tenants and share-croppers for the function which he performed in getting them together. Charges were not made in all cases where organizations were set up; but this case illustrates how these poor, unfortunate persons were imposed upon by some who took advantage of their extremity to make profit for themselves. It may please the Senate to know that in the neighborhood to which I am referring the colored tenants themselves invited the organizer to discontinue his activities, and he did.

There is little doubt, from the literature circulated among the tenants by some of the organizers, that the agitation is communistic. To quote from a circular distributed among some of the tenants, it is apparent that the Soviet Union plan is the basis for the action of the organizers. I quote:

> Only in one country is there a full system of social insurance. That is the Soviet Union—the country where the workers and peasants are in control. There is no unemployment insurance in the Soviet Union, because there is no unemployment. The Soviet Government expended more than $2,000,000,000 on social insurance during the first 5 months of 1933, which is distributed through the trade unions. Any worker affected by sickness or accident is fully protected by insurance. He goes to a hospital or rest home, where he remains till he is fully recovered. An expectant mother remains away from work for 2 months before and 2 months after childbirth, with full care and wages—

And so forth. I shall not read the remainder of the circular. It is typical. The agitators circulating these publications were playing upon the despondency of the citizens and seeking to organize them into a communistic union. Of course, they have a right to join a communistic union, but it is not commendable to incite violence. They were told that every laborer should be fed by the Government. "Every worker should be on the relief rolls" was another statement in the circular to which I have referred. This is cited in order that there may be some understanding that the problem referred to is not a simple one. Back of it and underneath it and all around it, however, is a condition which requires attention, which demands action by the Government; and the proposed legislation is a long step toward the accomplishment of a wholesome purpose that will give every person of good moral character who is without a home the opportunity of obtaining one if he has been accustomed to making his livelihood by farming.

I do not yield to anyone in my confidence in the importance of sustaining the American home as the fundamental institution upon which this Republic rests. He who is attached to the soil and who owns his own home, is loyal to the Government and fond of its flag. He who is a "mover-on upon the surface of the earth, and a dweller in the tents of Tom All Alone", often feels little occasion to manifest his loyalty to his country. Give him a home, give him a chance to have a roof over his head and a pillow upon which he may rest his head when the shadows of evening fall, and he becomes a citizen who will defend our institutions when they are assailed.

Certainly it is not possible in a single measure completely to solve a problem as great as this. Certainly there are many who will not acquire homes under this bill, who are entitled by its provisions to do so; and there are also some who will abandon their homes after they acquire them. But the fundamental thought is that if we go on as we have been proceeding during the past 25 years, the farm lands of this Nation will pass into cultivation almost exclusively by those who do not own them, whose stake and interest in the community is merely transitory, and who are accustomed to moving on whenever occasion requires, because they have no permanent abiding place. To the extent that we give opportunity to the unfortunate, opportunity to the humblest share-cropper or tenant to gain for himself and his dependents a place which he can call home, we shall have rendered a service not only to him and his, but to all who are around about him and to all who will come after him.

I thank the Senate.

Mr. SMITH obtained the floor.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEWIS. I repeat the announcement I made on the previous roll call as to the absence of certain Senators and the reasons therefor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-three Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I rise not for the purpose of discussing the features of the pending bill but, rather, to address myself to what I consider to be a misunderstanding on the part of a great many who are not in a position to know the facts, which misunderstanding has been brought about by those who wanted to misrepresent the facts and to create a psychology throughout the country that is based entirely on a malicious propaganda.

It has gone abroad that the share-croppers, which term I shall define, the laborer and tenant, have been so mistreated by the heartless landlord that, perforce, the Government must step in and take the place of a defender of these people and become a provider for them.

We are using the words "tenant" and "share-cropper" and "laborer" without, perhaps, a proper understanding on the part of those who are to pass upon this proposed legislation of what the terms mean. I desire to define those terms, and, as a farmer myself, testify here as to the practice in North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia. I am not so well acquainted with the practice in Virginia, and I was informed by the statement made by the Senator from Arkansas as to conditions which exist in the fertile delta lands.

I will take my State as a typical example of the employment of what is known as the "share-cropper", under conditions brought about by the laborers themselves, and leave this body to judge who is really the beneficiary of the farm, and of the efforts of those who cultivate it.

A share-cropper is furnished a home, a house, a garden plot. He is furnished all the fuel he needs; he is furnished the animals with which to cultivate the land; he is furnished the implements; he is furnished fertilizer; he is fed and clothed during the year, and given one-half of the crop, out of which he has to pay for the food he buys and the clothing he and his family wear.

If there is a failure of the crop, and practically nothing is made, the share-cropper has had a living for a year at the expense of the landlord. If any profit is made, he gets one-half of all the profit made out of every article. From the profit made on commodities that are for sale he gets cash. As to those that are to be consumed, such as potatoes, corn, and wheat, not grown to market in my community, he gets one-half. He pays no taxes, except some slight personal tax. He has no expense of upkeep. It is "Heads I win and tails you lose."

I challenge any Senator from the States I have enumerated—North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia—to dispute the statement I have made as to the share-cropper. He has no taxes to pay, no fuel to buy, no house to rent. All these things are furnished him, together with the stock and the implements necessary for the cultivation of the land, and he gets one-half the crop.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand that in my State where all is furnished by the landlord, as the Senator has suggested, the tenant gets a third, instead of a half. Does that practice obtain in South Carolina?

Mr. SMITH. Where the landlord furnishes everything the tenant gets a third. Where he has to pay for half the fertilizer, which is the greatest item of cost in the agricultural process on the Atlantic seaboard, the share-cropper gets half of the crop.

Mr. BAILEY. Then he gets half?

Mr. SMITH. Then he gets half. But if the landlord furnishes all the fertilizer, the share-cropper gets a third of everything that is made.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me to make just a suggestion, with a view to getting some information for my own benefit?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I am tremendously interested in what the Senator has to say, because I know the Senator from South Carolina has lived with this subject and still lives with it and is tremendously interested in it, and highly intelligent about it.

I will agree that the tenant, under certain conditions, is cared for; he has subsistence, and whether the crop is good or bad, the price high or low, he comes through. I should like to have the Senator, before he takes his seat, tell me how the plan operates for 600,000 tenant farmers in the South, those who are presumably tenant farmers, most of them tenant farmers, who, under the present order of things, are limited to two bales of cotton.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, as a matter of course I was speaking of normal conditions. The new order of things I do not pretend to try to define. I am speaking of what was and what I hope will be. But I wish here and now to brand as a piece of malicious propaganda the holding up to the public of the desperate condition of the share-cropper. The Senator knows that what is said is not true. There is not a man from any State between Virginia and Florida but who knows it is not true. If I had desired to take the time, I could have cited instances where those who own small farms have left them and have become share-croppers on the property of certain land owners where they knew they were guaranteed food and clothing.

Before I close I think I will be able to show that the cause of the condition referred to does not come from the landlord, but comes from the intolerable condition under which the landlord himself has to live.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him again?

Mr. SMITH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BAILEY. I would not interrupt the Senator but for the fact that he stated I knew certain facts.

Granting that the share cropper, under the tenant system, does obtain subsistence at the expense of the landlord, since his crop, in the case of 600,000 share croppers, is limited to two bales of cotton—and that is official—I wish the Senator would inform the Senate what he has to say about that man's capacity to clothe his children, and to enjoy merely the elemental advantages of a human being. I am granting that he gets a subsistence, but what does he get beyond that with two bales of cotton, and the cost of the two bales of cotton being, I should say, 80 percent of the selling price?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, in order to answer the Senator's question one would have to go back and recite the conditions antedating the inauguration of the curtailment in production.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I was interested in the statement which the Senator made that there is no crop-sharing problem; that the crop-sharing problem has been exaggerated.

Mr. SMITH. Let us see what the Senator means by the word "exaggerated." Does the Senator mean that the condition of the share-cropper was exaggerated?

Mr. BORAH. I mean a condition of suffering which is supposed to exist.

Mr. SMITH. By the share-cropper?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. In my State, in North Carolina, and in Georgia, that condition has been absolutely misrepresented. It is not true.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know about the Senator's State; but yesterday there was brought to me a large amount of material purporting to show conditions which, from my viewpoint, are very serious. I have no doubt they would be from the Senator's viewpoint, if true. The person bringing me the material asked me to introduce a resolution to investigate the conditions. I did not do that; but I was startled by the statements of fact which were given to me.

Mr. SMITH. Purported facts; alleged facts.

Mr. BORAH. They were statements of fact. Whether or not they were false I have no means of knowing, but upon their face they were statements of fact.

Mr. SMITH. Perhaps false facts.

Mr. BORAH. I have no means of knowing; and I must take the statements of the Senators who represent those States and who know the conditions, I must accept their views with regard to them.

Mr. SMITH. I will make a proposal to the Senator. Select any number of Senators on the other side of the aisle, and select any number of Senators on this side of the aisle, and let us settle this question. Let us start on the line of North Carolina, and, without anyone knowing what we are doing, let us go through and examine the facts. I challenge this body to appoint any committee in which they have confidence to go to my State, and go from the northern to the southern border, and from the mountains to the seaboard, and see whether the share-cropper is not in as good a condition or in a better condition than the landlord himself, in the majority of the cases. That is a fair challenge.

Mr. BORAH. I am not questioning the capacity of the Senators or the integrity of the Senators to represent their States, but I had supposed there was really a serious condition there.

Mr. SMITH. Not amongst the share-croppers; no. I own quite a considerable amount of land used for farming purposes. I furnish the houses; I keep them in repair; I furnish the animals with which the share-croppers work; I furnish the implements; I furnish them with food and clothing; and when the crop is made we divide it in half. The share-croppers are required to pay for only half the fertilizer, which represents an enormous expense with us. However, through the compensating power of nature, where we use artificial fertilization we make more per acre than where the land is rich of its own accord. The share-croppers get one-half of the crop. If there is a crop failure, which very often occurs, I have fed the tenant and his family and clothed them, furnished them a house, furnished them animals and implements with which to work and on the first day of January wiped out the account. I have all the loss to meet.

Mr. BORAH. Then all the publicity with reference to the condition of the share-cropper is without foundation.

Mr. SMITH. I said, before the Senator came in, that it was malicious propaganda; and if I cannot sustain that statement I stand guilty of making a statement as rash as the other.

Mr. BORAH. I think the Senators representing those States ought to take cognizance of the fact that such a statement is made.

Mr. SMITH. I am now taking cognizance of it.

Mr. BORAH. I think there ought to be a refutation of it, if it can be truly refuted.

Mr. SMITH. That is the reason why I said, when I took the floor, that I have read in the newspapers of the desperate condition of the share-cropper, when there is not one on my farm who, so far as the returns of the farm are concerned, is not in better condition than I, who own the farm. I am speaking from the point of view of the returns from the farm.

Mr. BORAH. Is the Senator a sample of the landlord of the South, generally speaking?

Mr. SMITH. Yes. I have some other source of income, but I deal fairly and honestly with my tenants, and a majority of the landlords do the same thing. The tenants have arrived at the point where, as a matter of fact, they have practically always been; they know how to get theirs, and they get it.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Idaho made an inquiry, and I suspect it may have been based upon a statement made by me here some weeks ago. I said that half the people on relief in North Carolina were people who had lost their places on farms, and that the number of families was 33,000. That statement was based upon official information given to me by the relief authorities in my State. I take it that was what interested the Senator from Idaho, as to the effect of the situation on the farmers in the South. I understand that the statistics of the Department of Agriculture show that prior to the operation of the Bankhead Act about 600,000 of them had not been making over two bales of cotton a year for some period in the past. That was the information I wished to put into the RECORD and give to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I wish to state, and I might as well state it now as at any other time, that up to 1929 the South was producing an average of about 14,000,000 bales of cotton a year. In 1926—and I hope those who are doing me the honor of listening will remember this—in 1926 we produced 18,000,000 bales of cotton in America. We exported that year 11,000,000 bales. We consumed 7,000,000 bales. The average price, taking into account the lowest grade and the shortest staple because it does enter into the question in valuing a sample of cotton, was 12 cents a pound. The gross return for that raw-cotton crop that year was $1,600,000,000.

In 1927 we made around 14,000,000 bales—thirteen million and some hundred thousand. The average price that year—the year succeeding the enormous crop—averaged 20 cents a pound. That crop brought about $1,300,000,000.

In 1928 we produced about 14,000,000 bales, and that crop averaged about 20 cents a pound. That brought into this country or resulted in the distribution of $1,500,000,000.

In 1928 and 1929 we had about the same crop and the same return.

From 1926 to 1931 the average importation of European money in return for exported raw cotton was $800,000,000 annually.

In 1931 and 1932 we made about a normal crop, and after the crash in October the price dropped to something like an average of 6 cents a pound, or a little below. So that, in place of an average of a billion and a half dollars a year, the value of the crop dropped to $480,000,000 for export and internal sale, a loss of $1,000,000,000 a year. As a result of the crash our exports collapsed. Up to that time we were extending credit to the European countries. In spite of the fact that we have that standing shame to the American Congress, the Smoot-Hawley Act—a monument to our folly, and a testimonial to the horrible condition in which we find ourselves—in spite of that, until the crash came we were getting $800,000,000 from abroad, besides receiving something like $700,000,000 from domestic sales, which was distributed amongst all the cotton producers. From that date until now there has been such an accumulation of unexported and unconsumed cotton that the idea was conceived that this cheap cotton should be resold to the farmer in lieu of the production by him of an equal quantity, and thereby we should get rid of the surplus by substituting what was already on hand in the form of a surplus for the subsequent year's production.

I introduced a bill to accomplish that purpose under the administration of Mr. Hoover. I had the support of the leading Members on the other side of the Chamber, but the President failed to sign the bill. There was some question as to whether or not, as he did not sign it and did not veto it, as his successor called an extraordinary session immediately following the adjournment of the last session of the old Congress, whether the present occupant of the White House had the power, the 10 days not having yet expired within which the bill might be signed, to let it become law. The President took the view that perhaps there was some doubt, and he would not risk resolving the doubt. So the bill did not become a law until the cotton of the South was planted and some of it was maturing. The farmers were told that if they would plow up or destroy a certain percentage of their crop the cheap cotton held by the Government would be substituted for the cotton the farmers would otherwise produce, and they would get the benefit of any subsequent rise in the price of cotton and would also be compensated for the cotton thus destroyed. From that day to this that surplus has hung over the cotton market. The question was whether the farmers should continue to produce cotton in volume and accept from 6 to 7 cents a pound below the cost of production or whether they should curtail their crop, receive the benefit payments from the Government, and thus wear away and at last get rid of the surplus.

We had the voluntary reduction plan, and subsequently, following the passage of what is known as the "Bankhead bill", the plan provided by that measure. The object of the Bankhead bill when passed was that there should not be put into commercial channels more than a certain amount of cotton—it being calculated that an excess beyond that amount would be added to the surplus—not enough to supply the spindles, and consequently there would have to be taken from the surplus a certain percentage. That purpose has been accomplished to a certain degree. The surplus this year is not so large as it was last year, but the surplus is still here.

Now, in answer to the question of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], I will say that it was supposed that where the tenant was restricted to the sale of two bales of cotton he also would receive a benefit payment for the land that he had heretofore cultivated, but was not now cultivating by virtue of his voluntary agreement or because of the restriction of the Bankhead Law.

Let us get that straight. There has been much talk about the landlord taking advantage of the tenant in these benefit payments and not properly distributing them to the tenants. That is also false, because, under the terms of the contract, the name of the tenant has to be inserted; when the checks are sent out they go in the name of the landlord and the tenant, and the landlord cannot get the money until the check is endorsed by both the tenant and the landlord.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, is not the Senator under a misapprehension? I understand that the two-bale exemption is allowed only to those farmers who have heretofore produced two bales or less.

Mr. SMITH. That is true.

Mr. BAILEY. So that there would be no benefits for those, because they must use the same acreage and produce the same amount of cotton.

Mr. SMITH. I did not differentiate as clearly as I should have done. The answer is that heretofore they only produced 2 bales, and it was no hardship to hold them to 2 bales without paying any benefit; but the point I am trying to make clear has reference to the share-croppers. The fault does not inhere in any act of the landlord but in the miserable system of marketing. The Government pegged at 12 cents the cotton in which it had an interest.

In spite of the fact that every dealer in cotton in America took it for granted that that was the minimum, that no matter what might happen above it the price could not go below 12 cents, certain influences stepped in, and in less than 3 hours broke the price $10 a bale. Some of them, I think unwisely—and I am going to attempt to have them rectify it by taking the cotton back—sold some of this Government-owned cotton and bought futures against it. I presume they were proceeding upon the assumption that as the Governmen had loaned 12 cents a pound they were safe in disposing of the cotton and buying futures and saving insurance and storage; but about 3 weeks ago last Monday, some influence, some power, smashed through the Government line and sent the price of cotton down to 10 cents in place of 12 cents, costing the Government some $3,000,000 in margins to protect those futures. Of course the price has risen somewhat since, and the Government will be reimbursed to the extent the market has risen; but the crop of cotton, with the restriction of the Bankhead law and the voluntary restriction, this year will amount to about 9,000,000 bales, not quite nine and a half million bales, perhaps, which is about half the production of 1926; and the price is not as much as we got for 18,000,000 bales. Here we are taking advantage of a disastrous condition brought about by unwise legislation, by antidumping laws, the Smoot-Hawley law, the Johnson law, until we have not left a crack or a crevice through which we may trade reciprocally with foreign governments. When the disaster comes, we are deflecting the minds of people into the belief that this occurred because of that infernal devil the landlord. It occurred by reason of legislation enacted here, and here is the place where they ought to seek relief.

I state here today, without fear of contradiction, that if we will make farming profitable by giving the farmers an equal chance in the markets of the world, as well as at home, it will not be necessary to bring here any kind of tenant bill or to bestow any charity amongst those who feed and clothe the Nation; but we will not solve the problem so long as we turn in the wrong direction and encourage the tenants to produce a surplus.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator was just saying that this bill puts the tenants on the land as owners, but does not improve their capacity to pay themselves out?

Mr. SMITH. As a matter of course, it does not. If there had been any profit in agriculture the tenant would have already owned his land. There is plenty for sale today—you know it, Mr. President, and I know it—at a price that is ridiculously below its intrinsic value.

Now, I wish to move on a step further. I did not desire to take up too much time. We come to the farm laborer. About 2 months ago my manager had employed a good many more laborers than he had any place for. He was not as wise as he will be when he loses all his money, which he will do if he fools with a farm long enough. He happened to inherit some money and was enthused with his temporary power. I showed him where he could get rid of his money in short order by going down and taking charge of a farm, in which event he would quickly become normal. As I have said, he employed more labor than he really ought to have employed. The Negro tenants, who are very fond of him, came to him and said, "Mr. Carpenter, we cannot live; we have wives and children", as Negroes generally have after they get beyond 16 years of age; "we just cannot get along on what you are paying us." He said, "Well, boys, I am sorry, but I will tell you there is plenty of public work going on around here, so I hear, so go out and try to secure employment in that way." He was furnishing them each with a house, fuel, and a garden plot. They went out, and in about 60 days returned and said, "We will come back to work for you for $2 a month less than you were giving us."

We have had a definition of the share-cropper. I come now to the laborer. In my State, and in the neighboring State of Georgia, we can hire laborers for so much a month, give them so many acres of land to cultivate for themselves, plant anything they see fit, furnish them the stock to work it, a house to live in, fuel to burn—no expense to them in the world, and in addition we give them wages. I do not know a single laborer in my State who has not the same opportunity to make a living at my expense, or any other landlord's expense, and make a part of the crop on the land that we always give our laborers. Their condition is just as happy and contented as is that of the share-cropper.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Has the Senator seen a report made by Mrs. Myers to the Agricultural Adjustment Administration?

Mr. SMITH. Where is she from?

Mr. BORAH. I do not know where she is from, but she was in the employ and working under the auspices of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. That report has been made and is on file, I understand, but has not been published. Is the Senator familiar with it?

Mr. SMITH. I am not. If it is like a good many reports which are made, I do not care to be familiar with it and do not want to know anything about it. I have some other way of getting the facts. Some of us in whom Senators have confidence can make statements here, and if they are contrary to the conclusions of individuals who submit special reports, our statements should be accepted. The making of these reports is in many instances disturbing the morale of our people.

Mr. BORAH. Let me be understood. Of course, if these things are true, they are exceedingly important. If they are not true, it is also exceedingly important that it be known. I understand the report is on file.

Mr. SMITH. I shall avail myself of it. If it is exaggerated along the lines that the share-crop business has been exaggerated, I shall ask Senators who are not familiar with the actual conditions to take my word for it and the word of Senators from that section of the country rather than the statements contained in such reports. If Senators who come from the agricultural districts do not know what are the facts, they ought not to be sent to the Senate, and if they do know they will testify as I have.

Mr. BORAH. I hope the Senator will procure a copy of the report. I understand it has been very difficult to obtain.

Mr. SMITH. If it is wrong it ought to be difficult to get; it ought not to have been published in the first place.

I have spoken in reference to the day laborer. The terminology which is used here, "the tenant", relates to the man who rents one's land. I have not been able to rent a farm of mine for enough to pay the upkeep, the depreciation of the buildings, cleaning out the ditches, and the taxes. I said to the county officials of Lee County, "Pay me the amount of taxes you have assessed against my farm, the amount of taxes I am called upon to pay, and I will turn my farm over to you until I retire from the Senate. I want some place to be buried when I get through, and this is the place where I prefer to be buried. Pay me the amount of the taxes for rent of my farm, and take the farm and work it and see what you can do."

If we are going to hand out any benefits, if we are going into the Government Treasury to implement the farm and guarantee it for 66 years, does not common sense dictate that we ought to start with those who have struggled with all the adverse circumstances, 75 percent of whom now have mortgages? Give to them as they have proven their ability to stay and not be dispossessed.

But what is it proposed here to do? If we take these people and put them on the land, unless marketing conditions shall improve, we will find that we shall have to support them as long as they are there, furnish them the wherewith to live as the landlord has lived, or else the whole scheme will fall through.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator again?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. If the statement the Senator has made is true, and I am not raising a question as to that, then the effect of the bill would be to enable the landlord to receive cash for the land which is sold, and at the end of the experience the tenant would be right where he is now?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly! Just look at what we did under the land-bank law.

Mr. BORAH. But the landlord would have gotten paid for his land.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; it is a pretty good thing for the landlord. I have some land I cannot sell otherwise, but I think I could dispose of it under the terms of this bill.

Let us remember our experience under the land-bank law and what happened. We provided for a period of payment of 30 or 40 years at 5-percent interest, and an amortization and interest payment. Interest and amortization were included in each payment that was to be made. Read the history of the land banks and their experience. There a man had to go and pledge his capital, namely, his trade, and yet the vast majority of them could not pay the taxes and 5-percent interest and amortization and live.

Mr. President, I take up now the question of the tenant. He rents the land. Very often he will rent the stock and all the equipment and agree to pay a certain rental. In my State and in the other States to which I have referred—and they are not very numerous—when the land is rented, the landlord is not under any obligation to furnish sustenance and clothing during the year to the tenant or renter. Under the present condition he just cannot get credit. The landlord cannot get credit to amount to anything. That is the reason why I brought up the seed-loan proposal, to enable him to get from the Government the money with which to carry on.

I leave this statement as an open challenge. I believe this is an honorable body and wants the truth. What I am asking is that we shall not take a report which may have been gathered no one knows where. Let us appoint our own investigating committee. Let us not call any witnesses to Washington. Let us go into the vicinage where it is said these atrocities are committed. Let us go there and see the situation and learn the facts.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand the report to which I have referred, it undertakes to give details and facts. I wish the Senator from South Carolina would procure the report, if possible, and give us his own version as to its truthfulness.

Mr. SMITH. I shall be delighted to do that, as it relates to the area with which I am familiar in my own State. Yes; I shall give the facts. I do not intend that any utterance I may make on this floor may ever be successfully challenged as to the facts. I am going to speak according to my knowledge.

As to the bill itself, I take this occasion to try to scotch the miserable propaganda carried on for a purpose, of course, and the purpose is not very difficult for some of us to seek and find.

I rose to denounce this propaganda insofar as it affects my section. There may be—and I do not pretend to say there is not—some aggression by certain landlords; but it lasts only 1 year because tenants are getting scarce in my State, especially since 1929. The rate paid by the P. W. A., 40 cents an hour, over $3 for 8 hours, $2.40 a day for 6 hours, is beyond what any farmer can pay unless he wants to sell his place and make a present of it to the tenant. They have flocked to the P. W. A. until it is practically impossible for a farmer to get hands on his place.

I am not complaining of that. I do not know who is going to pay these bills. I do not know. When we cannot get the cost of production for what we sell—and every Senator from the South knows that 12-cent cotton brings the farmer from 4 to 5 cents less than the actual average cost of production—that means a yearly subtraction not only in the price per pound, but, as the Senator from North Carolina indicates, a like reduction in quantity; so we have been burning the candle at both ends, reducing the quantity and reducing the price.

Before I take my seat I desire to say that several persons have said to me, "Oh, well, your condition now is so much better than it was during the midst of the depression." It is true that I get more per pound, but the number of pounds I have to sell is just about half what I had to sell before; so I do not see exactly where my condition is so wondrously changed. When we invoked this processing tax, which I did not support, I thought there would be collected from these malicious manufacturers, these blood suckers, the difference between what I got along about 1926 and the recent price; I thought it would be taken from them and given to me. I got some benefit payments, but I still am not getting 18 and 20 cents a pound for a full crop.

Mr. President, I have heard men speak about the ease of farm life and how profitable it is. Will any Senator rise up here and state how many farmers in his State made a fortune before or just after middle age and retired? In all America, how many farmers do Senators know who made a fortune farming? Do Senators indict every one of them of having less sense and business ability than the manufacturers and the industrialists, who notoriously make billions and retire and buy Government bonds and escape the payment of taxes?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator made reference to the cotton-processing tax. I do not know where the money has gone, but I know from whom it has been taken. There has been taken out of my own State, through the cotton-processing tax, approximately $2,228,000. There has been taken out of New England in excess of $34,000,000 through this tax. There was taken out of my home city from three mills, each of which operated at a deficit during the past year, $616,000.

I do not know where the money has gone; I know from whom it is being taken; I know what the cotton-processing tax is doing to the cotton-textile industry of New England. It is destroying that industry or contributing to the destruction of that industry, and it is making its contribution to the destruction of what has been in the past a rich market for the raw cotton of the South.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I am rather heart-broken. I am terribly disappointed. I had hoped that perhaps in the operation of the processing tax the miserable high protectionists such as are found around Fall River and New Bedford would be made to pay back to me some of the money it was alleged they got out of my cotton as against my having to sell it in an open market; but since the Senator has mentioned that, there is a fault somewhere.

The average cotton shirt selling at $2.50—that is what a real decent one costs, such as a Senator ought to wear; I cannot go up quite that high—or a shirt selling at an average of about $2 weighs only 5 ounces. The cloth from which that shirt is made is of the simplest manufacture that is known—just the right and left weave; no warp, no woof, simple spinning, cheap bleaching. When that cloth is manufactured into a shirt it sells for an average of $2. That is about $7 a pound that I pay for the cotton to go on my back, and I get 7 cents a pound to make it. Between the $7 a pound I pay for the cotton to go on my back and the 7 cents a pound I get there is a tremendous spread somewhere.

I am through. So far as this bill is concerned it may give temporary relief. Under its terms these tenants are to be implemented, they are to be furnished with a home and given about 60 years in which to pay for it. It almost amounts to the old English custom of primogeniture and entail, because the average life is not more than about 40 years; so the father will hand down to his child this Government gift.

I am not going to stand here now and go into that subject. I have contented myself with meeting this propaganda about the terrors of the tenant share-cropper and laborer. God help us! Many of us are pleading for high protective tariffs in order that American labor may enjoy the American wage; and yet the same industry that is pleading for a high protective tariff installs labor-saving devices and turns its labor on the street to join the blotting-paper crowd! What is protection of the machine against human beings, even if they are in Europe?

I am not going to enter into any further controversy. I am endeavoring to meet the wide-spread propaganda that has been going on in reference to labor; and there is like propaganda going on in other directions that is sapping the very foundations of our Government. God help us, as a Senate, to get back to the fundamental principles of the Constitution and think and act here in accordance with what we know are the best interests of the American people.

Mr. LEWIS obtained the floor.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield briefly?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. A moment ago I interrupted the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to express the opinion that the cotton processing tax was contributing to the industrial distress of New England. I have in my hand an editorial which appeared in the Lewiston Evening Journal, my home city newspaper, which states that 152 mills have been closed in New England within recent months. I ask that that editorial, and a list of the mills as given therein, may be included in my statement.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Lewiston (Maine) Evening Journal of Apr. 10, 1935]

A few days ago we sought a bit of information of how recovery has affected the New England textile business.

We were visited by a gentleman who sells to all New England mills textiles—woolen and cotton. He has taken pictures of nearly all of the "recovery(?)", which the past few years under the miracle men have brought us.

We were told in 1932 that by this time every mill would be running and new ones built. Instead 152 mills in New England have been abandoned, liquidated, many of them torn down. These are not old and obsolete mills. Some of them are modern and expensive. Here is a partial list, which we have received with the following letter:

DEAR MR. S: I am enclosing a partial list of mills that have either been dismantled, or dismantled and torn down to the ground, and to this list might be added some two dozen or more of worsted mills, but I am dealing more particularly with the cotton mills, and not outside of New England.

Yours truly,

———— ————, Treasurer.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. I assume that the reason why these mills are complaining is because of the fact that the Japanese and other oriental manufacturers are bringing goods into the United States, which is driving them out of the market.

Mr. WHITE. I have made no reference to that subject.

Mr. WHEELER. I was about to suggest to the Senator that if his New England mills would take a little interest in the remonetization of silver, they would find out that the reason why the oriental manufacturers are able to undersell the American manufacturers in the world market is because of the low price of silver.

Mr. WHITE. I am not going to become involved with the Senator from Montana in a controversy with respect to that matter. What I said referred only to the processing tax; that is my immediate complaint.

THE FOREIGN DEBTS—OBSERVANCE OF INTERNATIONAL UNDERTAKINGS—THE MEANING OF THE RESOLUTION PASSED BY THE COUNCIL AT GENEVA ON THE GERMAN SITUATION

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I do not rise to discuss the farm-tenant bill now under consideration. I impose upon the Senate a separate subject, which I esteem worthy of its great deliberation.

Mr. President and Senators, I am quite sure that the refined conscience of the world was greatly aroused on yesterday when it read from the International Cables that the Council of the League of Nations at Geneva, composed of the great states of Europe, each of which is indebted to the United States, had proclaimed as against Germany a resolution stating that "the nations of an international community should respect their obligations, pursue their contracts, and obey their treaties." We are invited, Mr. President, for the moment, to one quotation and its exact language:

France, Great Britain, and Italy—

Says the foreign press, as recorded particularly in the New York Tribune, the New York Times, and the Washington Post, great papers distributed at our doors—these proceed to record the words of the declaration, saying:

France, Great Britain, and Italy, in a joint resolution submitted to the League of Nations, declared here today that Germany has failed in the duty which lies upon all members of the international community to respect undertakings they have contracted.

Mr. President, in the language of the oft-expressed old Scripture, to that we may cry forth the refrain, "Selah!" and invite the attention of these who project this counsel to the fact that they are the nations who have contracts with the United States of America to pay it the money they have borrowed from the United States; that at the time they are resolving against a fellow nation in Europe that its duty lies to "respect contracts between those of an international community", there was then $11,000,000,000 due from these nations to the United States. Under one device of deception or diplomatic evasion the political officials of these nations not only have failed to pay, but they have declined even to recognize the existence of the obligation. They not only refrain from contributing anything in the form of interest on the debt, but denounce the obligation as an imposition upon them, and defame the governing officials of the United States for demanding payment of the debt.

In this resolution at Geneva there is a complete suspension of the holy order commanding "that which ye would have done unto you, do ye unto others."

Mr. President, we pause at this moment, since this declaration has come forth, to remind the world that three different gatherings of these, the nations' debtors to the United States, through their delegates assembling with the representatives of the United States, have gathered in different parts of the Continent of Europe and the United States, and as a result of negotiations a very large reduction of the debt followed. Then an agreement later was adopted by the United States which struck off the interest. Following these compacts came a new contract entered into promising to pay the debt in immediate and constant installments until it had been fully discharged—yet all defaulted in the promise.

It is interesting, therefore, in view of this declaration of the council of nations, to ask ourselves what excuse can these great nations give that in one breath they demand the fulfillment of the contract of nations existing between themselves and a foreign nation in the matter of the Versailles Treaty, or the compacts relating to the matter of disarmament or rearmament and, at the same time, by the same token, not only violate their treaty to the United States, cheat us of our debt, and refuse to pay its interest, but finally, as in the case of the great nation of England, balancing its account on day before yesterday with no mention of the obligations to the United States, England for Britain informs us that they have now brought their government to the commendable height where they balance their budget, have excess money in their treasury, and announce to the world—for praise which will be due them—the reduction of their taxes upon their fellow citizens. Yet, sirs, at the same time, in the same publicly declared budget, they make no mention even of the existence of the debt due to the United States of America, far less an indication of desire to pay or a promise of refulfillment of their treaties of indebtedness.

Mr. President, our country has no desire to press any people harshly, not even after they have harshly treated us. We have been overgenerous, with a liberality beyond precedent and without parallel, but we cannot but marvel why these great nations, standing before the world posing as the examples of national fidelity, and hurling abroad epithets against one of their rival nations as an offender against international morality, for that it has failed to keep a compact made with them, at the same moment refuse to recognize their compact with the United States, or to acknowledge the obligation of the debt which is due us on solemn contracts.

This comes at a time when our Treasury calls for us to collect whatever income may be brought to us rightfully. Our soldiers are calling for just compensation. The heavy tax burden upon us should be lightened. The great debt of maintaining our institutions is imposed and falls collectively upon us. Every dollar that is accessible to us must be secured in order to lighten the burden of our own taxpayer. We have a right to ask the debtors who owe us these vast billions to pay their debt and to keep faith, as they prescribe that internationals should always keep faith in contracts and compacts made with each other.

Mr. President, the former Under Secretary of State, Mr. Castle, has written an article, printed in last Sunday's New York Tribune, in which, as Under Secretary, he has set forth some of the history of the loans from his own official knowledge, particularly as to negotiations from time to time between ourselves and the representatives of the debtors. He calls attention to how the former President of the United States, Mr. Hoover, declined to consider any proposition looking to the cancelation of the debts, but proposed to the debtors a plan by which they should have something of a new enlargement of their obligations. This fact my eminent friend the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], who sits with us, then Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, will recall as supported by the records. The moratorium granted by the President in aid of these debtors was ratified by the Senate. All this was in aid, sir, of what he thought was the community of honor and the fidelity of peace. But despite this contract and this new avowal on the part of the debtors, they still refuse to recognize the obligation or pay even a moiety of it.

Now, Mr. President, this brings us to the important fact to which I am compelled to invite attention, with a view to asking some investigation on the part of this honorable body. An examination of the existing facts will reveal that many of the securities which were placed with the United States to secure this debt have in some form or manner under previous administrations been removed from the Treasury and are not there to be enjoyed in transfer or enforcement.

When a proposal was made by the representatives of the debtors that they combine together and in some single form of obligation entered anew be treated then as a single debtor, the then honorable Secretary of the Treasury, now the distinguished senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] declined to entertain a proposition of that order, saying that as we had contracted with these nations separately, separately they should deal with the United States.

After that, Mr. President, as Mr. Castle pointed out in his splendid article—some features of which I greatly deplore for their political prejudice—we see how we have again and again given further extensions to the debtors; that the more extensions we gave the less has been their inclination to recognize the debt and the farther and farther away has been any desire expressed by them ever to pay it completely or to adjust it in compromise.

Mr. President, I want to know what has become of those securities which were in the Treasury and behind this debt. I should like to have it ascertained by a proper source, where prejudice or partisan coloring should not serve in any form to subdue it. But I would ask more; that is, that a form of security equal to that which was abstracted be placed in the Treasury in order to represent that debt to the full completeness of its amount.

I rise at this moment to intrude myself into this particular debate that I might bring attention to the necessity pressing on us. Mr. President, if you, now presiding over the Senate, an honored ex-Governor of Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], should find that the farmers of your State are in a condition like unto that of the farmers of South Carolina, as shown by the able Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]; as the eminent leader on this side, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], has depicted as to one set of farmers in his Arkansas, and those alluded to by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], and the condition my eminent young friend the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] brought to our attention—if these are their condition, how could there be a remedy furnished so quickly to relieve them of their burden as to have the money restored to the Treasury that is due us in these vast billions which, possessed by us, we could apply to the needs of these farmers and lift the heavy burden of taxes from the shoulders of the already oppressed American citizen?

Mr. President, I have a suggestion of method of part payment. I propose it and say if these nations intend to pay us, I should like to have them express their intention as early as possible. If their intention is to repudiate their debt, I want that expressed as soon as convenient. I would that they take their place, in order that we know our exact relation to them, not only as it relates to the past but as it shall guide us for the future.

We are willing and desirous to adopt any system, even in the immediate future, which shall be as easy for these nations to bear as possibly could be consistent with our own welfare. If they will not pay the principal, will they not pay the interest? And as to one form of interest payment, I now take the liberty to make a suggestion.

There has been just mentioned around us the suggestion of reciprocity treaties of trade with all nations, such as we have already entered upon and executed, as with Cuba and Belgium and others, as are pending with other nations. I suggest that if good faith is really meant by these debtors let each of them promptly suspend all forms of tariffs or burdens or restrictions upon foreign trade of every nature as relates to the United States to the full extent that the sum which would have been collected would go to pay the interest they owe us on the debts, and credited by our Government accordingly.

Then, sir, we could send our goods to the people of these nations. We would have a market for ourselves, and to the amount of the tariff that the nations temporarily suspend and withhold from themselves, our Government could promptly charge back to the shipper—our exporter—and out of his profit obtain the amount from our own citizens. In the meantime, and as a result, our citizen becomes exempt from the tax of the foreign nation on his goods exported. The debtor nation in this manner proportionately pays its debts. In this method, sir, do we relieve it from paying cash from its treasury and give it an opportunity of favor and exemption which rarely has been paralleled in international dealings between nations for generosity of achievement.

Mr. President, I cannot sit inactive here or remain silent when I see proposed before the world the intimation from time to time that this, my land, is a Shylock—is an Uncle Shylock—that we are an oppressor of all, that we assume to levy a persecuting burden upon these when we press them to pay their debts; that it is oppression on our part. These who falsely accuse us leave the whole world and the civilized race of the young that is coming from the colleges and the homes to assume that America has lost all standard of honor and is unworthy of their friendship or the confidence of mankind. Yet in the meantime there is told to the world by certain of our debtor nations of their great fidelity to contract, and demanding compliance to themselves, but refusing to recognize such compliance from themselves to America. It is because of this that I rise and intrude myself in this debate, making mention of a situation worthy of our very serious attention and, as I would hope to believe, of the regard, investigation, and obedience of these honorable foreign nations. Whatever France and Italy or others may take as their maxim of conduct, we must recall that as to the great nation of England she stands in the beauteous foreground as defined by her poet:

> I could not love thee * * * so much,
> Lov'd I not honour more.

I would, sir, as I now conclude these observations, invite these honorable nations to realize that in order that for the future our regard for them shall not be less, our confidence in them increased, and our friendship multiplied, that they respect with us the same compact that they ask to have Germany respect with them—the fulfillment of the obligations of debt and honor.

I thank the Senate.

Mr. President, I ask that the article by former Under Secretary Castle, part of which I read and to all of which I referred, be printed in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BILBO in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

[From This Week of Apr. 14, 1935]

NEW WAR DEBTS?

IF EUROPE PLUNGES INTO THE MAD DANCE OF ANOTHER WAR, WILL UNCLE SAM AGAIN PAY THE PIPER TO THE TUNE OF $11,000,000,000 OR MORE?

(By William R. Castle, Jr., former United States Under Secretary of State)

No one with a realistic outlook any longer believes that the debts of the war of 1914 will be paid; even our politicians understand that full payment of these debts is one of the glittering promises which they can never again use to beguile their constituents. Yet we all know, as the war clouds once more gather over Europe, that if the storm should break we should again be urged to advance credits, to lend to one side or the other, or to both.

It is fortunately true that there would be no question of Government lending unless we should ourselves become involved—which God forbid. But if we did become so involved through a passionate belief that we must take part for our own salvation, we should once more advance supplies with the same ardor that we should enlist troops. We should have the same insistent questions which would have to be answered on the moment; and, unless we gave a different answer, we should find ourselves after the war with the same problems which could not be solved.

I do not think that war is coming yet, because I do not think that the world has so soon forgotten, but I must admit that there is an arrogance, an intransigence in the attitude of the powers which is deeply dangerous to peace.

This being so, it would seem to be particularly worth while to refresh our memories as to what happened, financially, during and after the last war; as to the origin of debts; as to why they will never be paid. The sudden vanishing of $11,000,000,000, even in these wonderful days when billions are tossed about like tennis balls, is a phenomenon well worth our study and understanding. This is especially true when there is even a slight possibility that we may be faced with a similar situation in the future.

Here, then, are the facts: After we entered the war we loaned to the Allies, our associates, some $8,000,000,000 to carry on, and some $3,000,000,000 more for purposes of rehabilitation after the war was ended. For the amounts advanced we took the notes of the individual nations; we did not, at the time, discuss details of repayment because it seemed to us that decent folk do not waste time discussing details with friends who are fighting for their lives.

We thought of the loans, and most of our debtors thought of them—then—as commercial credit which would be repaid at the proper time. But this sentiment changed in Europe as soon as the guns ceased to roar. It is never as hard to incur debts as to face payment. Europe forgot that our dollars had helped to prevent ultimate disaster and began to suggest that we consider our dollars as our contribution toward winning the war. After all, they said, what were our dollars as compared with their dead? All this was, at first, only a whisper running under the audible surface of discussion.

At the Peace Conference came the first official suggestion that the status of the debts might be altered. Somebody said it would be a good idea to pool all inter-governmental debts. CARTER GLASS answered for the United States with his usual common sense. He said that as we had made the loans to individual nations, we should arrange with them individually the details of repayment.

A year later Great Britain proposed that all war debts be wiped off the slate in order to boost general economic recovery. Americans were quick to see that this meant that we were to assume the entire burden; they felt that perhaps economic recovery might be even more efficiently aided if Europe would stop its orgy of extravagance, currency manipulation, and militarism; and that thus we also might share in the recovery.

Shortly thereafter—Europe being full of suggestions—the idea was advanced that the Allies pay us only what they were able to collect from Germany. President Wilson, in a letter to Mr. Lloyd George, said with some heat that the United States, which had asked for no reparations, did not propose to become the sole creditor of Germany, nor to help the Allies collect from Germany more than it was able to pay.

In spite of an undercurrent of irritation, however, the justice of the American position was generally and publicly recognized abroad. It was only after the Balfour note that emotion overwhelmed sense and that the American Government was dubbed "Uncle Shylock." In this note Mr. Balfour announced that Great Britain would seek to collect from its debtors only what it was compelled to pay out—to the United States, of course. Everyone in America considered the note unfair and many in England said it was "not sporting." There is no doubt that, to Americans, it proved that Europe was unjust and thus made concessions on the debt more difficult.

The American Treasury asked permission of Congress to fund all the debts on the best terms obtainable. Congress would have none of it, insisted on a commission with representatives of Senate and House to negotiate, prescribed period of payment and minimum rate of interest, and ordered that all agreements reached should be referred back to Congress.

The prescribed terms proved impossible, but the excellent debt commission reached agreements with practically all our debtors, so far as was possible in accord with what appeared to be their capacity to pay. To all these agreements Congress assented, and for a few years payments were duly made.

Then war's delayed aftermath, the great depression, swept over the world. Although there was no acknowledged connection between debts and reparations, there is no doubt that our debtors depended largely on German in-payments for their out-payments to us. President Hoover understood this; and when, in the spring of 1931, conditions had become so desperate in Central Europe that it was clear no more reparations could be paid for a time, he secured an agreement for a year's holiday on intergovernmental debts.

President Hoover wanted to save the principle of the sanctity of contract. He wanted the moratorium to run for 2 years at least; in this he was overruled at home. He wanted the payments falling due during the moratorium year to be added as the final installment at the end of 60 years; France would have none of this and the amounts were funded over a period of 10 years. During the meetings in Paris and London to settle details, economic conditions everywhere degenerated and the discussions as to when payments should be resumed had a hollow, academic sound.

The Allies saw the handwriting on the wall. At Lausanne they lopped off nine-tenths of the German reparation bill. Then they all demanded of Washington reconsideration of their own debts. They forgot that reparations had been imposed, that the debt funding had been voluntary. But an American election was under way, and both political parties found it expedient to demand full payment of the debts.

Before the December payments were due Mr. Hoover had been defeated, but Congress was playing politics as much after the election as before. Those were difficult, vivid, and tragic days in Washington—difficult since constructive work was almost impossible because of the conflict between the executive and the legislative branch of the Government; vivid because there were so many questions demanding solution; tragic because national good was lost sight of in the struggle for party advantage.

The President was determined to save something out of the debts due, if possible. He appealed over and over again to Mr. Roosevelt to join with him in working out some constructive plan for the sake of the American people. He urged the appointment of a commission, to be approved by the President-elect, to study the debt question and, if possible, to reach a solution before the assembling of the Economic Conference; but Mr. Roosevelt only answered that Mr. Hoover was responsible until March 4. He refused to join in a request to Congress for a new debt commission, said that discussions, which he knew to be urgent, could best be carried on through regular diplomatic channels—although he knew that no foreign government would consider it worth while to talk with an administration just going out of power.

Mr. Hoover struggled to span the gap of governmental impotence which always intervenes between election and inauguration when the new President represents the opposite political party. Mr. Roosevelt smilingly refused to catch the line that was thrown across.

All this is in the published record which some of us read at the time and most of us have forgotten. For good or ill it is a part of history. But for those of us who were in the Government never did impotence seem so complete, because never before had there been so many vital questions demanding action.

It is simple enough to say that on any debt issue the United States will never be caught again in the same way; but, made as a positive statement, this is not true. Any one of us can imagine a situation where the expenditure of billions would appear necessary to save the Nation. Nor can it be said that if the expenditure seems necessary the billions should be given outright. Sometimes the issue is not clearly enough drawn to stir Congress to such action.

In the present situation I think it can fairly be said that two things brought about repudiation of the war debts. On the part of the debtors it was lack of will to pay, induced partly by propaganda and partly by poverty. (The burden of debt payments, except for the transfer problem, was nowhere as onerous as it was made out to be.) On our own part it was politics. If the debts could have been dealt with as business men deal with private debts we should still be collecting something.

Only our own mistakes need concern us here. The mouthings of candidates for office who informed the world that one of their principal claims to the suffrage of the voters was that they would never, under any circumstances, release any one of our debtors from a single cent of their obligations was irritating. The Halls of Congress echoed with similar speeches, all of them appeals to emotion, not to common sense. The debts were thought of as the bonus is today—as good vote getters.

President Hoover asked for the reestablishment of the Debt Commission for the purpose of hearing such suggestions as our debtors might make. He pointed out to the President-elect that the debts could not be discussed alone, because nothing would then be mentioned except reduction; that they must be discussed in conjunction with other economic issues in which the world wanted American help, since this was our only lever. When these two requests were refused the death knell of war debts had been sounded.

Some nations at the time were literally unable to pay; others were bound to follow their example. Mr. Roosevelt did not realize that one default on the part of an important nation was the beginning of the end. He had been told by one of his "unofficial" emissaries in Europe that one great nation at least planned to resume payments immediately after his inauguration as a sign of good will to him.

It is impossible to think that he believed this absurd story, but it was certainly swallowed by some of his entourage. He probably really believed, on the other hand, that it would not be very difficult for him to settle the matter by talking with the leading statesmen of the debtor nations after March 4. Otherwise it is impossible to account for his unwillingness to act in conjunction with Mr. Hoover at the one moment when concerted action might have saved the day.

The speeches of candidates and of Congressmen were harmful only in that they created a bad psychology abroad. It was the bitterness of party politics which really did the damage and caused the missing of opportunities.

For example, some 3 years ago a foreigner fully qualified to speak asked me what the reaction here would be if his government offered to wipe off the debt by the immediate payment of a very substantial sum in gold and an equal amount in negotiable bonds. I took the suggestion to the President, who said that we ought to jump at the offer.

But he made inquiries and found that Congress would have none of it, that it would stand for the last penny, even if the last penny was not due for 60 years.

"I am afraid," the President said to me, "that if various nations offered cash to the full amount of the present value of their debts, and I should transmit the offer to Congress, it would be refused."

Such was the political bitterness that he was probably right. And it was just this political bitterness which made possible the defaults which occurred.

Certain aspects of the work of every government must be affected by political considerations because political parties have different political principles and ideals. This is true in the United States as well as in other nations. On the question of the war debts, however, although there was certainly disagreement among different groups of citizens, there was no disagreement between the political parties as such. It was literally a case where politics ended at the seashore.

I do not for a moment assert that there was always complete wisdom in the handling of the question by the Republicans when they were in control. But I do assert that President Hoover's stand that the debts were due us; that we ought to be willing to discuss the question at any time with any one of our debtors; that if the nations found themselves unable to pay they should be willing to give us other advantages—even if merely reduction in armament, which would have saved us money by enabling us to reduce—I maintain that this stand was sane and right and honorable.

The Democratic Party agreed to these things. I have no doubt that Mr. Roosevelt agreed, and still agrees. This being so, I feel that the refusal to cooperate to save something for the American people was a serious error of judgment on the part of the President-elect.

I feel that the intransigence of the Democratic Congress when it came to recommendations of President Hoover, motivated, as it largely was, by the desire to hurt him personally and to play party politics, constitutes an indictment of a political system which permits party to be put above country. In that light the mere loss of the amounts due on war debts shrinks to insignificance.

If we should become involved in another war and should again lend money, all the conditions I have outlined above would once more be present, but in a greatly exaggerated form. We tried to settle former debts in accord with capacity to pay; after another war this capacity would probably be nil. Common sense in consideration of the debts has been impeded by political exigencies and passions; after another war politics would be bitter beyond anything of which we dream—the horrid vituperations of the Johnsons and the Coughlins and the Longs would become the common language of political debate.

Probably, if we ever become again involved in a great war and feel that we must take sides, it would be wiser to advance what we could as insurance, demanding no return, since, if anything in this world is sure, it is that we should get no return, whatever our demands.

But it is infinitely more important to walk circumspectly so that we shall never be involved; and let us remember now that the dangers which lie all about make it essential that we regain and hold fast to all the sanities so that we may be a beacon of reason in a mad world.

ACTION OF LEAGUE OF NATIONS AGAINST GERMANY

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the League of Nations, in subservient and speedy obedience to its masters, has passed a resolution relative to the action of Germany in regard to the Treaty of Versailles.

Nothing in the history of this institution has better illustrated that it is not an independent body, serving the cause of peace or seeking to advance the cause of peace, but a spineless tool in the hands of a few nations to do whatever those nations may direct.

No effort was made toward an independent investigation or consideration; no attempt at adjusting differences looking to a better understanding. But, on the other hand, a hasty acquiescence in the plans and purposes of those who represented but one side of the controversy. This institution should no longer pretend to be an independent body seeking by independent methods to advance the cause of peace.

Mr. President, a most excellent editorial on the action of Geneva yesterday is found in the Washington Post, and I ask to have it inserted as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Thursday, Apr. 18, 1935]

BANKRUPT

In a sanctimonious resolution, which carries little hope for any fundamental improvement in the European situation, the Council of the League of Nations has formally rebuked Germany for her recent denunciation of the disarmament sections of the Treaty of Versailles.

The wording of the resolution, which declares that "Germany has failed in the duty which lies upon all members of the international community to respect undertakings which they have contracted", will make it virtually impossible for the German Government to resume its membership in the League. But the action taken at Geneva yesterday does more than block that desirable step. It also calls for the development of a policy of economic and financial sanctions "which might be applied should, in the future, a state, whether a member of the League of Nations or not, endanger peace by unilateral repudiation of its international obligations."

This, in effect, means the development of a definite anti-German alliance under the leadership of the victors in the last war. It is a tragic confirmation of the criticism of those who have maintained that the chief function of the League has always been to enforce the terms of the Versailles Treaty. It is a step toward surrounding Germany with a ring of steel which may, because of German economic weakness, for the present preserve an uneasy absence of actual hostilities. But it is the direct opposite of that policy of constructive statesmanship which would have sought to build real peace on a freely admitted equality of national rights.

Of course, the brutal, headstrong character of the Nazi Government has invited this resolution at Geneva. But few of the nations which have so piously condemned the German action of March 16 are in a position to throw stones effectively. Six countries which have defaulted on their war-debt agreements with the United States solemnly approved the resolution's statement that "it is an essential principle of the law of nations that no power can liberate itself from the engagements of a treaty nor modify the stipulations thereof unless with the consent of the other contracting parties."

One of the Council members denouncing Germany in this lofty language was Russia, which has always maintained that obligations of the czarist regime are not binding on its present government. Another condemnatory vote came from Poland, which less than a year ago unilaterally repudiated her obligations to the League in respect to minorities in her territory. Yet another rebuke to Germany came from Turkey, which shortly after the war pointed the way to Germany by forceful overthrow of the Treaty of Sèvres. Italy, so scrupulous with respect to the treaty rights of Abyssinia—a fellow member of the League—is also prominent in the parade of the Geneva pharisees. In fact, only Denmark, with a clean record on treaty observances, dissociated herself from the denunciation of the German kettle by other European pots.

The refusal of the victorious powers to regard Germany as an equal was primarily responsible for driving that country into the hands of the fanatics who now control her destiny. Confronted with a situation for which they must share the responsibility before history, the only concession of the war victors is to gild their mailed fist with a veneer of self-conscious rectitude. Nor is it to be overlooked that this portentous resolution makes no distinction between the violation of negotiated and dictated treaties.

The bankruptcy of European statesmanship was never more apparent than in the approval given this sorry declaration by the Council of the League of Nations.

FARMERS' HOME CORPORATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2367) to create the Farmers' Home Corporation, to promote more secure occupancy of farms and farm homes, to correct the economic instability resulting from some present forms of farm tenancy, to engage in rural rehabilitation, and for other purposes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I desire to return briefly to the consideration of the important and significant bill which is before the Senate for the purpose of spending $1,000,000,000 to translate tenant farmers into proprietors.

There are certain serious considerations respecting it, considerations fully worthy of the attention even of those who are whole-heartedly in sympathy with the fundamental proposition addressed by the legislation. Certainly it does credit to the humanity and the heartfulness of the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] that he should present a measure of this character. Likewise it does credit to the similar qualities in the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] that he should support it so emphatically this afternoon.

I cordially concur with the general philosophy that if we can maintain our home owners in their homes and our farm owners on their farms we have safeguarded the American fundamentals as completely as is possible. Nothing could be more important. Further, agriculture must be stabilized on a profit basis before America itself can convalesce.

But, Mr. President, let us look at a few realities before we permit our emotions in this particular instance to entirely stifle our common sense. In the first place, I am unable to make myself believe at the present moment that it is any great favor to a tenant farmer under existing circumstances to translate him into the status of a proprietor farmer. It may be conferring a liability rather than an asset upon him. At a moment when agriculture is confronting new crises day by day and we are besought upon every hand for new and needed remedies and new reliefs in behalf of the farmers of this country, the proprietor farmers of this country, I confess that I wonder whether this is a moment when it is imminently advisable to invite numerous tenant farmers to forsake whatever reliance their tenantry gives them to become proprietor farmers. We had best pull agriculture out of its hole before we launch a gigantic program to put more farmers into the hole. I am wondering whether in the face of the circumstances with which we are entirely surrounded upon the countryside it really would not be almost a necessity to furnish a pulmotor with every certificate of title under this pending prospective. That is said facetiously, and yet it is meant in deadly earnest. Many a true word is spoken in jest.

The able Senator from Alabama has indicated that this is a national problem, that this tenancy question exists in all the States of the Union in some degree or other. That is true. Yet, Mr. President, obviously the problem concentrates in a few spots. It is really localized. I do not call attention to this through any desire to inject the sectional viewpoint. I do it solely to identify the type of agriculture which probably would be chiefly involved in these new tenant relationships. For example, Mr. President, we find upon page 72 of the committee hearings that nearly 1,800,000 of the tenant farmers in the United States are concentrated in 12 Southern States. I am not dealing now in percentages, which could be, I conceive, very deceptive. I am dealing in the actual numbers of tenant farmers, and I am finding 1,800,000 of them in 12 Southern States, as compared to about 900,000 in all the rest of the Nation. The 900,000 in turn are essentially in the Wheat Belt. So the tenant-farm problem, in terms of commodities, would seem to become essentially a problem in cotton and in wheat. Perhaps we might add in corn and hogs, but fundamentally it is a cotton problem.

Mr. President, at a moment when the cotton situation certainly is utterly desperate, and when we are beset upon every hand with requests for new formulas of relief to permit the cotton farmer-proprietor himself to survive, I am wondering whether it is a great humanitarian favor to pretend to create a formula which invites the tenant to become a proprietor. I am wondering whether, after he has become a proprietor under the terms of this bill and under the helpfulness and aid of the Government, he does not immediately become a candidate in the Southland for cotton benefits, in the far West for wheat benefits, in the Middle West for corn-hog benefits, if he shall subsequently survive. In other words, I wonder whether we are not again creating more of a problem than we are solving.

So I am impressed with the fact that, no matter how much we may sympathize with the ultimate necessity for creating a large additional measure of independent individual farm ownership in our Nation—and to that objective I subscribe without reservation—I am wondering whether this is the moment to embark upon this particular bill under these particular auspices, in view of some of the other conditions to which I have referred and to which I now wish further to advert, and which it seems to me must be given consideration by the Senate before one can determine whether this measure, no matter how nobly meditated, should be passed at the present time.

Now let me tell the Senate a few of the things which, it seems to me, require the consideration of the conscientious Senator before he records himself in favor of the bill.

First, I call attention to the fact, Mr. President, that, although the recent breath-taking $4,880,000,000 relief joint resolution is less than 10 days old, here is a purpose and a proposition to use one little portion of that relief measure as a springboard for a billion-dollar supplementary adventure. I wonder whether we are proposing to use the $4,880,000,000 appropriated by the relief measure in this fashion generally?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to ask the usually fair-minded Senator if he is not aware of the fact—and I am sure he is—that the relief law, by an amendment adopted by this body, specifically authorized the transfer of funds for the purposes of the pending bill?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Exactly, Mr. President; and that is precisely what I am coming to; and the Senator's observation entirely bulwarks my conclusions, I believe, because when this $4,880,000,000 law, carrying the largest single appropriation in the history of this whole wide world, already dedicates a minimum of $500,000,000 to rural rehabilitation, I submit this $500,000,000 is enough to use in experiments in rural rehabilitation for the next 12 months, and that it is not necessary to use a portion of that $500,000,000 as a springboard for the purpose of getting a new and additional billion dollars, to be obtained through bonds guaranteed in principal and interest by the Government of the United States. Such pyramiding would be insufferable. The Treasury burden is sufficiently hazardous already.

The first proposition, therefore, that I am submitting for whatever it may be worth for the consideration of the Senate is that with $500,000,000 in the so-called "work-relief law", earmarked for rural rehabilitation and other purposes, and susceptible to be increased to nearly a billion and a half dollars under the basket clause of that law if the President so elects, we have gone far enough at the moment in providing resources for rural rehabilitation in any experiment that the President may see fit to embrace without undertaking here to create another billion-dollar liability. Somewhere this process has got to stop. The Secretary of the Treasury is not Aladdin.

Mr. President, that brings me to the second consideration which I think the Senate ought to have upon its conscience in connection with a problem of this character. This billion dollars is a billion dollars' worth of bonds guaranteed, principal and interest, by the Government of the United States. They are the full equivalent of straight United States obligations. The able Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] has collected some interesting information respecting the bonds already guaranteed by the Government, which I understand he will subsequently submit to the Senate, and I do not anticipate his argument. I simply say that, in view of the fact that we have already created at least $10,000,000,000 of contingent responsibilities upon the Federal Treasury through bonds which are guaranteed in respect to principal and interest by the Government, it is not a light contemplation to propose to add another billion dollars of contingent liability of this character. We must not fall into the easy habit of thinking that, by embracing the simple device of ordering a collateral bond issue which is guaranteed, principal and interest, by the Government, we have escaped a direct liability upon the public credit; and, Mr. President, I repeat there is an end to the burden which the public credit can bear in this connection. Let us not fool ourselves about these guaranties. No private enterprise would be permitted to ignore them as a direct liability.

I was very much surprised to be told, in response to the interrogatory which I addressed to the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] yesterday, that this fiscal phase of the bill—aye, that the bill itself had never been submitted to the Treasury Department for its opinion and that no witness from the Treasury Department had ever testified so as to give the Senate the benefit of its responsible financial judgment as to what the effect of a billion-dollar credit of this character might be as it affects the sum total of the public credit of the United States.

I think the bill might well be recommitted to the committee for the purpose of determining from the Treasury of the United States what its judgment is respecting an additional billion dollars of contingent liability at a time such as this in connection with a cause of this nature.

Mr. President, there are some other things which I think ought to have consideration before this thing shall be done. It seems to me that we are moving in an entirely too haphazard fashion to create farm-loaning agencies and farm-loaning opportunities in the United States. It may be said that this is a poor place to stop, but stop we must somewhere. I wish to illustrate to the Senate precisely what a crazy quilt the existing fabric of farm-loaning facilities in the United States is at the present time. I doubt whether many Senators realize the extent to which we have patched and padded and built on to the existing structure here and there in the haphazard development of our farm-financing program. I do not complain that we have extended these credits. I complain that they are not coordinated.

Now I ask Senators to contemplate this picture. I wish to suggest that we inspect the financial relationship to the Government of 11 typical farmers who may reside in the same section, and I desire to show to the Senate how each one of those farmers on each one of the 11 farms may be dealing with the same Federal Government on a totally different type of loaning contract and frequently with an inevitable element of discrimination involved. It is a fortunate circumstance that all 11 farmers never actually live in this juxtaposition, so that they probably all of them never gather around the same stove in the same county store and compare notes; but here is the picture, a reflection of the farm-loan facilities at present sustained by the Government of the United States in behalf of agriculture, plus that contemplated by the pending bill.

Here is the first farmer. He has obtained a loan from the Federal land bank. Originally he paid 5 percent for that loan, but now he is getting the money for 4¼ percent. His loan runs from 20 to 30 years and is made on the basis of 50 percent of the value of his farm. That is his contract with the Government. Remember, he is paying 4¼ percent for 30 years on a loan which represents not more than 50 percent of the value of his farm.

Right next to him is a farmer who is borrowing from the Land Bank Commissioners. What is his contract with the Government? He is paying 5 percent on a contract that runs from 10 to 40 years, but he may borrow on 75 percent of the value of his land. So he is that much better off than is his neighbor borrowing from the same Government to which both of them subscribe as citizens. That is farmer no. 2, with his contract with the Government of the United States.

Right next to him is a farmer who is borrowing from the Production Credit Association. I do not know whether very many Senators ever before heard of the association. The Senator from Arizona looks somewhat blank, and I concede that I myself have had to make inquiry in order to identify it. Well, here is farmer no. 3, borrowing from the Production Credit Association. He pays 5 percent for his money, and he can only have it for 12 months.

Then here is farmer no. 4. They are all borrowing from the same Government; they are all citizens of the same Government.

Farmer no. 4 has made an emergency crop and seed loan from that particular bureau in the Farm Credit Administration. He is paying 5 percent on his loan for 1 year, but he can only have up to $500. That is his relationship to his Government, and he will compare it some day with the relationship which his neighbors bear to the same Government, and will complain about the discrimination. There are four of these farmers, each one of whom has a different kind of loan contract with his Government. But we have not even started upon the census.

Here is a fifth farmer. The fifth farmer is borrowing from the Commodity Credit Corporation, also operated by the same Uncle Sam. This farmer is paying 4 percent for his money, but he is getting a grand deal out of it, because the Government recognizes as a basis of collateral corn at 45 cents a bushel and cotton at 12 cents a pound. That is farmer no. 5.

Right next to him is another farmer borrowing from the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation, which is now in process of liquidation, but which has large loans outstanding. He is paying 6½ percent for his money to the same Government, and he is a common citizen with all his neighbors.

Here is a seventh farmer. He is living on a subsistence homestead. He gets his money for 3 percent, although he must have an income of approximately $60 to $100 a month before he can make the loan in the first place and get his subsistence homestead. He is the seventh farmer in this community relying for his loan values upon the Government of the United States, each one of the seven with a different kind of contract, a different rate of interest, a different maturity, and a different basis of collateral for the money he is borrowing.

Right next to these seven farmers is a cooperative farming institution which is borrowing from the same Government under the Marketing Act of 1929, and getting its money as low as one-half of 1 percent. That makes eight farm-loan contracts, all different, running between the Government and the citizen.

It is now proposed to add another. We are going to have a ninth kind of contract for lending money by the Government to the farmer. The ninth farmer is going to borrow from the new Farm Home Corporation and is going to get the money for around 3 percent, but he can get 100 percent of the value of the farm and all its equipment when he makes the loan, so he is better off than any of the other farmers in the other eight sectors of the lending policy of the Government which I have related. But here are nine farmers each borrowing from the same Government on a different kind of contract, with different maturities, different bases of collateral, different rates of interest.

There are two other farmers in this same sector, this cross-sectional typical sector which we are discussing. They are worthy of more consideration than they ordinarily receive. One of them is just an old-fashioned American farmer who is still paying his own bills, still relying on his own resources, and still attending to his own problems for himself. What are his loan facilities? If he has a loan he has probably been able to borrow about 40 percent of the value of his farm and is probably paying 6 or 7 or 8 or 9 percent for the money. He is the worst off of all the farmers we have been discussing, because he is the only one who is not relying upon the Government for his borrowed money.

There is yet one more farmer in this typical group. He is the farmer who has not mortgaged his farm at all. He still owns it without a shadow upon its title. I venture to say, Mr. President, you will be somewhat amazed to discover how many American farms still enjoy this splendid status.

It is perfectly proper and appropriate that we should concentrate our time and thought and sympathy and attention upon these sectors of the farm community which are distressed and which do need relief; yet I sometimes wonder whether we do not become so concentrated upon the farmer who is in trouble that we forget to remember the farmer who is not in trouble at all, also so concentrated upon the workmen who are out of a job—12,000,000 of them—that we totally forget to remember there are 30,000,000 or 40,000,000 others who are gainfully employed. I sometimes wonder whether we do not make the gross mistake of applying our facilities of relief, of building our system of service, to fit the minority which is in trouble, forgetting the majority which still paddles its own canoe.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ADAMS in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. I think the Senator suggested some eight methods by which the farmer can get into debt. It seems to be the effort always to get him into debt. I wonder if anything much has been done to help the farmer out of debt?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Precisely. We are now proposing to make it nine ways to get him into debt at a moment when it is almost impossible for him to survive in the face of his situation without any debt burden added to it.

I was saying that I think you will be surprised, Mr. President, to discover what a large sector of American agriculture is still absolutely free from debt. I think Senators will find the figures somewhat encouraging. I did. I asked Mr. Secretary Wallace for the authentic information. He told me that 51.7 percent of the farms in the United States today are absolutely still free of any mortgage whatsoever; that 6.3 percent of the farms are unknown in their status; that the definitely known mortgage sector of agriculture is 42 percent.

That last figure is bad enough. It does represent a progressive increase in the mortgage sector over the previous year. It is a field of service in which the Government of the United States appropriately enters whenever it can be of real service. But I wish to repeat that it ought to be refreshing news to the Senate and the country, in the midst of all the consultations of calamity which we necessarily must pursue in connection with our public work, to know that yet today nearly 52 percent of the farms in the United States have not one penny of mortgage debt upon them whatsoever. Here, in this bill, we are proposing to subject these farmers to a new type of subsidized competition. Shall we not take some care lest we drive our debt-free farmers into new collapse?

Mr. President, it is no just criticism of this particular bill to complain against the whole hodge-podge of agricultural lending facilities which I have been disclosing to the Senate. It is applicable to the present argument only in that we are proposing once more to add one additional patch to the system without any relationship whatsoever to consistency with the balance of the system.

That is not all. I invite attention to the fact that according to the report of Governor Myers of the Farm Credit Administration, on April 16, 1935, the sum total of Government credit through all the rest of these existing farm loans and facilities, the whole thing all put together in respect to all of the other facilities, many of which have been in operation for many years—the sum total of Government credit outstanding in connection with all of them is only $3,054,000,000. While we have put $3,000,000,000 at the service of six million or seven million farmers in the United States, and have met their fundamental demands—all the farm ownership of the Nation which has needed service provided with $3,000,000,000, it is proposed in this bill to create sources of $1,000,000,000 and more—better than one-half of the resources dedicated to all the rest of the farm population—for the tenant problem alone.

This inevitably brings me back to the point at which I started, namely, that when the $4,880,000,000 measure earmarks a minimum of $500,000,000 for rural rehabilitation—an item under which everything contemplated in the pending bill can be done—I submit that for the time being we have pledged enough of the public credit to this particular venture; yea, we have pledged all of the public credit that the adventure itself requires, and we probably have pledged more of the public credit than should have been pledged under any circumstances.

Mr. President, these are just some of the things that occur to me in the study of this bill—things to which it seems to me the Senate of the United States must give consideration before it votes this particular enterprise into the statutes.

I realize that it is a purely optional program which the able Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is suggesting. Nothing is going to happen under this program unless the President decides to detour a portion of the $4,880,000,000 to capitalize the Corporation, and then after that nothing is going to happen unless the Secretary of the Treasury is willing to release the privilege of putting out a billion dollars' worth of guaranteed bonds, interest, and principal. Of course there might be a hiatus in that situation. The Chief Executive might set up the Farm Home Corporation, he might get it all organized and all the members appointed and all the staff created, and then the Secretary of the Treasury might say, "Well, it will not be opportune for about 2 years for me to release to you the right to finance the thing that you are organized to do." That would not disappoint the gentlemen who were part of the organization, but it would disappoint the tenants who contemplate some speedy relief from this program.

I desire to say again that the Senator from Alabama renders a real service when he brings the problem of the tenant farmer into a picture where heretofore he has apparently been ignored. I listened to him as he read upon yesterday the very poignant poem which was written to him by one of these cotton tenant farmers in the South. It was a very moving exhibit, and I can understand the Senator's earnestness and zeal in attempting to find an answer to that sort of a necessity—an utterly human necessity and a human challenge. But, Mr. President, I wish I had brought with me a letter that came to my office this morning from a mechanic in the city of Belding, Mich., who wrote me in equally moving terms that if there was only some way in which he could borrow enough money to equip himself with a set of carpenter's tools there were enough odd jobs in town to keep him occupied the rest of the year, and he was sure he could support himself. But there are not any provisions here for loans for the mechanic. There are not any provisions for loans to any individuals in any such sense of the term as is contemplated by this bill—loans that are completely to create the business capital for the individual. There are no provisions for pay-roll loans to industry, the most useful field of all.

I submit, as a matter of fundamental equity, that if we are going to embark upon the policy contemplated in this bill—the policy of providing the complete capital account to turn the tenant farmer into a proprietor farmer—then we are called upon in consistency to continue with the same policy, and extend precisely kindred aid in all the industrial communities of this country and everywhere else that any individual, whether he be a share-cropper or a tenant, or anything else, may seek similar aid in order to start himself again in the battle of life.

So it seems to me, I repeat, that there are many considerations which must be put to the conscience of the Senate before the final roll is called on this bill; many considerations other than our feelings of complete sympathy with the tenant-farm problem and our complete desire to be of some service in connection with it.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, in conjunction with my remarks, two tables.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[1] These data represent outstanding loans to and discounts for production credit associations by the Federal intermediate credit banks.

[2] Some of the loans of the regional agricultural credit corporations and most of the loans of the production credit associations are discounted with the Federal intermediate credit banks for a total amount of $103,360,236 outstanding Feb. 28, 1935. Therefore, in obtaining the total in column 8, adjustment is made to avoid duplication. Loans are not necessarily, however, discounted in the same month in which credit is originally extended.

[3] In addition there were Land Bank Commissioner loans to joint-stock land banks outstanding in the amount of $464,824.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] speaks of this proposed legislation as the beginning of a process. I differ from him in this respect: It is somewhere near the culmination of a process which began in 1932, and which will not end, which cannot be ended, prior to the inevitable culmination.

While the Senator was speaking my thoughts went back to an ancient book which I found out yonder in the library, and I intend to read from it a brief story of an ancient depression:

And Joseph gathered up all the money that was found in the land of Egypt, and in the land of Canaan, for the corn which they bought: and Joseph brought the money into Pharaoh's house.

And when the money failed in the land of Egypt, and in the land of Canaan, all the Egyptians came unto Joseph, and said, Give us bread: for why should we die in thy presence? for the money faileth.

And Joseph said, Give your cattle; and I will give you for your cattle, if money fail.

And they brought their cattle unto Joseph: and Joseph gave them bread in exchange for horses, and for the flocks, and for the cattle of the herds, and for the asses: and he fed them with bread for all their cattle for that year.

When that year was ended, they came unto him the second year, and said unto him, We will not hide it from my lord, how that our money is spent; my lord also hath our herds of cattle; there is not aught left in the sight of my lord, but our bodies, and our lands:

Wherefore shall we die before thine eyes, both we and our land? buy us and our land for bread, and we and our land will be servants unto Pharaoh: and give us seed, that we may live, and not die, that the land be not desolate.

And Joseph bought all the land of Egypt for Pharaoh; for the Egyptians sold every man his field, because the famine prevailed over them: so the land became Pharaoh's.

And as for the people, he removed them to cities from one end of the borders of Egypt even to the other end thereof.

* * * * * * *

Then Joseph said unto the people, Behold, I have bought you this day and your land for Pharaoh: lo, here is seed for you, and ye shall sow the land.

That process began in the United States of America with the passage in 1932 of the act called the "Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act." The business men, the banks, the insurance companies came to the Government and said, "You have money and we have none. We will make you mortgages; let us have money", and we did. From that day to this, Mr. President, we have been in the process of taking up to the Treasury one group after another of the American people. They have been selling us their land and their houses and their chattels. We have been pouring out money. We have now come to the point where we propose to take over the lands throughout the agricultural sections, pouring out the borrowed money of our Government for the purpose. If they fail to pay, we take the land; and when their lands are exhausted, if we follow the orderly series of events laid down in the old book of Genesis, if we go through the process which I think is indicated there by way of warning to governments and to men, we shall reach the final stage where we shall own the lands; we shall own everything they have. The proposition then will be whether we shall buy the people or whether they shall sell us out. The difference is that Joseph was dealing with Pharoah, who was an absolute monarch, but the Congress is dealing with the American people, and they are the sovereigns.

There is the culmination; but how can we resist the tide, having once started it?

How can we save the mill dam once we have cut a sluice across it and the water begins to pour over?

It is my judgment, Mr. President, that we are going all the way through the process until we have drained the Government of the last penny of its credit and gathered ourselves together, and the children who come after us will profit by our bitter experience.

I brought this matter forward only because I wanted it to be seen that we are not without a warning, not without a precedent, and not without a lesson; but I fear very much we are altogether without a remedy?

We cannot resist. If we resist here, what answer can we make to these people when they say, "You saved the railroads; why not save us? You saved the banks; how can you deny human beings?"

I fear, Mr. President, that we are the victims of our own precedent, wrought by our own policy, and not in this year, and not in the last, but in the year 1932, when we yielded to circumstances and demands which we felt we could not resist, and when, yielding, we did not seem to foresee that we had built a fire—if I may change my figure—which could not be quenched and which would cease to burn only when it itself had burnt itself out. So much for that.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] asked a question just now which I wish to answer. He spoke of the processing tax and mentioned how much of the tax the State of Maine had paid, and then asked to whom these taxes were going. I have here the data. South Carolina has paid in processing taxes $25,278,499.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ADAMS in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator will allow me to correct him, I did not ask where the money had gone. I was not so much concerned with that as I was concerned with those from whom some of it had been taken. I neither asked the question, nor did I undertake to answer it.

Mr. BAILEY. I accept the correction, but I wish it to be known just who has paid the taxes and where they have gone.

South Carolina has paid $25,278,499 in processing taxes. She got back for her farmers $10,395,156. So South Carolina did not get the money. She paid out two and one-half times as much as she got back.

Georgia paid in processing taxes $24,924,219. Georgia got back $16,085,856.

North Carolina paid in processing taxes $35,247,419 and got back only $7,090,603. Five times 7 is 35. We lost four-fifths of what we paid.

Virginia paid $3,098,073, and Virginia got back $349,124, or something less than 10 percent.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. For the Senator's information, I will state that I put into the RECORD today a letter from Mr. Sloan, who was formerly head of the Cotton Textile Institute and is now chairman of the Cotton Code Authority, who stated that the cotton-cloth industry and paid into the Treasury in 20 months under the processing taxes $185,000,000, which was 40 percent of all the money paid to employees during that period.

Mr. BAILEY. I thank the Senator. Where did the money go? The money went to the cotton farmers throughout the South, throughout the Cotton Belt; and, without meaning to offend anyone, but meaning only to tell the truth, I state that the processing taxes collected in North and South Carolina, Georgia, Virginia, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island went to Texas, Mississippi, Alabama, Arkansas, and Oklahoma. All I am doing here is just telling the truth about the matter. I think the facts ought to be known. It happens that North Carolina is a manufacturing State as well as a cotton-raising State, and that South Carolina is a manufacturing State and likewise a cotton-producing State; but the money is distributed over the entire belt. That answers that question.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. I would like to suggest that, according to some of the latest statistics on the processing tax, there has been a tremendous increase during the last 6 months in the processing tax on tobacco, until it amounts to $48,000,000. My recollection is that the benefits paid back to the tobacco producers has been less than a million dollars. So there is a surplus there which undoubtedly is in the Treasury.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not have the figures about that, but the benefits are more than a million dollars. I was addressing myself mainly to the question of cotton, and sent to my office to get only the data as to cotton.

Let us look again and see where the money is going in the United States.

Pennsylvania and New York, two States, get in relief money three-fourths as much as all the 13 Southern States. If we go to the basis of population, there are twenty-one or twenty-two million people in New York and Pennsylvania, and there are 32,000,000 people in the Southern States, but the two States get three-fourths as much as all the Southern States together.

Let us look a little further into this question of distribution; and this is of the utmost importance. When a great Government like this begins to spend money as this Government is spending money, it can destroy a State by inequality in the distribution. It was written into the Constitution that direct taxes should be apportioned amongst the States according to population, in order to prevent an economic disbalance in the distribution of public money.

Let us look at the figures of relief for December 1934, January 1935, and February 1935, the last 3 months ending March 1. In those 3 months the average per family paid from the Treasury of the United States for direct relief in the State of Illinois was $29.86, and in New York it was $52.83; in Pennsylvania it was $48.76, and in North Carolina it was $16.58—more than three times as much paid per family on relief in New York as in the State of North Carolina.

It occurs to me that if we are to relieve a family, the cost of relief in North Carolina would be fully equal to the cost of relief in the State of New York. Just how this disparity has been brought about I have not been able to ascertain.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I am wondering whether the figures show how many there were in the families. It is possible that the families were larger in the State of New York than in the State of North Carolina.

Mr. BAILEY. I have no statistics as to the number in the families, but I know the average in the United States is 4.2 individuals to the family, and I take it that the size of a family in North Carolina would be larger than the size of a family in New York, in which event the inequality is all the greater; but I am not sure about that.

Mr. WHEELER. I was rather surprised at the figures given by the Senator, and that is why I suggested that the families in North Carolina or South Carolina, whichever the Senator quoted, must have been smaller than those in New York, because it is inconceivable to me that there should be such a disparity.

Mr. BAILEY. I may say to the Senator that I think North Carolina leads the Nation in birth rate, and we have a death rate which compares favorably with the balance of the Union, so I judge our families are above the average in number.

Let us take the expenditures for relief per capita. These are not the figures as to the families getting relief; these are the figures as to relief in relation to population.

Our Government expends for relief in Illinois, per capita, $18.15; in New York, $20.56; Pennsylvania, $20.05. And North Carolina, $8.78. I confess I cannot understand that. I cannot understand by what process the Federal Government conceives that it can help the broken beings in the Commonwealth of North Carolina on 50 cents a day and the broken human beings in New York on $1.50 a day.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Is it not possible that the cost of living in New York is much greater than it would be in North Carolina, and is not accounted for perhaps because a large portion of the population is Negroes, whereas in New York and in some of the other States that is not true?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, there may be some difference in the cost of living, but it could not be at the rate of even 50 percent more, and in the case I have referred to the payments are 300 percent more. One dollar and fifty cents against 50 cents. I wish to make this remark about that. I have looked into it in my State and in my home city. I asked a teacher in the city school in my neighborhood on last Sunday evening how many children there were in the grade which she taught whose parents were upon relief. She said, "More than one-third." I said, "Have you looked into it to find what they get?" She said, "They have to live on 50 cents a week."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. A large portion of this money, which should go to the people who are getting 50 cents, stops on its way by reason of the very heavy administrative expenditure.

Mr. BAILEY. I have no doubt that the Senator is right. But why should it stop more on the way to North Carolina than it does on the way to Pennsylvania?

Mr. BORAH. I imagine that they are more expert in Pennsylvania in getting men on the administrative pay roll.

Mr. BAILEY. They are more expert at some things. But I am calling the attention of the Senate and, I hope, of the authorities who are responsible for this distribution to the facts, which have given me a very great deal of pain and which have tended to arouse in my breast a great deal of what I would call "righteous indignation." A man who could not shed tears or who would not shed tears over the plight of the little girl who had only 50 cents a week upon which to live—that sort of man does not deserve the name of man.

Here are the facts about the distribution. New York State alone got Federal funds of $150,000,000; Pennsylvania, $105,000,000; North Carolina, with 3,170,000 people, got $13,000,000. I suggest that Senators look up the facts. They will be just as greatly amazed as I was when they get these figures. When I got them I was so amazed that I took great pains to check them. I got the census figures and the figures relating to relief furnished by the Federal Relief Administration, and I have figures here of revenue, which I will not use, which I got from the Office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, the Senator ought to remember that some of the people in the present administration who administer relief funds think in terms of New York; not in terms of North Carolina and Montana.

Mr. BAILEY. I thank the Senator for the suggestion, but, if God gives me power, they are not going to think in terms of New York. I do not think in terms of North Carolina. It is their duty and it is your duty and it is my duty always to think in terms of the national interest and bring these matters forward in terms of the national interest. Injustice affects the national interest wherever it occurs. No nation can live which does injustice. No nation can die which rests its foundations upon justice.

I want to make this remark further: These big appropriations, this one billion in the instant bill, the $4,880,000,000 in the bill that we passed just recently, are not caught out of thin air. Every dollar of it that is ever paid—and as honest men we have in contemplation that it shall be paid—will be paid by the workers of America who create the national wealth. It is a toll upon labor. It is a toll upon the farmer. It is a toll upon commerce. Since my State of North Carolina constitutes one-fortieth of the population—Senators can make the calculations for their own States—I consider that at least one-fortieth of the public funds ought to be distributed in North Carolina. I am confronted with the fact that unless there is a reasonably equitable distribution of these immense funds the States which are the victims of the inequality will hopelessly go broke. In that sense a man has a duty of comparing the situation of his State with the situation of the Union as a whole.

These figures have greatly alarmed me, Mr. President, and I felt that it was my duty to bring them to the attention of the Senate, and in order not to dwell upon them longer I ask that there be printed at the end of my remarks an editorial from the Asheville Citizen entitled "Where the Big Money Goes"; and I suggest to my associates here that they investigate, as I have, and just see how the money is going.

Talk about the concentration of wealth. Let us see whether this money is not being concentrated. I think Senators will find the evidences here that it is.

Now, as to the other matter. There was a very interesting discussion here this morning on the subject of the tenant farmers in light of the legislation which is proposed. The tenant system in the South, Mr. President, is an outgrowth of the Civil War. There was very little of tenantry below Mason and Dixon line until the surrender at Appomattox and the freeing of the Negroes. The landowners in the South were confronted with an utterly new situation. Here was a great mass of ex-slaves who had been freed and who had nothing. There was a great number of landowners who had once owned slaves and who had now nothing except the land. The slaves needed a basis of livelihood, and the landowners needed workmen. The slaves had nothing on which to live. They had no land, they had no supplies, and they did not in those days have a Government which would lend them money. So a bargain was struck. Senators can find that history in the papers of Judge Ruffin, of our State, printed by the State. A bargain was struck to this effect—that the Negroes could go back on the plantations, be supported by their former masters, cultivate the crop for the year, and divide the proceeds with the master either on the one-third basis or the one-half basis.

That was the foundation of the tenancy in the South. We might have gotten along with that. But look at the facts. Beginning with that foundation there has been a slowly rising tide of tenancy in every Southern State from 1865 until the present time, and now in Arkansas 63 percent of all the farms are occupied by tenants. In Louisiana 66 percent of all the farms are occupied by tenants. In Texas 60 percent of all the farms are occupied by tenants. In North Carolina 49 percent of all the farms are occupied by tenants. In South Carolina 65 percent are occupied by tenants. In Georgia 68 percent are occupied by tenants.

To make a quick estimate, the tenancy in States comprising the old South runs around the figure 60 percent. The tenancy in the remainder of the Nation runs somewhere around 25 to 30 percent, running as low as 16 percent in California and as high as 44 percent in South Dakota.

We began in 1865 with very few tenants of the white class. Practically all the ex-slaves who did not go to the little towns to labor became tenants. But the same circumstances which caught the ex-slave have worked during these 70 years to enmesh and sink into a hopeless tenancy the white farmer. In Kentucky 33⅓ percent of the farms operated by tenants are operated by white tenants; in Tennessee, 35 percent; in Mississippi, 20 percent; in Arkansas, 34 percent; in Oklahoma, a comparatively new State, 54 percent; in North Carolina, 28 percent; in South Carolina, 26 percent. These percentages indicate the percentage of white tenants in the tenancy system.

It so happens I investigated these facts as far back as 1920. I discovered then and printed a pamphlet showing the fact that the percentage of white tenancy in North Carolina was constantly rising. I read in my home paper within the last 4 weeks the statement by a newspaper writer of considerable note that in the county in which he lived no man had escaped tenancy in 20 years; that if he ever got into it he never got out.

There is a great social problem. There is the heart of the most serious situation the Southern people know. I am going to devote my attention to it for a moment.

I agree with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] that there is no blame to be attached to the landowner. I think when the Negro came out of slavery, looking for that security which he had enjoyed before the emancipation, his first impulse was to gather around the landowner and the old master. He found there what he prized above all things, far above land ownership. He found security. He spent the proceeds of his year's labor at Christmas. The landlord entered into a contract to give him the means of subsistence for the year in January—no rich fare, I will agree, but bread and meat, clothing, molasses, sugar, coffee, some chickens, and a garden. He had a security beyond that which this Government, with all its security measures, will ever be able to give the inhabitants of the country. He rested secure. He never broke. If anybody broke, it was the landlord.

When it came to the end of the year, if he owed money it was marked off the books, as a rule, and he started again. He owed no debts except to the landlord. The landlord would go to the time merchant or the bank and run the farm and maintain the tenant. The tenant slept not under his own vine and fig tree, it is true, but under conditions in which he knew that whatever the day brought forth or whatever the harvest might be there would be a roof over his head, clothing upon his back, fire in the fireplace, and food to eat.

Perhaps that sort of security became too attractive. They saw the masters fail. They saw the owners of the land sold out, but they were not sold out. They saw disaster come, but disaster did not strike them. However, we have reached the point in the South where there is no such security as that. The time merchant has gone. There are just a few left. The depression of 1921 and the present depression have wiped them out. Then the necessities of what we call crop control and curtailment have driven, according to the statistics of my State, 33,000 farmers off the farms, 120,000 people. They are on relief, and relief means 50 cents per head per week. Divide 50 by 7 and we get 7 cents a day. When they hear that in other States the relief is three times that much, there will be a reckoning.

They have in their breasts precisely the same character that every other American citizen has. They have in their hearts the impulse for righteousness and for business as irresistible as that which lives within the hearts of any other people. The fact that they are poor and broke does not destroy their capacity for justice and their demand for justice.

Coming to the pending bill, there is nothing in sight with respect to the bill which gives any hope to the tenant. He can buy the land, but, in the name of God, with what money shall he pay for it? He can contract the debt with the Government, but if 70 years of southern agriculture have doomed him to penury, what are we doing to enable him to get out merely by way of contracting a debt to the Government?

There must be something more than that in this situation.

I am agreeing now with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. Our southern problem of agriculture is not different from the problem in the West or the Northwest. Here is the difficulty about that: Industrial income in the United States in 20 years has multiplied by 600 percent, while agricultural income has gone up only 60 percent in the same period. Here are the facts:

In 1929—the year of the largest national income in the history of this or any other nation, a national income of $82,000,000,000—the farmers, constituting 25 percent of the population, received only 10 percent of that income. I have often said, as I have studied those statistics, that that simple fact—30,000,000 people, one-fourth of the Nation, receiving only 10 percent of the national income—was enough to destroy the economic structure. If there had been no other wrongdoing, that was sufficient wrong. If there had been no other disbalance, that was sufficient disbalance.

I have not the fears about this bill that other Senators seem to have. I should like to think that by some magic like this we could take hold of 600,000 tenant farmers in the South who are allowed to produce but two bales of cotton and lift them up. Here are the facts: Two bales of cotton means, at the utmost, counting the seed, a profit of not over $20 a bale. That is a money income of $40 a year. I should like to feel that I have discovered the means of taking by the hand those 600,000 cotton farmers and giving them hope; but what is the use of lending money to a human being who makes only two bales of cotton a year, and $40 net is all he gets for it?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Has the Senator any expectation of a larger permission, or a permission for increasing the production beyond two bales, under the present policy of the A. A. A.? My understanding is that the contention still is made that there is too great a production of agricultural products, including cotton; and, of course, with the limitations which are being imposed upon agricultural production, obviously the production will grow less, and, therefore, the purchasing power of the farmer, though artificial efforts will be made to increase the price, must necessarily be less. If we make these loans with the certainty that the production of cotton is to be further restricted, how are the croppers, the tenant farmers, to repay them?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah has presented in just a few words the heart of the gravest problem which the southern people have confronted since the declaration of war in 1861. The problem he has presented is, after all, making due allowances for the difference between the tenant system in the South at the point 60 and the tenant system in the West at the point 30, identical. I think I shall have served some purpose here today, Mr. President, if I call attention to the fact that the problem of the farmer in America is not the problem of lending him money. Lending money is about the poorest way I know to solve any problem, and borrowing money is the worst. The man who borrows day after day is doomed to bankruptcy and to ruin.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, one of the wisest men we have had in the Senate since I have been here was former Senator Johnson, of Minnesota, a farmer, elected by the Farmer-Labor Party. When we were rushing through legislation to induce the farmers to borrow more money and go further into debt, he stood on the floor upon the other side of the aisle and begged us for God's sake not to extend further credit, "Because," he said, "you are ruining the farmers, and you will bring us all to destruction."

Mr. BAILEY. I think the main obstacle to recovery in our land is the great debt that stands in front of us all the time. I estimated it here about a year ago at $200,000,000,000, on the basis of the reports of the Alexander Hamilton Institute. I remember that the Senator from Oklahoma asked me for my authority. If debt brought that condition upon us, and if debt stands in our way, how in the name of reason is more debt going to get us out of that condition?

There is a little reason in the idea of the socialization of debts. Bankruptcy does that, and bank receiverships do that; but when we take the debt and pile it upon the Government and the taxpayers, we reach the point where we talk about thirty-two to thirty-three billions of public debt without the slightest impression of what it means to us or those who come after us, and who have some right to a fair inheritance at our hands. I received a good inheritance, not in property but in our Government. I should like to have my children receive as good a one as I did here in this land. If we pile debt up in that way, how do we argue to ourselves that we are doing anything by way of deliverance?

Mr. President, I do not profess to be able to measure up to so great a task. I do profess a great faith that once we lay our hands upon the realities, and drive at a reasonably calculated course in view of what we know the trouble is, we can make progress. This idea of debt, and throwing tubs to the whales, is merely an idea of postponing the day of reckoning. The idea of refusing to do that sort of thing, and driving at the problem as it is, is at least having the courage to face the realities and the will for constructive measures.

I state my conception of the matter: If we can find some way whereby we can get the farm income of America above the present 10 percent and in the direction of a fair ratio to the population, we shall not have to lend money to farmers. They will be lending money to the Government in case of need; and we shall not have a tenant problem, for they will be buying land.

Mr. President, that is about all I have to say at this time. I wish to call especial attention to this matter of the distribution of the public money. I think it a matter of the utmost moment and of the gravest concern to those States which are not receiving portions of the public money in the ratio of their population to the total population. I am not asking that it be distributed according to taxes, but in the ratio of population.

So far as the measure we have before us is concerned, I think it does not offer anything of a substantial hope to the great mass of tenant farmers. Under it they might borrow from the Government at a lower rate of interest than they now pay; they would have a longer time in which to pay;

but I know, and I think every man in this Chamber knows, that a farmer who is allowed to produce only 2 bales of cotton tax free will never pay any debts, will never buy any land; and, according to the latest statement, there are 600,000 of them, about half of the tenant population in cotton farming. The President said at Warm Springs that he calculated the number at 700,000. This indicates that one-third of the farmer population of the South is limited to two bales of cotton a year tax free.

I would like to have the farmers of my own State feel that we are moving more substantially, more reasonably, not in the direction of going into debt, but toward a means of enabling the farmers to pay themselves out of debt.

Mr. President, I send to the desk the editorial from the Asheville Citizen and the table showing relief payments, to which I have referred, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial and the table were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Asheville Citizen]

WHERE THE BIG MONEY GOES

A good deal is being said in the newspapers about the fact that apparently in most of the Southern States practically all of the relief costs last year were borne by the Federal Government.

In a number of States from a third to upward of half of the total relief costs were borne by the States and communities.

On its face it would seem to be a bad showing which is made by North Carolina and some other Southern States in comparison.

Note, however, on the other hand, that of the total $1,069,000,000 spent by the Federal Government for relief, only about $200,000,000 was spent in Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia.

New York State alone got $152,345,220 of Federal funds.

Pennsylvania received $105,761,449 of Federal funds, and Illinois $72,280,869.

New York and Pennsylvania together got $50,000,000 more of Federal funds than the entire South received.

Illinois, with $72,000,000; California, with $48,000,000; Michigan, with $41,000,000; New Jersey, with $42,000,000; and Massachusetts, with $40,000,000 of Federal funds, got as much as the 13 Southern States named above.

One-half of all the Federal funds were expended last year in seven States. Those States were New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, California, Michigan, New Jersey, and Massachusetts.

There is a bigger question in this relief business than the question of the percentage of the total relief burden which is borne by or within the States.

That bigger question is the question of where the Federal money goes.

North Carolina, with 3,170,000 people, got $13,803,486 of Federal funds last year.

New York, with 12,600,000 people, got $152,345,000 of Federal funds.

In other words, although New York has less than four times as many people as North Carolina, it obtained 11 times as much Federal money for relief in 1934.

Here is a situation which calls for far more thought than it has been accorded.

There are approximately 34,000,000 people in the 13 Southern States named earlier in this article.

One State, New York, got three-fourths as much Federal relief money during 1934 as did 13 Southern States.

What boots it that the 13 Southern States are credited with having used only about $25,000,000 of their own money for relief, while New York and its various subdivisions are credited with having expended $122,000,000 in relief, in addition to the $152,345,000 that State got from Washington?

The vital fact is the fact that New York, with 12,600,000 people, got 75 cents out of the Federal Treasury for this one purpose for every dollar that the 13 Southern States, with their 34,000,000 people, got.

New York, on a population basis, got more than $12 per capita from Washington for Federal relief.

The 13 Southern States, on a per capita basis, got less than $6 per capita from Washington for Federal relief.

In other words, for every dollar of relief money that the South is getting out of the Federal Treasury, New York is getting more than $2.

The Citizen has said repeatedly that when it came to grabbing dollars from the public till at Washington, it was hopeless for any Southern State to think that it could do an expert job. We were bound to find ourselves outclassed and to get the small end of it.

But that is not all. Apparently it cost $274,402,000, funds from all sources, to take care of the relief situation in New York last year. Apparently it cost $146,271,000 to do this job in Pennsylvania.

Total relief expenditures in North Carolina, as listed by the Relief Administration, were $13,992,000.

There are only three times as many people in Pennsylvania as in North Carolina, but the relief burden in Pennsylvania was 10 times as great.

Suppose there had been no Federal relief, what would have been the situation in New York, in Pennsylvania, in Illinois, in Michigan, in North Carolina?

Is it not conceivable that in North Carolina, at least, we would have somehow managed to make out—and probably to have done a reasonably good job in relieving all actual distress at a cost of not over half, and more likely well under half, that which was actually marked up?

What was the real reason that North Carolina last year got $13,803,000 of relief money from Washington? Was it not the fact that New York was getting $152,345,000 and Pennsylvania $105,761,000?

We wanted our share of this money, didn't we? But did we get our share? Is there any reason to think that this could ever be accomplished?

Secretary Roper urged last fall that Southern States set an example to the Nation by refusing to take any more Federal relief money. Suppose that all of the Southern States had done this, where would we be today? What would have been the effects upon the relief problem as it confronts Washington and the Nation?

Mr. Roper was underrated by many people in the earlier period of the present administration, but more and more he has emerged as a pretty shrewd old boy with a tremendous fund of hard, practical common sense. Wasn't the advice which he gave last fall pretty shrewd and wholesome advice?

	February 1935		Average per family per month for direct relief (December 1934, January and February 1935)	Total Federal expenditures (May 23, 1933, to Mar. 31, 1935)

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I very greatly regret that the very able Senator from North Carolina sees fit to base his opposition to the bill——

Mr. BAILEY. I beg the Senator's pardon; I am not opposed to the bill. I was making some observations in view of the bill. I am not trying to oppose the Senator's bill. I think I should tell the truth and state the facts as they are.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is a phase of the matter which the Senator has emphasized from time to time and again and again since the bill has been before us which I think should at least be clarified. I refer to his frequent assertions which would leave the impression upon any mind that the bill is for the relief of 2-bale cotton farmers.

Mr. BAILEY. I beg the Senator's pardon. Will he allow me to interrupt him again?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I was endeavoring to argue that it could not possibly relieve them.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course, it ought to be understood, from repeated statements made here, that this is a national program; and the suggestion that there are a large number of cotton farmers who produce only 2 bales of cotton as an argument and a reason why this bill cannot afford relief does not strike me as possessing any sort of force or logic.

In the first place, the 600,000 2-bale cotton farmers referred to are cotton farmers who have not heretofore produced more than that quantity of cotton. There is no limitation under the allotment plan this year that brings about any reduction in the amount of cotton allotted to a farmer who produces less than 2 bales of cotton based upon his previous average production.

There is no reason why there should be a misunderstanding as to that phase of this question. There is a large number, possibly 600,000—though I think that figure may be large—who in the past have not produced as much as 2 bales of cotton. The allotment program, while it has nothing to do with the pending bill, does not put any limitation or restriction or reduction upon the allotment of the small farmer producing 2 bales or less according to their previous history. It simply provides that they shall have a hundred-percent exemption based on their previous production during the base period; and all reductions to the farmers are applied to those who have heretofore produced more than 2 bales of cotton.

I have made this statement because I did not want any Senator not familiar with the subject to consider the 2-bale cotton farmer as a material element in this program for two reasons: First, that group constitutes only about five or six hundred thousand out of about 3,000,000 farmers who are eligible under this program if they possess the other requirements specified in the bill. In the next place, the farmer referred to as the "2-bale farmer", instead of being hurt, has been benefited, because he is allowed to produce as much cotton as he has previously produced, while reductions have been enforced on the larger farmers, and, therefore, the 2-bale farmer receives more money for the 2 bales than he received before the same amount of cotton. We all recognize that the 2-bale cotton farmer is not depending upon his cotton crop as his sole cash asset.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Let me finish this thought and then I will yield.

A very large number of that group of farmers are engaged in dairying, in trucking, and in various kinds of diversified farming, producing 1 bale or 2 bales of cotton here and there purely as a side line and not as their main farming business.

Now, I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Alabama to say that 3,000,000 farmers were eligible under his program.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There are 3,000,000 tenants. I did not say they possessed all the qualifications necessary.

Mr. BYRD. Does the Senator contend that a billion dollars is sufficient to give relief to 3,000,000 farmers?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think the able Senator from Virginia well understands that there is no program proposed to provide a farm for every tenant and crop-farm worker in the United States.

Mr. BYRD. But, Mr. President, if they are eligible, why should not all have an equal opportunity?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Because they do not all possess the qualifications required. I distinctly stated they were eligible if they possessed the other qualifications. There is, of necessity, a question of selectivity involved in a program of this sort. They must be men of good moral character, and of previous experience.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. I took the Senator's own statement when he said that 3,000,000 farmers were eligible. If that statement is not correct, how many farmers, in the opinion of the Senator, are eligible?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am unable to answer that question, because it requires an investigation into the character of the farmers, and all that.

Mr. BYRD. Just one more interruption and I shall not take the Senator's time further. I want to bring clearly before the Senate that this $1,000,000,000 appropriation is simply the beginning of many appropriations which must be made for the same purpose.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am aware of the attitude of the Senator on all measures sponsored by the present administration, or given its support, involving progressive and remedial relief. We all understand that.

Mr. President, it has been asked how the tenants are going to pay the installments. In the first place, we hope to have a lower interest rate, and, in the next place, a very small payment on the principal in the way of an annual amortization payment.

It is the judgment of many who have investigated this question that the rentals now being paid by the tenant farmers would substantially, if not entirely, meet the annual installments, so that, instead of the annual rentals going to absentee landlords, these workers, by applying the amounts they are paying upon rentals to the small annual payments upon the principal of their obligations, will be in position as well to meet those payments as they now are to meet the rental payments required of them year after year, and by that method of financing, Mr. President, paying the amounts they have heretofore been paying as rental, and such payments constituting substantially the annual installments upon the purchase plan, the difference in the value of the two programs is easily understood. They can make the payments upon small farms, as this bill specifies, with practically the same money they are now paying to the landlord. On the other hand, after paying it to the landlord they have no investment, they have established no equity, they have no security of tenure, but are upon notice all the time that at the end of the year, whether they have paid the rent or have not paid it, they are subject to be moved on to some other community, as a renter upon some other farmer's land.

INCLUSION OF HOPS AS A BASIC AGRICULTURAL COMMODITY

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, on last Monday, during the call of the calendar, the Senate reached Senate bill 626, to make hops a basic commodity under the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] objected to its consideration at that time. I insisted on consideration, and that courtesy was extended to me, and the bill passed, with the understanding—and I use my own language—that if the objection was persisted in, I would ask that the bill be returned to the calendar. A motion was made to reconsider; and now, conformably with my agreement at that time, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered and that the bill be returned to the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the reconsideration? The Chair hears none, and the bill is returned to the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Arkansas if he desires to have the Senate recess or adjourn over until Monday?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, many Senators have spoken to me about recessing until Monday. Under present conditions, I do not feel justified in making a motion to that effect. I should like very much—and I think Senators will agree that it is always my policy—to serve their convenience in matters of adjournment or recess; but, in view of the slow progress which has been made during the past 2 days, I feel that we should have a session tomorrow.

Mr. McNARY. Then, may we not at this time have a recess until 12 tomorrow?

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to that course if it is apparent that the pending bill cannot be disposed of today and a recess taken until Monday.

I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, April 19, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, APRIL 18, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we praise Thee for the visible beginning of our eternal redemption, "The word became flesh and dwelt among us and we beheld His glory, the glory of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." We rejoice that the forbidding skies have opened and have let the face of God shine through. Bruised by the world's iniquity and bearing its sin and shame, having loved, He loved to the uttermost. Be still and know that I am God; to discover how far we have drifted from the right course and how far afield we have gone from the light, warmth, and leading of His precepts. We would commune with our own hearts; raise us up into newness of life, and may we weave the garments of our characters in the light of eternity. Whisper to us today; pity and bless the famished crowds, the helpless poor, the concourse with its teeming hearts and the crosses of Jerusalem; merciful Father, may they all look up to Thee. Restore unto them the romance of the morning stars. In the name of Him whom we call Lord and Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate has passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 2597. An act for the relief of Irene de Bruyn Robbins.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6718) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate to said bill numbered 60.

CHARLES E. UPSON

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, by authority of the Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, to take from the Speaker's desk H. R. 3071, for the relief of Charles E. Upson, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Line 9, after the word "organization", insert "on May 8, 1918."

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

SOCIAL-SECURITY BILL

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7260) to provide for the general welfare by establishing a system of Federal old-age benefits, and by enabling the several States to make more adequate provision for aged persons, dependent and crippled children, maternal and child welfare, public health, and the administration of their unemployment compensation laws; to establish a Social Security Board; to raise revenue; and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7260, with Mr. MCREYNOLDS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MONAGHAN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MONAGHAN. I desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Would it be in order, following the reading of the first title of the bill, to offer an amendment inserting a new title to precede title I of the bill? If it is in order, would such an amendment have to be disposed of before amendments to title I are offered?

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order, and it would be disposed of before amendments were offered to title I of the bill.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. If the gentleman will yield, I believe we can agree, the amendment offered by the gentleman having been printed in the RECORD, to dispense with the reading of the amendment. Would that be agreeable to the gentleman?

Mr. MONAGHAN. That would be agreeable to me.

Mr. SNELL. Is this the McGroarty bill?

Mr. MONAGHAN. It is the last one.

Mr. SNELL. The last edition.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I object. I think the Members should hear the proposition read.

The CHAIRMAN. Before recognizing anyone to offer an amendment, the Chair desires to make a statement. The general debate on the bill has been 23 hours, a longer general debate than the Chair has ever known in this House. The bill has been ably and well discussed. It is the purpose of the Chair to give every Member who has a bona fide amendment to offer an opportunity to do so. It is also the purpose of the Chair to recognize, whenever he can do so, Members who have bona fide amendments rather than those who offer pro forma amendments; in other words, bona fide amendments will have the preference. It is likely that there will be many Members who will ask for recognition. The Chair wants to ask the Members of the House to cooperate with the Chair in keeping order and also to be present.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CONNERY. When will it be in order for me to offer the Lundeen bill in a similar manner to this?

The CHAIRMAN. After the other amendments are disposed of.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I propose to offer an amendment to include the blind. That amendment will be just like title IV, except that title IV deals with dependent children. As I understand it, so far as title I is concerned, an arrangement has been made whereby the McGroarty bill will be introduced before title I. Will we be compelled to introduce amendments such as I propose before title I is disposed of?

The CHAIRMAN. Not necessarily so. The gentleman from Montana is recognized.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MONAGHAN offers the following amendment: On page 1, following the enacting clause of the bill, insert the following as a new title:

"TITLE I

"DEFINITIONS

"SECTION 1. The term 'transaction' for the purposes of this act shall be defined so as to include the sale, transfer, barter, and/or exchange of either or both real or personal property, including any right, interest, easement, or privilege of commercial value therein or related thereto, whether actually made at the time or only then agreed to be made and whether under executed or executory contract or otherwise; also including all charges for interest, rent commissions, fees, and any other pecuniary benefit of any kind directly or indirectly derived from or for any loan, deposit, rental, lease, pledge, or any other use or forbearance of money or property; and also including the rendering or performance of any service for monetary or other commercially valuable consideration, whether by a person or otherwise, including all personal service, also transportation by any means, and telephone, telegraph, radio, amusement, recreation, education, art, advertising, any public utility, any water rights, and/or any and all other service of any and every kind whatsoever, but excepting and excluding therefrom any single isolated transfer of property of fair value less than $100 or any other isolated transaction of the fair value of $50 or less, which does not arise or occur in the usual course of an established business, trade, or profession, and excluding any loan, deposit, withdrawal from deposit, hypothecation, or pledge of property or money.

"The word 'person' shall include any corporation, firm, copartnership, or association.

"The term 'transfer' for the purposes of this act shall be defined to mean the passing of property, real or personal, or the title ownership or beneficial interest therein, from one person to another, and also includes the rendition of service in connection with the transfer.

"A purchase obligation is not a loan under this act.

"Barter and/or exchange is defined as a plurality of transactions to the extent of the fair value of the property and/or service transferred or rendered other than money.

"The term 'income' for the purposes of this act shall be defined so as to include the gross amount of any and all money or its equivalent received from or for any service performed or from or for any proceeds or profit from any transaction, inheritance, or gift whatsoever.

"The term 'net income' for the purposes of this act shall be defined so as to include all money and/or commercially valuable benefit or its equivalent actually received by the annuitant, after deducting only such charges and expenses as are directly incident to producing such net income.

"The term 'gainful pursuit' for the purposes of this act shall be defined so as to include any occupation, profession, business, calling, or vocation, or any combination thereof, performed for monetary or other commercially valuable consideration, remuneration, or profit.

"The term 'annuity' and/or 'annuities' for the purposes of this act shall be defined so as to include the various sums and/or amount of money distributed and paid pro rata and otherwise to the various persons who shall become and be the beneficiaries under this act.

"The term 'executory contract' for the purposes of this act shall be defined so as to include any and all conditional sale agreements and contracts, and all other agreements and contracts the completion of which is or may be delayed to some time subsequent to the time of making thereof.

"The term 'gross dollar value' for the purposes of this act shall be defined so as to include the sum representing the total fair value of the entire property or service transferred or proposed to be transferred, without deducting any amount of encumbrance or offset of any kind, except a mortgage encumbrance of record upon real property.

"TAXES AND COLLECTION THEREOF

"SEC. 2. (a) There is hereby levied a tax of 2 percent upon the fair gross dollar value of each transaction done within the United States and Territories; also, in addition to all other taxes, a tax equal to one-tenth of the tax levied upon all incomes under the provisions of the Revenue Act of 1934 or any amendment thereto; also, in addition to all other taxes, a tax of 2 percent upon the fair dollar value of all transfers of property by devise, bequest, or other testamentary disposition or legal descent and distribution of property, as now are or hereafter may be taxable under the laws of the United States; and also, in addition to all other taxes, a tax of 2 percent upon the fair gross dollar value of every gift in excess of the fair value of $500: Provided, That said taxes shall not be levied upon such transactions involving the issuance, sale, or transfer of Federal, State, or municipal bonds or other securities as would be otherwise exempt from Federal taxation under existing law, and shall not be levied upon any transaction done by the Federal or by a State or municipal government, which would be otherwise exempt from Federal taxation under existing law.

"(b) Except as hereinafter otherwise provided, all tax returns for the taxes imposed by this act shall be made by, and the tax shall be paid by, the grantor, vendor, lessor, and/or legal representative thereof, and by the legal entity by whom the service is furnished, for each and every transfer of property and/or rendition or performance of service, and for all transactions arising under executory contract the return shall be made and the tax shall be paid as of the date such executory contract is entered into, regardless of the time of the completion thereof: Provided, That in every case of compensation for personal service other than for professional service, the person or legal entity by whom such payment is made shall deduct the amount of the tax and withhold it out of such compensation and shall make the return and the payment of the tax for such cases in lieu of the return and payment by the person who performed the service.

"(c) All taxes imposed by this act shall be deemed levied and shall become payable upon all taxable transactions beginning and occurring on and after 30 days after this act takes effect.

"(d) Every return of taxes, together with the payment of the taxes, as required by this act, shall be made to the collector of internal revenue of the United States, or to such other person as may be designated by rules and regulations issued under this act, for the district from which such return is made, as of the end of each calendar month during which such taxes become fixed and chargeable, and shall be delivered and paid to said collector of internal revenue or other person not later than 10 days after the expiration of the calendar month for which such return is made.

"(e) The Secretary of the Treasury shall enforce the payment of the taxes required by this act to be paid, and shall promptly deposit in the United States Treasury all funds received by him through or from the collection of such taxes, all as required by rules and regulations to be issued and promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.

"(f) Within the limitations of sections 1 and 2 of this act the Secretary of the Treasury shall by rules and regulations prescribe what shall constitute a taxable transaction within the meaning of this act, in any particular case, and may determine and prescribe the number of transactions to be taxed in the course of the production, distribution, and sale of any article or commodity. He shall also create and maintain a board of review which shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine any claim arising out of the administration of sections 1 and 2 of this act, upon the part of anyone paying or liable for the payment of any of the taxes imposed herein. Said board shall consist of not more than five members who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall receive a salary to be fixed by the President, not exceeding $10,000 per year. The decisions of said board shall be subject to appeal to the district court of the United States of the district where the claim arises, in the manner prescribed by law for appeals in income-tax matters.

"In making the rules and regulations herein provided for the Secretary of the Treasury shall be governed by the following basic rules, which are hereby declared to be the policy of the United States with regard to the levy and collection of said taxes:

"(1) Where the transaction involves the physical transfer of property, or the ownership, title, or beneficial interest therein, the tax shall be levied upon the gross dollar value of the property so transferred; except that in the transfer of real property under a contract of purchase, purchase-money mortgage, or other purchase obligation the tax shall be levied and collected upon the amounts paid under such obligation as and when the same are paid.

"(2) Where the transaction consists of the rendition of service only in connection with the transfer the tax shall be levied and collected upon the gross dollar value of the service rendered.

"(3) The gross dollar value in either case shall be the price actually charged for the property or service, unless it shall appear to the Secretary of the Treasury that such price is obviously inconsistent with the fair value thereof, in which case the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine the fair value and levy the tax thereon accordingly.

"(4) A transaction done by a broker, commission merchant, carrier, bailee for hire, or warehouseman in the ordinary course of his business as such in connection with personal property, shall be deemed to be a service transaction.

"(5) Where several transactions are done in the course of the production, manufacture, distribution, and sale of personal property and/or service rendered in connection therewith, all of such transactions, if otherwise taxable hereunder, shall be taxable whether said transactions are done in whole or in part by, within, or under the control of a single person, firm, corporation, copartnership, or association, or whether they be done in whole or in part by separate persons, firms, corporations, copartnerships, or associations; the purpose of this clause being to prevent avoidance by larger business firms and combinations of payment of the same tax for which smaller or independent businesses would ordinarily be liable under this act.

"(6) Where articles are manufactured in whole or in part by the process of assembling together such component parts thereof as are ordinarily purchased from other manufacturers, such, for example, as automobiles, machinery, furniture, etc., the transaction tax herein provided shall be levied upon the gross dollar value of such component parts regardless of whether the same were made by the manufacturer of the assembled or completed article or whether they were purchased by such manufacturer from another, and where the manufacturer of an article upon which a transaction tax is payable hereunder is the producer of the raw material or other material from which said article in whole or in part is made, then the transaction tax upon such material, if the same has not been paid and would be otherwise taxable hereunder, shall be paid by such manufacturer.

"(7) Every person engaged in the sale of goods at retail shall be deemed for the purposes of this act to be an independent operator and not the agent or employee of any producer, manufacturer, wholesaler, or distributor of such goods.

"A SEPARATE FUND

"SEC. 3. There is hereby created in the Treasury Department of the United States a fund to be known and administered as the 'United States citizens' retirement annuity fund.' All revenue derived from the taxes levied in and under this act shall be deposited by the Secretary of the Treasury in this United States citizens' retirement annuity fund, and shall be disbursed only for the payments of the sums expressly authorized by this act to be paid therefrom, and for no other purposes.

"ONLY UNITED STATES CITIZENS ARE ELIGIBLE

"SEC. 4. (a) Every citizen of the United States 60 years of age and over, or who shall attain the age of 60 years after the passage of this act, shall be entitled to receive, upon filing application and qualifying as hereinafter provided, an annuity payable monthly during the life of the annuitant in a sum to be determined as hereinafter provided in this act.

"(b) The right of any person to receive an annuity under this act shall date from and begin on the date of proper filing of an application therefor, when and if such application is supported by proper and sufficient proofs in compliance with rules and regulations issued pursuant to the provisions of this act, but subject to the limitations upon time and manner of payment as hereinafter provided by this act. In such application the applicant shall disclose the nature and extent of any annual or monthly income then being received or due to be received by the applicant.

"(c) The annuitant shall not engage in any gainful pursuit.

"(d) The annuitant shall covenant and agree to expend and shall spend all of each month's annuity during the current calendar month in which it is received by the annuitant, or within 1 month thereafter, within the United States of America or its Territorial possessions, in and for the purchase of any services and/or commodities, and/or a home or an equity in or lease of a home, or for the payment of any indebtedness lawfully arising for any such purchase: Provided, however, That the annuitant shall not directly or indirectly expend a total of more than 10 percent of any such monthly annuity for gifts or contributions to any person or to any public or private institutions, associations, or organizations.

"(e) This annuity shall not be payable to any person who directly or indirectly receives from any source a net income of any kind or nature in excess of the amount of the annuity to which he would be otherwise entitled under this act.

"(f) Any person otherwise qualified to receive an annuity hereunder, and who at any time receives any net income of any kind or nature not arising from personal services of such person and which in total amount is less than $2,400 per year, shall promptly make full and complete disclosures in writing under oath, as required by rules to be issued under this act, fully disclosing the amount and source of any and all such income, and thereupon the pro rata monthly amount of any such annual income not arising under this act shall be pro rated over the year and shall be deducted monthly from the monthly annuity payment to which such person under this act would otherwise be entitled, and the remainder shall be the annuity of such annuitant payable under this act: Provided, however, That all of the income of any such annuitant, whether arising under this act or otherwise, shall be expended as required for annuity paid under the provisions of this act.

"ADMINISTRATION PROVISIONS

"SEC. 5. (a) The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall create and maintain boards of review, within the several States, as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions and purposes of this act, and he shall issue and promulgate and enforce proper and suitable rules and regulations governing the manner and place of registration by applicants for the annuities provided for under this act, and the method of identification of and registration by such annuitants, also to require and secure the proper spending of the annuity money by the annuitant as required by this act, and adequate and sufficient accounting thereof, and such other rules and regulations as he may deem necessary, all in accordance with the intent and purposes of this act; and he shall cause to be paid at regular monthly intervals, to each person who lawfully qualifies to receive annuities under this act, such amount as shall become due the respective annuitants lawfully qualifying under this act.

"(b) Proper and suitable boards shall be established by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, within each State as he shall deem necessary, such boards as have exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine all issues arising under this act, subject to rules and regulations issued and promulgated under this act, concerning annuitants residing within the jurisdiction of the boards, respectively, but subject to the right of either party to have the decision of any such board reviewed by the State court having general jurisdiction over the area in which that board is situated.

"APPORTIONMENT AND DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS

"SEC. 6. From and out of the proceeds of such taxes collected and accumulated under the provisions of this act, disposition and disbursements shall be made in the following manner and order, to wit:

"(a) All proper and necessary expense of administering this act shall first be paid or provided for, and upon a monthly basis whenever practicable.

"(b) A reserve fund shall at all times be maintained sufficient to protect and provide proper payment of any and all annuities, the payment of which for any cause is deferred because of delay in approval of application for the annuity or otherwise.

"(c) All other money available in any month or period, from or out of said tax collections or any undistributed residue thereof, as hereinafter referred to, shall be distributed and paid monthly, pro rata, except as hereinafter provided, to all qualified annuitants who are of record on the last day of the calendar month period or longer first period as hereinafter specified, during which the tax collections and/or residue are accumulated for distribution, in such amount as may properly be paid from the funds accumulated during that period, and in the following manner, to wit:

"(d) First. The total amount available for distribution shall be divided by the total number of the annuitants entitled to share therein, and except for cases where deduction is to be made as hereinafter referred to, the result shall be the pro rata annuity amount.

"Second. The proper deductions provided for by section 4, paragraph (f), of this act shall then be made from the pro rata amount so determined, as to all persons who have any income not arising under this act as annuity.

"Third. The amount so determined to be due each of the annuitants shall then be paid in manner and by method as follows, to wit:

"(e) The total amount of the deductions made as provided in section 4, paragraph (f), of this act shall constitute a residue which shall be carried over into the next following month and be merged into and become a part of the fund available for that month for distribution to qualified annuitants as provided for in this act.

"(f) All of the funds accumulated under this act during the period extending from the time this act goes into effect and to the end of the first full calendar month after this act takes effect and hereby designated as the 'first period', shall be promptly paid for and as of the 1st day of the fifth full calendar month after this act takes effect, to such annuitants as are of record on the last day of such 'first period' and as hereinbefore provided for in section 6, paragraph (c), of this act.

"(g) All of the funds accumulated under this act during the second full calendar month after this act takes effect, hereby designated the 'second period', shall be promptly paid for and as of the 1st day of the sixth full calendar month after this act takes effect, to such annuitants as are of record on the last day of such 'second period' and as hereinbefore provided for in section 6, paragraph (c), of this act.

"(h) Subsequent monthly payments to the annuitants shall be made by this same method, monthly, as follows:

"Accumulation of third period to be paid on 1st day of seventh month.

"Accumulation of the fourth period to be paid on 1st day of eighth month.

"Accumulation of the fifth period to be paid on the 1st day of the ninth month, and so forth. And continuing so long as any funds are available therefor under this act, to the annuitants identified monthly in accordance with section 6, paragraph (c), of this act.

"RULES AND REGULATIONS

"SEC. 7. All administrative details not specifically otherwise provided for in this act shall be governed by rules and regulations issued and promulgated by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs.

"APPROPRIATION FROM THE FUND

"SEC. 8. The Secretary of the Treasury, upon demand by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, is hereby authorized and directed to pay from money or moneys available in said United States citizens' retirement annuity fund, the money necessary to cover the monthly annuities as designated by said Administrator to be paid to qualified annuitants, and for other purposes, in a total amount as elsewhere provided in this act, but in any eveht not to exceed at any time the amount on deposit in said fund; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sum or sums as may be necessary to establish and maintain this act, subject to reimbursement out of funds collected hereunder, pursuant to the provisions of this act.

"ANNUITIES NOT SUBJECT TO GARNISHMENT, AND SO FORTH

"(a) For engaging in any gainful pursuit.

"(b) For violation of any of the provisions of this act.

"(c) For unreasonable and unnecessary maintenance of any able-bodied person in idleness and/or for unreasonable and unnecessary employment of a person or persons or the payment to any person of any salary or wages or any other form of compensation in disproportion to the service rendered.

"(d) For willful failure or refusal to obey any rule or regulation issued under this act.

"(e) For willful refusal by any annuitant to pay any just obligation.

"DELAY IN PAYMENT—REMEDY

"SEC. 12. If in any case the payment of an annuity to any person is delayed to an extent which causes an accumulation of 2 months or more of annuities, then, and in that event, the expenditures by the annuitant for the amount of any such accumulation shall be made upon the basis of 2 months for every month of such accumulation.

"CERTAIN OFFENSES A FELONY—PENALTY

"SEC. 13. It shall be a felony, and punishable as such, for any applicant for an annuity, or for any annuitant, or any person required by this act to make any return for the payment of any tax, to make any false statement, or to knowingly withhold any facts material to the proper administration of this act, with intent to defraud the United States, under a penalty of a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.

"CONSTRUCTION OF THIS ACT

"SEC. 14. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act or the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby."

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee (interrupting the reading of the foregoing). Mr. Chairman, I renew my request and ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the proposed amendment be dispensed with, and that it be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto be concluded in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MOTT. I object. I shall not object to making it an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Montana is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Chairman, I shall not endeavor to explain in the brief 5 minutes accorded me the provisions of such a comprehensive measure as the revised McGroarty bill. I merely wish to answer at the outset the unjust attack to which it has been subjected as amended. Ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, you will recall that the McGroarty bill was presented as one of the first measures during this session of Congress as a recovery measure. It was revised at the suggestion of friends who listened to the testimony before the Committee on Ways and Means; revised to meet technical objections made by that distinguished committee. No effort has been made to revise the amount. There has been a move to change the method of taxation so as to include income, inheritance, and gift taxes, to increase the amount that might be raised by the bill. The most misinterpreted concession that has been made is the one made to disarm the insistent objections and criticisms that the bill would not be able to raise the amount provided as the annuity.

Two years of untiring, ceaseless effort upon the part of the great President of our Republic, Franklin D. Roosevelt, and the membership of both the House and the Senate has been engaged, and yet we face the tragic situation in our Republic where 11,000,000 men are still unemployed. The malady affecting our Nation is maldistribution of wealth. Machine production from endless-chain belts to mighty steam shovels, occasioning compulsory, permanent unemployment, is the landmark of that uneven distribution, where the few have much too much and the many have little too little. Proper and effective regulation and legislation would concur that condition. Jobs, and jobs alone, can accomplish recovery. Harking back to that great inaugural address that was delivered on the Capitol steps March 4, 1933, which I believe will go down in history as one of the greatest speeches of any statesman in our Republic, I recall to your minds the words of the President, when he said:

Our greatest primary task is to put people back to work.

It is true that much has been done in the proper direction by public works, by the N. R. A., and by other methods that have been employed to put people back to work, but, by and large, the vast army of the unemployed remains with us even to today. Only one measure has been enacted to date that has fundamentally affected the situation of unemployment in our land and that is the one reported and pushed through in the dying hours of the last session of Congress, the Railroad Retirement Act, which when first put into operation and before it was enjoined by court order in those towns where railroading is the principal industry absolutely abolished unemployment in the ranks of railroad men. There is only one way to meet the ever-changing machine age of our country. There is only one successful method of putting them back on the pay roll of industry in our Nation, and that is the method which even the chiselers and unpatriotic leaders of industry who denounce such progressive methods as this cannot dodge, avoid, or escape, and that is by the pensioning of those noble men and women who pioneered the upbuilding of industry and commerce to make the glory of our Republic.

What shall we do about the man who has given his best to society, who has slaved long and arduously in an economic order devoid of compensation sufficient to provide for old age, who faces that foul blot on a great nation—that soul-crushed, heart-despairing abode, the poorhouse? The conscience of the Nation shouts the answer with clamorous voice; an adequate national old-age pension; not one that quibbles over age or amount; not one that is a makeshift; but one so sound that it will adequately take care of this great problem. The welfare of the State and legislation looking to the advancement of the individual and his protection should be the endeavor and is the highest ideal of sound government.

Let us have a better America that is economically free, with every man enjoying the right to life, to liberty, and the pursuit of happiness—where the fires of greed and avarice are extinguished by liberty-loving and public-minded officials. The hope of America, the hope of its Constitution, the hope of the people all depend upon that one great principle, the principle that every American shall have the right to live as a decent American.

Amend this bill to the point where it will become a real bill; substitute a new bill in lieu thereof. Then a new America will be built, an America of peace, security, and an America of freedom from worry in old age and unemployment in youth—an America with a new Declaration of Independence as glorious and as great as that which freed the Thirteen Original Colonies, greater because we will have written upon the statute books of America all that will insure us against greedily and avariciously plunging into war as a method of recovery, one that will prevent crime by making life free from financial worry, one that will build a glorious republic and be a challenge to the Old World to follow America to economic freedom even as America was followed to spiritual liberty and political freedom.

Then mines, mills, and factories will reopen at full force. Homes will be remodeled, materials will be purchased. Farmers can sell their products. Despondency will be banished with the poorhouse in its unholy wake, and we will march forward again, a free people economically as well as spiritually, to the tune of the Stars and Stripes Forever, under the splendid leadership of that man who lives for America and its welfare alone, Franklin D. Roosevelt, our fearless and peerless President.

If we enact at this session of Congress a law which will take a sufficient number of men out of industry, and enact again a law that will cut down drastically the hours of labor, those two measures, and those two alone, will fulfill the desire of the great President of our Republic when he said that the greatest primary task is to put people back to work. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, when the rule for the consideration of the social-security bill was brought before the House, there was a great deal of ridiculous affirmation it was a gag rule. We, of the Rules Committee, who reported it, tried to show that it is a wide-open rule, and that no rule could be more open. At that time a number of the supporters of the so-called "Townsend plan" and of the "Lundeen bill" took the floor and protested as expert parliamentarians that neither of those bills would be in order under the reading of the bill in the committee for amendment. I stated then that I hoped the Townsend bill would be in order and that I felt personally that it was in order. Today we find that the alleged "Townsend bill" is in order. We have had a lot of commotion about nothing, therefore. What was said then has, however, gone throughout the country, and principally from that great State of California some of us have been lambasted as supporters of gag rules, trying to stop the consideration of measures in this House. Nothing could be farther from the truth, and every Member of this House knows it. We could easily have prevented the consideration of the Townsend scheme and the Lundeen bill, if we felt so inclined, but I for one, stood against any such gag from the very beginning. The irate people of California and other Townsend provinces may never believe it, but this House in fairness knows it.

Let me say to you today that in all the consideration of this bill before the Ways and Means Committee, in all the conferences between the Speaker and me, in all the discussions before the Rules Committee, no one ever even suggested that either the Townsend plan or the Lundeen bill was not in order under an open rule such as we brought in. It was never intimated that those bills were not in order. So, therefore, there was no attempt directly or indirectly to prevent those bills from being in order.

Mr. Chairman, that the country may know the truth instead of the falsehoods peddled to this great army of misguided people, that the country may understand the extent of the activity of the champions of the Townsend plan and the Lundeen bill, let me say right here now that if those emotional supporters and champions ever entertained the fears they expressed on the floor of the House when the rule was reported, as to whether either of these plans might be in order, they certainly slept on their rights for a long time, because never one man or one woman, championing either plan or bill, ever took the precaution to see or request that his or her proposition be made in order, although they expressed great fears founded on their astute parliamentarian knowledge that they might not be in order. If those bills might not be in order, let me say to the country and to these poor, decent, distressed, desperate, but deluded, people of our Nation that if the Townsend plan was not held in order, I was prepared to do my utmost to make it in order so that it might be considered in this great assembly. With myself, that was the attitude of your great Democratic Speaker, through all this consideration of the method by which we would consider this bill. Why, Mr. Chairman, we never heard from the leaders of the Townsend plan; we never heard from the leaders of the Lundeen bill, asking us to make their bills in order, although those leaders said the bills were not in order. Where were those champions? Were they diligent in their great "battle"?

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. No; not now.

The social-security bill has been considered for 23 hours. The debate has been one of the enlightening chapters in the deliberations of this great House. It has been conducted on a high plane. We are now at the period where we read the bill.

Of course, I have heard politics being played in reference to the bill. I could hear, especially on the other side of the aisle, politics being played. I could see politics being played especially by the Republican Members from California, and it made me think of that expression of their last President, and the last President the Republicans will ever have [laughter]—I thought of the expression he coined, which made such an appeal at the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr O'CONNOR. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. I just want to say to the gentleman from New York, for whom I have the greatest admiration and respect, that the Lundeen bill was passed favorably by the Committee on Labor and reported favorably to the House, and the next day I drew up a resolution asking the Rules Committee to give us a favorable rule in the House, and we received no rule.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman is talking about a subject matter so far distant from what I have been referring that there is not even a connection, let alone germaneness. I said that if you, Mr. CONNERY, worried about the Lundeen plan being in order in the consideration of the social-security bill, where were you? What effort did you make to be sure it was in order?

Mr. CONNERY. I was here.

Mr. O'CONNOR. But the gentleman did not ask to have the Lundeen bill made in order. Now, that is the fact.

Mr. CONNERY. We had it all drawn up to be in order, however, and it is in order now.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman is talking about a separate rule for the consideration of the Lundeen bill by itself. The gentleman interrupted me, a good Democrat, when I was talking about my Republican friends on the other side. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNERY. I beg the gentleman's pardon for that. I would not stop him for a moment on that.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The last Republican President for all time [laughter] coined the expression, "Playing politics with human misery." I saw it played here during the debate on this bill. I saw it played especially on the Republican side of the aisle and by the Republicans from California—men, who in the ordinary conduct in this body, would never vote for some of these measures we are now advocating; men who would never think of bringing before this House any social-security bill. When did the Republicans ever think of old-age pensions during all the years they were in power? Why, they always fought every humanitarian piece of legislation, from the Workmen's Compensation Act down to old-age pensions. [Applause.] We Democrats are entitled to credit for this great bill. We are pioneers in behalf of our people for the benefits of old-age pensions.

This is a happy hour in this House when, under Democratic leadership, an opportunity for all these great propositions to be considered is presented to the House.

This House is a cross section of the entire country, representing not only geographically, but mentally, morally, and emotionally every current of thought in our Nation. With that background, we cannot be wrong. That this great bill represents the spirit of America will be evidenced by the fact that every one of these much discussed propositions, antagonistic to its plans, will be voted down by at least 8 to 1, and the bill will pass with not more than a score of the peoples' Representatives voting against it.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I renew my unanimous-consent request that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto be concluded in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman agree to a roll call on the bill?

Mr. TREADWAY. Reserving the right to object, we have reached an agreement, or at least I understood it was an agreement, to be very liberal in the use of time on amendments.

It does not strike me as quite the right thing to do for the chairman just at the beginning of consideration of the bill, under the 5-minute rule, to endeavor to force a closure in 20 minutes. Let us start out by having liberal consideration of the amendments offered. I think this would be advisable.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I will say to my friend from Massachusetts that we have had 23 hours of general debate. Numerous amendments are to be offered, and if we set the precedent of having an hour or two of debate on each amendment we shall not make much progress. If we allow it in one case we must allow it in all.

Mr. TREADWAY. If no objection is raised to the gentleman's request that debate on the pending amendment close in 20 minutes I hope it will not be construed as setting a precedent of allowing only 20 minutes on the other important amendments, for a great many Members want the opportunity of speaking on them.

Mr. DOUGHTON. We are going to be reasonable. Let us see how the Members feel about it.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I offer a suggestion to the gentleman from North Carolina? Instead of submitting his unanimous-consent request now, why does he not allow debate on the amendment to run along for 20 minutes and then if the Members think there has been sufficient discussion, let him renew his unanimous-consent request that debate close immediately or in 5 minutes. I would like 5 minutes on this amendment, but it is very doubtful if I can obtain it.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I renew my request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the McGroarty-Townsend bill for the reason that the social-security act we are now considering in my judgment has three defects in the old-age pension phase of it. The first is that the sum to be allotted by the Federal Treasury to the States, of $15 per person per month, is too low; the second is that the age limit we have fixed in this bill is too high; and the third is that under the provisions of the bill not over 5, 6, or perhaps 10 States at the outside, will be eligible to take advantage of its provisions because of, first, financial, and, second, constitutional or other legal limitations existing in the various States.

Mr. Chairman, had the social-security act, or an act of similar character, been put into operation or attempted to be put into operation along in 1924 or 1925 when the country was fairly prosperous, it could have been justified; but we are bringing this bill in at a time when the country is almost prostrate, at a time when 7,000,000, 8,000,000, or 10,000,000 elderly people are without means of subsistence. We are in a critical period, a period that is similar to a man stricken with appendicitis. You cannot cure his appendicitis by prescribing a diet, the only way you can cure it is by an operation. We have got to take a drastic step here and see that the people of this country are given an opportunity to get some help at this time.

The McGroarty bill will do that now. It will not affect the Treasury. The money to put it into operation will be collected over the country, and I feel in my soul that the average person would be willing to pay the 2-percent tax necessary to assure the millions of aged people being taken care of now.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the motion of the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. Chairman, in discussion of this matter during the course of the 23 hours' debate on the pending economic-security bill I have tried to avoid anything that could be construed as political or partisan. I think I have succeeded so far, and I am not going to say anything political now. I cannot refrain from observing at this point, however, that I do not agree with the statement just made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] as to the reason why we are permitted to have a vote on this amendment, the revised McGroarty bill, H. R. 7154, at this time. I believe, if it were not rather certain in the minds of the majority leaders that the amendment would be defeated, a vote would not be allowed on it under the rule.

I am entirely satisfied—and so, I believe, is everyone here—that if the McGroarty amendment had any chance of adoption today, a point of order would immediately have been made against it on the majority side on the ground that it was not germane, and that the point of order would have been sustained. However, I do not intend to discuss that point now. It is enough that we are at least to vote on it.

There are 435 Members of the House. All of them have had an opportunity to study the revised McGroarty bill, which is now offered as a substitute for title I of the economic-security bill; most of them have had opportunity to talk upon it, if they desired to do so. The text of the revised McGroarty bill, with certain highly important perfecting and clarifying amendments, appears printed in the RECORD on pages 5888–5890. I hope every Member who has not already done so will read it. I do not expect everyone to be able to study it as carefully as it ought to be studied, but I want to suggest to gentlemen who intend to oppose it that they should at least be familiar enough with it to oppose it for what may appear to them to be valid reasons.

I have listened carefully to everything that has been said on this proposal in the general debate, and, frankly, I have been surprised at the apparent lack of information in regard to it that has been displayed by many of the able gentlemen who have seen fit to oppose it. With the exception of two or three of the gentlemen who have spoken in opposition to it, the only arguments offered against the McGroarty proposal upon the floor of the House to date have been in the nature of ridicule.

Now, you cannot ridicule this thing out of existence, nor can you laugh it out of existence, even though you might not agree with it. Some 20,000,000 people in this country have by their petitions said that they desire enactment of a much more drastic and far-reaching old-age-pension law than that proposed in the revised McGroarty bill, and I say to you that you cannot ridicule out of existence a legislative proposal supported in good faith by 20,000,000 Americans.

What is the revised McGroarty bill, which we now propose as a substitute for the old-age-pension provisions of the administration bill? What is its purpose and how does it propose to translate that purpose into statutory law?

The fundamental purpose and object of the revised McGroarty bill is to provide an opportunity for every person in the United States who has reached the age limit of his economic usefulness to retire completely from competition with those who have not yet reached that age and to live the remainder of his life in decency and comfort and happiness. The McGroarty bill proposes that this great blessing of security shall be extended to the aged of our Nation, not as charity but as a matter of right.

So far then as the purpose of the bill is concerned, I venture to say that no one can very logically oppose it, because to do so would be to deny what is universally conceded now to be not merely a desirable thing but a demonstrated necessity. The only question, therefore, which I think can be properly raised is this: Does the revised McGroarty bill offer a feasible, a sound, and a practical method of achieving this admittedly worthy object? Let us examine it with this question in mind and see whether reason and experience, when applied to the provisions of the bill, will not answer the question for us.

The bill places the age of eligibility for a pension at 60 years. Why? For two reasons: First, because experience has shown that in modern industry—and in that term I include industry and business of every kind—the limit of the average person's real economic usefulness is reached, and that the majority of people above that age have not been able to exist in modern industry in competition with people who have not reached that age. The second reason is that 9 people out of 10 above the age of 60 years do not have an income sufficient to support themselves, and that the majority of people of that age are objects of charity in one form or another. Ninety percent of all the people past 60 who are holding jobs at the present time are holding them at the expense of younger people who are better fitted to do the work, and they are thus keeping out of employment millions of people who are still within the age which qualifies them to do the work required by modern industry.

Looking at the problem, therefore, from the viewpoint of economic necessity and desirability alone, I think most people will agree that the age of 60 is the proper age of eligibility under any comprehensive Federal old-age-pension law. From the humanitarian angle also an age limit not greater than this commends itself to most students of this problem.

Not all people over 60 would be eligible under the revised McGroarty bill, as they would have been under the original bill. This bill provides that no person having an income of more than $2,400 a year shall be eligible in any event. It also provides that if a person who is otherwise eligible has any independent income under that amount, the same shall be deducted from the amount of the pension he would otherwise be entitled to receive. This provision of the revised bill, I think, is proper and equitable both from the economic and humanitarian viewpoint.

No one, of course, is obliged to accept a pension under this bill. If he does accept it, however, he must agree to spend the entire amount of the pension every month. There are two reasons for this provision. The first is that since the pensioner is to be assured of an adequate annuity monthly during the remainder of his life, there is no economic necessity for his having to save it, and the second is that it is economically desirable to put this huge pension fund into immediate and continuous general circulation. That the compulsory circulation of several billions of dollars a year will tend to increase business, to create new jobs, and to otherwise help to bring about a recovery, there can be little doubt. This is an important feature of the McGroarty bill, and it is entitled to the very thorough and thoughtful consideration of the Congress.

The McGroarty bill is unique among the many old-age-pension proposals pending here in that it provides a definite method for raising the necessary revenue to finance the pensions. It does not depend upon borrowing to finance it, as does so much of the so-called "recovery and reform legislation" enacted by Congress during the present administration. Neither does it depend for its financing upon taking out of the Treasury a part of the money raised for general governmental purposes. Finally, it does not propose to increase existing rates on any of the taxes which are now employed by the Federal Government for revenue-raising purposes. The bill proposes an entirely new kind of tax which is to be used exclusively for the financing of the pensions to be paid under it and for no other purpose.

The revised McGroarty bill provides for the raising of the revenue necessary to create the fund wherewith to pay the pensions by the levy of a 2-percent tax upon transactions. Under the original bill both the character of the transactions which could be taxed, as well as the number of taxable transactions, was unlimited. Under the revised bill taxable transactions are carefully limited by very strict definition.

There are two reasons for this change in the revised bill. The first is that it was felt that a tax upon all transactions, unlimited either as to scope or number, might lead to considerable confusion and that it might also impose upon industry a tax burden greater than was necessary to provide an adequate pension. This, in my opinion, is the most important change in the revised bill, and it was a frank concession to those who believed in the fundamental principle of the plan involved in the bill, but who could not see their way clear to support the proposal to place a tax upon the gross dollar value of every conceivable sort of transaction involved in our very complicated industrial and financial system. It is not believed it will be necessary to go that far in order to raise the required revenue.

The second reason why it was thought necessary to put some limitation upon the character and number of taxable transactions was that without such limitation the small independent operator would be put to a disadvantage, because the large operator would be able to eliminate certain taxable transactions which the independent operator could not eliminate. Under the bill as now drafted the tax affects everyone alike and in equitable and exact proportion to the business he transacts. This is true whether the transaction be done by the independent corner grocer or whether it be done by the biggest chain store in the country. For example, under the revised bill an automobile such as that manufactured by Henry Ford, who makes all the parts which go into his product, would be subject to exactly the same number of taxable transactions as an automobile assembled by a company which buys most of its parts from other manufacturers. Under the revised bill, an article of merchandise purchased at the neighborhood drug store is subject to exactly the same tax and the same number of taxable transactions as a similar article purchased over the counter of the great chain drug store, which is merely the retail branch of the company which manufactures, distributes, and sells that article.

This part of the revised bill, namely, the limitation by definition as to the character and number of taxable transactions, and the provision for the equitable distribution of that tax burden upon everyone, large and small alike, is, as I have said, perhaps the most important change in the bill aside, of course, from the elimination of the original bill's compulsory requirement of a $200 a month pension; and with these changes it seems to me that all of the really valid objections to the original bill have been removed. When the gentleman from California [Mr. BUCK] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] criticized the bill a few days ago on the floor upon the ground that a transaction tax would give an unfair advantage to the large operator, I am sure they were not aware of amendments 5 and 6 to section 2 (f) of the bill as it appears printed in the RECORD this morning. It is this revised and amended text of H. R. 7154, of course, and not the printed draft of H. R. 7154, as introduced, which has been offered today as a substitute for title I of the administration's economic-securities bill.

To the printed draft of H. R. 7154 I think the objections of these able gentlemen were valid and to the point, but it is my opinion that the amendments I have referred to have met these objections and that no question can now be properly raised as to the complete and equitable distribution of the tax burden imposed by this bill.

Some question has been raised as to the amount of revenue which a 2-percent transaction tax, such as is contemplated under the revised bill, would provide. It has been contended that we do not know just how much that revenue will amount to, and that therefore we cannot calculate what the amount of the pension will be. I am perfectly willing to admit that, but I do not admit that that is a valid objection to the bill. No one can tell in advance of the actual levy and collection of an entirely new kind of tax just how much that tax will raise. Before the first Federal income-tax bill was passed it was admittedly impossible to estimate accurately the revenue to be expected from it. This has been true of every new tax bill. It was largely for that very reason that the revised McGroarty bill, unlike the original bill, does not undertake to prescribe the amount for the monthly pension. The bill simply provides that out of the revenue raised by the 2-percent tax on transactions, together with the other minor taxes provided in the bill, the pensions shall be paid, pro rata monthly, to those eligible to receive them under the bill. I do not contend that the bill is perfectly drawn in this respect. My own preference would have been to specify such a pension for the first year as could have been ascertained with certainty from the expert testimony given on this point by Dr. Doane before the Ways and Means Committee—page 1120 of the hearings. However, I did not draft the bill, and I certainly do not expect this or any other great piece of controversial legislation to conform to every idea that I may personally have on the subject.

And now in this connection I want to make an important observation. It is this: There has been entirely too much controversy as to the probable amount of the pension to be paid under this bill. The amount of the pension to be paid during the first year or two of the operation of this law, if the revised McGroarty bill becomes law, is not, in my opinion, very important at this time. I know that many at first will differ with me in this, but further consideration, I am sure, will persuade those very people to concur in this opinion. The important thing is not to get a law which will immediately pay a fixed pension large enough to satisfy everybody. Great legislation such as this is not made that way. The important thing here and now is to get the fundamental principle of this bill enacted into law and to set up the tax machinery to finance it. That fundamental principle, as I have so often repeated, is to provide a pension for everyone who has reached the age where he ought to retire in an amount sufficient to enable him to retire in complete comfort and in peace of mind, so that he may be freed entirely from the necessity of competition, and so that he may safely turn over the job he now holds to a younger man who is out of a job and who is being kept out of that job largely because it is necessary for the old worker to hold on to it as long as he can in order to live.

This, and not the precise amount of the pension, is the fundamental principle, the dominant idea, behind this proposed legislation. And when we have enacted that proposal into statutory law, we will have accomplished two great things which have never yet been accomplished in the whole history of the world. We will have changed the period of old age from a period of fear and want and despair into that period of happiness and blessedness which the Creator surely meant it to be. That is what this bill will do from the humanitarian angle of it. Upon its economic side it will take the greatest step toward the solution of our unemployment problem that has ever been taken, because it will immediately and automatically release millions of jobs to the young people of our Nation who now, through no fault of their own, find themselves without work while they are still living in the period of their greatest economic usefulness.

Therefore, I want to say again that whether the revised McGroarty bill will furnish an immediate pension as large as some have claimed or hoped for is not at all the important thing at this particular time. The important thing is that this pension, which will at least be an adequate one, will actually enable the old people of our country to cease competition and to retire. And this great purpose, having once been actually translated into law, that law can be amended at any subsequent session of the Congress so as to fix the pension at whatever figure experience and good judgment may then show that the tax proposed in this bill can properly and safely sustain.

I come now to the question of the tax itself, and although this is the most controversial feature of the bill it is my intention to discuss it only briefly. It has already been thoroughly discussed and everyone, I believe, knows what it is.

The objection advanced against the transaction tax is that it is a multiple sales tax and that a sales tax is wrong in principle because it does not assess the taxpayer in accordance with his ability to pay.

I answer that objection first, by admitting that for purposes of general revenue for ordinary governmental purposes the sales tax is not an equitable tax, because under it the poor man is more heavily burdened than the rich man. This is because the poor man must spend everything he makes in order to live while the rich man needs to spend only a portion of his income for that purpose. But I contend that this objection is valid only when the sales tax is used for the general revenue-raising purposes. When it is used for a specific and exclusve purpose, for the purpose of financing a necessary and indispensable activity outside of the usual and ordinary functions of government, then this objection largely disappears, because then the tax is used for the direct and special benefit of those who pay it.

There are many examples of the truth of the statement I have just made. I will cite you only one; that of the gasoline tax, which is purely and simply a sales tax. The sales tax on gasoline in most States amounts to a tax of from 20 percent to 25 percent of the retail price of the gasoline. No one would tolerate such a tax for general governmental purposes. But the gasoline tax is paid by motorists, for whose benefit the roads are built, and it is used exclusively for road building. Without the gasoline-sales tax the motorist knows his automobile would be useless to him. Therefore he willingly pays the tax, which is several times as high as the tax contemplated in the revised McGroarty bill, because he derives the entire benefit of the tax he pays. I venture to say that the most outspoken opponent of the general sales tax—and I, myself, happen to be one of them—would not for a moment consider doing away with the gasoline sales tax, or even reducing it in any considerable amount.

The same reason that makes the gasoline-sales tax desirable and necessary for the special and exclusive purpose of road building makes such a tax as the transaction tax desirable and necessary for the financing of this new and special and necessary governmental activity, which is for the direct and special benefit of those who pay the tax, and without which tax the benefit cannot be given.

The objection to the tax feature of this bill is a fundamental objection, of course, but I think a complete answer can be given to that objection by asking this question: Is the benefit to be derived by the taxpayer from this bill great enough and necessary enough to warrant the tax burden which it must necessarily impose upon the taxpayer? If it is, then the objection fails, no matter what the objector may think of this particular tax, because without some special tax of this kind it would be impossible to raise enough revenue to finance any comprehensive adequate Federal old-age pension. To finance it by raising the rates on existing taxes would more than double those rates, because the financing of adequate pensions will require as much money annually as the entire present Federal tax revenue.

Therefore if it be once conceded that we should have an adequate Federal old-age pension system, and nearly everyone now does concede that, then we must provide for its financing; and to do that we must of necessity employ a tax which is capable of raising the necessary revenue. Since no other tax entirely capable of doing this has as yet been proposed, or appears likely to be proposed, it follows as a matter of ordinary logic that this is the tax which should be employed.

And who pays the tax under this bill? Obviously everybody pays it. Who directly benefits by paying the tax? Again everybody, because everybody living in the United States, no matter what his age, will be eligible to the benefits of the act, if he needs them, when he reaches the eligible age. And please do not forget in this connection that experience has already demonstrated that 90 percent of the American people now living will need its benefits when they arrive at that age. That is a plain, cold statistical fact which should give pause to everyone in his consideration of this bill.

It has been argued here that this bill is a tax on poverty. I do not agree with that, nor do I think such a contention can reasonably be sustained. It is a tax upon the rich and the poor alike. But to those who say that the poor will pay most of the tax because they constitute the great majority of our population, because they make up the major portion of the ultimate consumers, and because they must spend all they earn in order to live, I reply that it is the poor who will most surely be the direct beneficiaries of this bill. I reply also that it is not the poor who are objecting to the taxing features of the bill. And if the poor themselves do not object to being taxed for the purpose of insuring to themselves a little comfort and happiness when finally they enter upon the twilight of the evening of their lives, surely no one else should be heard to raise his voice against it.

I wish it were possible to find a tax which the very poor did not have to pay at all, but no one, I am sure, believes that this is possible. It is the poor who have always been really taxed, regardless of what the form of taxation has been. The great-income taxpayers, for example, have always managed to pass along most of the tax to the consumer, although the tax the income-tax payer pays is merely a tax upon his profits. Even this tax he passes on to the ultimate consumer who, as has truly been said, is for the most part poor. Throughout all history that has been the case. The rich always have been few. Always the poor have been multitude. From the beginning the poor have carried upon their backs the burden of the world. They still carry it. They have fought its battles, they have created its wealth, they have paid its taxes, and as their reward they have died, as they have lived, still poor. I say this has always been so. But has not the time now come to inquire whether it must continue to be so forever? Is there always to be no hope, no reward, no surcease from the never-ending toil of the masses of our people?

Mr. Chairman, for the first time in the history of legislation I see in this bill the hope that the age-long burden of the poor may be lightened, at least toward the end of the journey. This bill does not propose to make the poor man rich. It does not propose, as has mockingly been said, to make spendthrifts of the aged. It does not propose to bring about any revolutionary change in our economic system. It does not propose to take away wealth from anyone. But it does propose and it does undertake to insure to all the people of the United States, no matter how poor they may be, that when they have reached that age in life where they are no longer fitted by nature to continue the strenuous fight for existence that they shall receive back something of the wealth they have already created as their reward and their due for having created it. It does undertake to say to them that when, by virtue of their years, the time comes for retirement that they shall be entitled to retire as a matter of right and that their retirement shall be one of comfort and security.

It undertakes to liberate from the minds of all the devastating fear of poverty in their declining years and to bless those years with the sunshine of peace and happiness. And while doing all this it undertakes, at the same time, a rational effort to solve at least a part of the vital problem of unemployment, which must be solved if the Nation is to endure, but which all the billions expended and all the volumes of legislation of the past 2 years have as yet failed to accomplish.

A bill having such things as these for its goal and purpose must, in my opinion, ultimately become law. I believe this bill will go far toward accomplishing these ends, and I consider myself fortunate, therefore, in having the opportunity to support it upon its initial introduction in the Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this amendment presented by Mr. MONAGHAN and known as the "McGroarty old-age-pension plan." I regret that, as a Member of this House, I shall be forced to vote on this bill as a whole, which attempts to legislate, as it does, on so many different social features. I know that the people whom I have the honor to represent favor some of the legislation embraced in this measure and are opposed to others. I believe until this Congress can be induced to give this country a good, workable, adequate money system to supply the needs of the country that we must resort to some recovery measure of this kind. I am in favor of a national old-age pension. I am in favor of a pension plan that will pay as it goes. I am also in favor of a national old-age pension plan modeled somewhat along the lines that we use to pay our ex-service men—with money raised by taxation and paid to the beneficiaries by the National Government. The pension system that is being followed by the National Government in caring for our ex-soldiers is successful. If the men and women of the generation that is passing—who have brought forth the present generation and endowed it with the wealth and institutions of this great country—are to be safeguarded in their declining years in security and comfort and ease, our National Government must come to their assistance by enacting a liberal national old-age pension law that will provide for their care.

Mr. Chairman, I have read the social-security bill that we have been discussing the last few days from one end to the other, and I believe it is not feasible, that it is impracticable and unworkable, and will not do the things which it is designed to do.

For these reasons I am in favor of and shall vote for the McGroarty revised old-age pension plan.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TRUAX. Is an amendment to the amendment now pending in order at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KRAMER to the amendment: Page 8, line 12, after the word "of", strike out $2,400 and insert in lieu thereof "$1,200", and in line 18, strike out "$2,400" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,200."

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment. As I understand the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana, it consists of the text of the bill as printed upon page 5888 of the RECORD. There is no provision for $2,400, or any other amount in the text of that amendment.

Mr. KRAMER. If the gentleman from Oregon will read the bill he will see it refers to $2,400. It accepts the amount on page 8 and says that the person who receives a pension will be eligible to receive $2,400.

Mr. MOTT. I make the point of order that language is not in there at all.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The $2,400 is not in the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. MICHENER. Two thousand four hundred dollars is not mentioned in the amendment which we are to vote on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe it is necessary to make a lengthy speech for the benefit of my constituents, as the good people back in my home community know very well how I feel now and how I have always felt toward an old-age pension. The people in the Thirteenth District of California know that this has been my most earnest desire for more than 3 years, and I want to emphasize the fact again—just as I did during my last campaign and the campaign 2 years before that—that I am heartily in favor of an old-age pension, and it, therefore, gives me great pleasure to support the McGroarty amendment to the Doughton bill, known as the "social-security bill", which is now under consideration in the House of Representatives.

Although there are some provisions in the McGroarty bill, which is now being offered as an amendment, many of my good colleagues have stated that no bill is perfect when it reaches the floor of the House. However, the thing that is confronting our Nation today is the fact that we must sometime commence to take care of our aged, our helpless children, and others who are unable to provide for themselves. There is no better time than the present to start this great humanitarian work which has been promulgated by our great President during the last session of Congress, as well as during this session of Congress.

I exceedingly regret, however, that I cannot agree with the members of the Ways and Means Committee in the enactment of the present bill without the McGroarty amendment just submitted, because the amount set forth in this bill in the way of pension, benefits, or whatever you may choose to call it, is wholly inadequate to provide for a decent and comfortable subsistence for our aged.

And may I also add that the age limit is too high in this bill. There are any number of men and women today who are holding positions but who are wholly unfit to do so—they should be retired and allowed to enjoy their declining years in peace and quiet, and also to make room for the younger generation who needs these positions. A man or woman should not be obliged to work up until their last day, but should have the security of a decent income so that they may enjoy their old age and get the pleasure out of life that was meant for all of us—rich and poor alike—without any discrimination.

There are a great many portions of the committee bill which have excellent humanitarian and meritorious qualities, and I know that the committee—the chairman of which I hold only in the highest esteem and respect—are anxious to enact a fair and acceptable bill; but, as expressed by some of the ranking members of the minority side of the House, it does not take care of the immediate needs of our aged.

I am in no way criticizing the committee for the manner in which they have submitted this bill, as I know they have labored unselfishly and untiringly night after night for more than 90 days in order to bring out the best bill which would be applicable to the needs of our old people and one which would pass the House. But I do not feel that I can support the bill in its present form, and I am therefore taking the floor today in support of the McGroarty bill as an amendment to title no. 1.

Mr. Chairman and Members, it behooves us to do that which is only right, decent, and proper to repay these old people for their labors and sacrifices through the years. We have prescribed and supported many other ventures throughout the country to take care of the needs of the unfortunate. Why cannot we do as much for our old folks who have given their all for the younger generation? We have been very liberal in appropriating money for other purposes, and I think that now is the time for us to do that humanitarian act and provide for the mothers and fathers in order that they may enjoy the short span of life that is before them.

I know there is no Member in this House who would not reach down in his own pocket and help some aged man or woman or some helpless child or mother who may be in need, so why not put our thoughts and feelings into legislation at this time and do this one fine and humanitarian thing which none of us will ever regret?

Out in sunny California—the Golden State of the Union—we try to live up to the Golden Rule and do unto others as we would have others do unto us; and I can tell you sincerely that the cries of the aged throughout the Nation reach to the heavens above for the Members of Congress to vote for a fair old-age pension plan.

As I said before, the passage of this legislation at this time will not only be a great aid to the aged but will open up opportunities for the younger generation, inasmuch as it will provide additional positions and greatly relieve our unemployment situation.

We must all strive to carry out the American spirit and American principles to enact humanitarian legislation, and not develop a national weakness. We should be fair to all our citizens in every walk of life and, our fairness should not be tainted with any selfishness.

In conclusion, let me say that while this is entirely new legislation, and while we are pioneering, we must give a great deal of consideration to the many problems confronting us relative to the passage of this bill. I therefore sincerely hope and pray that every one of you men here will open up your hearts and support this legislation.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may state to the gentleman from Ohio that there is an amendment pending to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MONAGHAN], therefore the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, being an amendment in the third degree, would not be in order.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, in looking at the print, copy of which was offered as an amendment, now pending before the House, and which is supposed to be a duplicate of the text as printed in this morning's RECORD, I notice that it does not eliminate the $2,400. May I ask now if it would be in order to ask unanimous consent that the print which is in the hands of the Clerk may be amended to conform with the print in the RECORD in that respect, which takes the $2,400 out? If that is in order, I ask unanimous consent that that change may be made.

Mr. KRAMER. That is my amendment.

Mr. MOTT. So that it will conform to the text appearing in the RECORD.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I could not hear just what the unanimous-consent request was.

Mr. MOTT. There is a typographical error appearing in the print now in the hands of the Clerk, which is supposed to be a duplicate copy of the printed text of the revised McGroarty amendment in the RECORD.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I understood the gentleman to say that certain language had been left out of the RECORD.

Mr. MOTT. No; I should have stated it the other way around. The figures $2,400 appear in the text which the Clerk has, but they do not appear in the text as printed in the RECORD.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Is this a fifth Townsend plan?

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman will have to ask the gentleman from California [Mr. BUCK], because he is the authority on the number of revisions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to modify the Monaghan amendment in the respect stated. Is there objection?

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. MOTT. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that the amendment be so modified.

The CHAIRMAN. Such motion would not be in order at this time.

Mr. McGROARTY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I just want a minute or two to answer some things that have been said this morning and have been said before.

The distinguished Chairman of the Rules Committee, my very dear friend Mr. O'CONNOR, has put out not only the innuendo but the statement that the advocates of this bill are playing politics with human misery. The trouble with Mr. O'CONNOR is that he lives among the skyscrapers of New York and does not know the country. If he knew his countrymen as he should, if he should take a trip to California, where he has never been, and meet with people, he would know that no American worthy of the name would play politics with human misery. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGROARTY. I only have 3 minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman is mistaken. I said the Republicans were playing politics with human misery. [Laughter.]

Mr. McGROARTY. Well, I do not believe it. I do not believe that even a Republican would do that. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, let us look this thing in the face. Before you vote on this amendment think twice. Thirty million of your countrymen and countrywomen want this bill enacted into law as amended now in the committee. This is the truth, and do not forget that they are hanging upon every word that is said in this House this morning and upon every vote that is cast. Use your own convictions if you want to—that is what you ought to do—but for God's sake think of these old people, so near to the heart of God, who need your help, and the only way they can get it is through this amended bill. Do not tell me that this social-security bill as presented to this committee means a thing. It means no pension, and you know it. It means nothing. [Applause.]

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, certainly I was a prophet and spoke correctly day before yesterday when I said that the bill then pending before the House bearing the name of the gentleman from California [Mr. McGROARTY] would never be called to the attention of our committee for action.

We have an entirely new one here this morning, or at least, so the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] has said, and he has stated that it answers all the objections which I made to H. R. 7154 the other day, which he was kind enough to say were valid objections.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCK. No.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Will the gentleman, then, support the bill?

Mr. BUCK. The gentleman can judge when I finish these remarks.

I want to call your attention to just what some of these amendments do.

In spite of all the verbiage that is on printed pages 5888, 5889, and 5890 of the RECORD, the objections made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] and myself, that under the proposed McGroarty bill independent operators and small retailers will be penalized at the expense of the large operators have not been met. Section 2 (f) (5) and (6), which is new matter, does not prevent the Atlantic & Pacific Co., or any other chain-store organization, from buying directly from the producer and then through its stores making direct sales to the consumer. They are given the advantage of eliminating the wholesaler and the jobber and thus avoiding from one to three turn-over taxes.

The gentleman from Oregon may think he has this covered by subdivision 7——

Mr. MOTT. No; subdivision 5.

Mr. BUCK. Subdivision 5 does not cover it.

Mr. MOTT. Read it.

Mr. BUCK. I have read it, and in the limited time I have I cannot enter into a debate with the gentleman, and the gentleman knows it; otherwise, I would be pleased to do so.

Mr. MOTT. I shall not interrupt the gentleman further.

Mr. BUCK. I want the gentlemen of the Committee to read the new proposed substitute for title I in the light of the objections I made the other day.

The gentleman from Oregon, in his revised draft, attempted to remove the words "$2,400 per year" in section 4 (e) and substitute "the amount of the annuity to which he would be otherwise entitled under this act." I regret that he was prevented from doing this through a clerical error. But if it had been done and the words "the amount of the annuity to which he would be otherwise entitled under this act" had been substituted, this amendment taken in connection with the proposed elimination in section 6 (c) of the words "not exceeding $200 per month" would permit the payment of pensions up to $1,000 per month or more if the United States Government were fortunate enough to collect that much money. It eliminates all restriction whatever and is even worse than the original Townsend plan.

Furthermore, in connection with the powers granted the Secretary of the Treasury, the gentleman from Oregon, in his amendments, has gone further than ever. He has now given, in section 2 (f), the Secretary of the Treasury power to prescribe what shall constitute a taxable transaction, and the Secretary of the Treasury may determine and prescribe the number of transactions to be taxed, in the course of the production, distribution, or sale of any article or commodity.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman should yield there, Mr. Chairman.

The regular order was demanded.

Mr. BUCK. The amendments attempt to remove, and have removed successfully, my objection to the tax being laid on the amount of any mortgage on a farm when sold, but this amendment does not remove the objection that if a man who has an automobile and has a chattel mortgage on it, or if a man who owns any other personal property with a chattel mortgage, or if a man who has a lien against his livestock, who sells, will have to pay a tax on the lien on such chattel.

This is still one of the most vicious multiple-tax propositions that has ever been presented to the House.

The gentleman from California, the kindly gentleman, Mr. MCGROARTY, spoke to you about 30,000,000 people having endorsed this proposition. Good God, has any one human being had time to endorse this proposition that is presented to you to vote upon here today? I have been trying diligently throughout the course of these hearings to secure some concrete proposal that might make sense, and have it debated, but no one can pin the Townsend supporters down to any stable plan. It changes over night. But even this changed plan cannot overcome the fundamental objectives.

Everyone knows that so far as I am concerned I have been one of the advocates of the most liberal old-age-pension systems that can be adopted, but this, Mr. Chairman, is not an old-age-pension system. It is just as the organizers of the Townsend plan have described it, an attempt to work an economic revolution, and as I told you day before yesterday in the committee, the revolution that will be worked will not be the economic revolution that the proponents of the plan desire, but within 6 months after such a bill was passed there would be a revolution on the part of every worker in this country against the bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. KRAMER] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MONAGHAN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 13, strike out all of section 2 and insert a new section, as follows:

"Funds to provide for the purposes of this act shall be obtained by a capital-tax levy on all individual fortunes of $1,000,000 and over, on all inheritances and gifts, on all individual and corporation incomes of $5,000 a year and over."

The CHAIRMAN. All time having expired, the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MONAGHAN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MONAGHAN, Mr. MCGROARTY, and others) there were—ayes 56, noes 206.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, following the enacting clause, insert the following as a new title.

"GRANTS TO STATES FOR OLD-AGE ASSISTANCE

"APPROPRIATION

"SECTION 1. For the purpose of enabling each State to furnish financial old-age assistance there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $250,000,000, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year thereafter a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of this title. The sums made available under this section shall be used for making payments to States which have submitted, and had approved by the Social Security Board established by title VII (hereinafter referred to as the 'Board'), State plans for old-age assistance.

Any payment so made shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the appropriation for the purposes of this title. Provided, however, There shall be exempt from such lien, claim, or charge against the estate of such recipient the home or homestead of such recipient of a value not to exceed $3,000.

"The benefits under this act shall not be granted to any person who has within 5 years prior to making application for old-age assistance divested himself or herself directly or indirectly of any property for the purpose of defeating or evading the lien herein provided for the repayment of any assistance that may thereafter be given such person.

"(b) The Board shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a), except that it shall not approve any plan which imposes, as a condition of eligibility for old-age assistance under the plan—

"(1) An age requirement of more than 60 years; or

"(2) The qualifications of eligibility and the monthly amount to be paid to each recipient subject to the provisions of this act shall be governed by the laws of the State of residence of such recipient.

"PAYMENT TO STATES

"SEC. 3. (3) From the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has an approved plan for old-age assistance, for each quarter, beginning with the quarter commencing July 1, 1935, (1) an amount, which shall be used exclusively as old-age assistance, equal to twice the total of the sums expended during such quarter as old-age assistance under the State plan with respect to each individual who at the time of such expenditure is 60 years of age or older and is not an inmate of a public institution, not counting so much of such expenditure with respect to any individual for any month as exceeds $30, and (2) 3 percent of such amount, which shall be used for paying the costs of administering the State plan or for old-age assistance, or both, and for no other purpose.

"(b) The method of computing and paying such amounts shall be as follows:

"(1) The Board shall, prior to the beginning of each quarter, estimate the amount to be paid to the State for such quarter under the provisions of clause (1) of subsection (a), such estimate to be based on (A) a report filed by the State containing its estimate of the total sum to be expended in such quarter in accordance with the provisions of such clause, and stating the amount appropriated or made available by the State and its political subdivisions for such expenditures in such quarter, and if such amount is less than one-third of the total sum of such estimated expenditures, the source or sources from which the difference is expected to be derived, (B) records showing the number of aged individuals in the State, and (C) such other investigation as the Board may find necessary.

"(2) The Board shall then certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount so estimated by the Board, reduced or increased, as the case may be, by any sum by which it finds that its estimate for any prior quarter was greater or less than the amount which should have been paid to the State under clause (1) of subsection (a) for such quarter, except to the extent that such sum has been applied to make the amount certified for any prior quarter greater or less than the amount estimated by the Board for such prior quarter.

"(3) The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon, through the Division of Disbursement of the Treasury Department and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, pay to the State, at the time or times fixed by the Board, the amount so certified, increased by 3 percent.

"(4) Nothing in this act shall be construed as limiting the amount any State may pay as old-age assistance in excess of said total sum of $30 per month.

"(5) Provided, however, That there shall be paid to all persons by the United States Government over the age of 60 years, who are citizens of and residing in the United States, commencing with the date of their eligibility, but not after June 30, 1937, who are now or who may hereafter be placed upon the public welfare rolls or who are receiving or may receive any aid or assistance from the Federal Government, State government, or any political subdivision thereof, the sum of $60 quarterly, commencing with the quarter starting July 1, 1935, until the State of the residence of such recipient enacts appropriate old-age-pension legislation in conformance with and to obtain the benefits of this act.

"OPERATION OF STATE PLANS

"SEC. 4. In the case of any State plan for old-age assistance which has been approved by the board, if the board, after notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of such plan, finds—

"(1) That the plan has been so changed as to impose any age, residence, or citizenship requirement prohibited by section 2 (b), or that in the administration of the plan any such prohibited requirement is imposed, with the knowledge of such State agency, in a substantial number of cases; or

"(2) That in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with any provision required by section 2 (a) to be included in the plan, the board shall notify such State agency that further payments will not be made to the State until the board is satisfied that such prohibited requirement is no longer so imposed and that there is no longer any such failure to comply. Until it is so satisfied it shall make no further certification to the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to such State.

"ADMINISTRATION

"SEC. 5. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $250,000 for all necessary expenses of the board in administering the provisions of this title.

"DEFINITION

"SEC. 6. When used in this title, the term 'old-age assistance' means money payments to aged individuals."

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman from Nevada yield?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. I yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nevada?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, there are many Members of this Congress who have a sincere and profound conviction that the pending committee measure to promote social security, as now drawn, is entirely inadequate to fulfill its purpose.

As a representative of this group, I first wish to express appreciation of the splendid spirit of fairness manifested by Speaker BYRNS and the House leadership, particularly the Chairman of the Rules Committee and the membership of the Ways and Means Committee, in giving us an open rule and permitting full discussions.

The essential features of this proposed amendment, which are largely the suggestions and ideas of the able Congresswoman from Arizona, may be enumerated as follows:

(a) Pensions are provided to be immediately available to those over the age of 60 now actually on the relief rolls, without the indefinite wait for enabling State legislation. With the exception of in a very few States, the prospect of any early relief for the aged under the terms of the Ways and Means Committee bill is a snare and a delusion. Disappointment and resentment on part of the proposed beneficiaries should not be invited, as in the pending committee measure.

(b) The next major point in which my amendment differs from the committee print is in the reduction of the required State contribution to a ratio of $10 to $20, instead of $15 to $15, and the eligibility and total amount to be paid is controlled by the State. Having possession of the power to coin money and to regulate the value thereof, it is only proper that the Federal Government assume the major monetary burden in the case. The tendency to drain the fluid wealth of the country into the great financial centers makes it impossible to have an equality of taxation between the States. Their resources for raising money are comparatively limited. The National Government should pay at least two-thirds of the cost of the old-age pensions.

The severe economic calamity from which we are just emerging is national in scope, and its mitigation is primarily a national and not a State responsibility.

(c) The next modification of the committee bill is in the authority to appropriate $250,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, instead of the sum of $49,750,000. The latter amount is insufficient to give the relief intended.

(d) No pauper's oath is required. In case a beneficiary leaves an estate, it is made mandatory for the State to levy thereon an amount equal to the pension benefit paid, however, exempting a home or homestead up to the value of $3,000.

(e) This amendment also compels the withdrawal of the pension beneficiary from the field of competitive employment.

(f) The State is given the right to exceed the $30 per month pension if desired, the Federal contribution remaining at $20 per month.

Recapitulating, this amendment markedly improves the committee measure, in that it actually provides an immediate pension for the aged, instead of an imaginary one, reduces the burden on the States, simplifies procedure, eliminates pauper oaths, and makes provision for refund of moneys paid to pensioners leaving estates. I trust that the amendment will prevail. [Applause.]

Mrs. GREENWAY. Mr. Chairman, those of you who have been courteous enough and have had the time to read the proposed amendment, must realize that its purpose and its method of administration are those of the bill that we are considering from the Ways and Means Committee. The language, in principal part, is the same. We wrote that deliberately for this reason. A great many of us in this House believe that the bill that we are considering and we are going to have to vote on shortly will not give to the old and destitute people of this country at this time anything whatever for practically 2 years. I have spent much time to try to present to you something that is reasonable enough to merit the support of the most conservative, something that is right, although inadequate, and something that will conform to all of our State problems, and that the Committee on Ways and Means itself will concede, because our purpose is the same as the bill that has been reported to this House, namely, to give pensions to the aged.

We are dealing with people who are perfectly helpless. Who today, who is destitute and over 60 years of age, can help himself or herself? No one. We are not considering the distribution of wealth. We are considering the distribution of necessities of life that, in the language of the bill, ought to create "decency and health." The committee bill is written in such a way that most of the States cannot benefit therefrom until they have passed State legislation conforming to this bill. In many States that actually means a constitutional amendment to their State constitution and this cannot be obtained in any but a regular session of the State legislature. That puts off for 2 solid years our ability to function under this law and the aged will receive no pension meantime. The purpose and the administration of this amendment are like the bill that we are considering. I want to be honest, and not evasive. We have changed the years from 65 to 60 years, and have done that because I have in my files letters from departments of this Government saying that a man of 45 is too old to work.

What is going to happen to the people between 50 and 65 years of age? We have changed the matter of relief from 50–50 to one-third to two-thirds, the States to contribute one-third and the Government two-thirds. The argument against that is: What about the States that will pay the bill for the States that have not got the money to meet their share? Let us be honest. I can afford to be honest and proud. We try to take care of our old people in Arizona as best we can. We pay $30 a month under certain conditions. Do you not think that the people of the United States generally who have developed the wealth in congested districts in some measure, thus fabricating the natural resources of the country, should care for the numerically few people in States like Oklahoma, for instance—wind-swept at this time, the very earth itself leaving the farms? Cannot we people throughout the United States who are better off afford to take care of the comparatively few thousand people in a place like Oklahoma and the other States which at the moment are hard up, but which over the history of time may come to be among the most wealthy States in the Union?

In this proposed amendment we do what may appear to be a very drastic and a very liberal thing, but it is a very deliberate thing. We make it compulsory that everybody applying shall give up gainful occupation, and that all people over 60 shall receive this pension. This is in order to avoid the overhead of bookkeeping and investigation. However, on the death of the recipient the amount received is refunded in its proportion to the State and the Federal Governments, and is held as a lien against their estate, with the exception of the home or homestead in which they live, and the pension is not a lien against that home. Also, under the amendment you can operate on a 5-acre farm, if you are not gainfully employed by selling your products for profit, and receive the benefits of such pension.

I congratulate the House on having taken even 20 hours to consider a bill that has to do with 45 years, and generations, possibly to enternity. It involves $56,000,000,000, as I can read it. I ask you from the bottom of my heart to consider the merits of what I have given you, and to so vote that the people today who are receiving relief can be transferred to pensions in their helplessness until the State legislatures convene to conform to the provisions of the committee bill.

Mr. EKWALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EKWALL to the amendment offered by Mr. SCRUGHAM: After the word "exceeds", on page 3, in line 26, strike out "$30" and insert in lieu thereof "$45"; on page 4, line 27, strike out "$30" and insert in lieu thereof "$45"; in line 36, on the same page, strike out "$60" and insert in lieu thereof "$90."

Mr. EKWALL. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in accord with the amendment which has been offered by my good friend, Governor SCRUGHAM, of Nevada, and the gentlewoman from Arizona, Mrs. GREENWAY, who are sponsoring the proposed amendment; but I am going a little farther than they. We are all from the West, where possibly our needs are different than in some of the other sections of the country.

I believe the age limit of the pensioners should be reduced to 60 years, and I believe that the monthly payment of the Federal Government should have a limit of $30, rather than $20, as provided in the proposed amendment.

I also believe that the provisions which require the States to meet this payment with one half as large should be deferred until the time set out in the proposed amendment, namely, June 30, 1937. Therefore, I have proposed this amendment providing that each quarter year the recipient shall receive $90 rather than $60.

I yield to no one in this House or anywhere else in my interest in the aged people of this country. I believe, however, that we should give them a law which will be operative, one which we have reason to believe the President will approve and sign, and which will do them some good immediately. I am heartily in favor of increasing these figures as herein outlined. I believe if we can raise the Federal contribution to $30 a month and a provision is made that the States would not be required to match more than half that amount, those States which could match it fully or go beyond the required sum could certainly have the privilege of doing so and making the lot of their people that much better.

I believe this bill, if it is amended as proposed by my amendment to the amendment offered by Governor SCRUGHAM, will empty the poorhouses of this country and will bring a reasonable measure of security to our deserving aged people. I believe it will do many of the things that have been claimed for other bills which have been proposed. I have no quarrel with any of them. I am doing what I consider my duty, trying to use my efforts on behalf of the best bill that, I think, we can pass at this session of Congress and have approved by the President. I hope the men and women in this Chamber will give very serious consideration to this question of raising the Federal contribution and of lowering the age limit to 60 years.

I agree with the gentlewoman from Arizona when she says that many people are cast off long before they become 60 years of age. We certainly must do everything reasonably possible to meet this crisis and to provide a bill which in a practicable manner will really aid the people of this country. When we have finished our deliberations on this bill we should have the conviction that we have done everything possible for the aged people at this time under these circumstances, considering the financial condition of the country. It would be a movement forward, and from time to time we could improve on the law in the light of experience gained from its operation.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EKWALL. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. Does not the gentleman feel that the best feature of the pending amendment is that it provides for immediate benefits to old people?

Mr. EKWALL. Yes. I thought I made that clear in supplementing the remarks of the lady from Arizona. These payments will begin immediately without the necessity of the State legislatures having to convene in order to pass laws to synchronize with the provisions of this bill. It will be a godsend to the people of this country. Let us give them help now when they need it. I think now is the time to aid them with something that is really substantial, practical, and which in all probability will meet Executive approval.

Mr. WOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EKWALL. I yield.

Mr. WOOD. Referring to subsection 5 of section 3 of the amendment, is it the gentleman's opinion that all persons over 60 years of age, who are in need and can qualify with reference to their needs, will immediately start drawing $60 a quarter pension?

Mr. EKWALL. Ninety dollars.

Mr. WOOD. With the gentleman's amendment, $90?

Mr. EKWALL. Yes.

Mr. WOOD. Now, what about the States which have old-age pension laws and have their regulations, providing, for instance, that they must be citizens for 5 years at least?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. EKWALL] has expired.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD. There are 29 States that have old-age pension laws——

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Is the discretion of recognition in the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. It always is.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The question is, Mr. Chairman, how the time is to be divided. The time was limited to 30 minutes.

Mr. WOOD. I only asked that he be given 1 additional minute to answer my question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the fact that the time is limited, but when the gentleman asked for 1 additional minute, if the gentleman from Washington had any objection, he had the right to object at that time.

Mr. WOOD. The only thing I want to get clear in my mind is this: There are 29 States which have old-age pension laws now. They have requirements that those old people must be citizens for at least 5 years. How is this amendment going to affect them?

Mr. EKWALL. This amendment will not have an effect on any State law until the waiting period for State participation is over, at which time the State provisions would have to conform to the Federal provisions contained herein.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has again expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I speak for the committee and in opposition to the substitute and the amendment thereto. I want to say personally that I am sorry the good lady from Arizona [Mrs. GREENWAY] did not appear before the committee when the committee was holding public hearings.

Mrs. GREENWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; I yield.

Mrs. GREENWAY. I had no bill to offer. I only wanted to offer an amendment. I had to wait until I could see the bill which the committee reported and study it.

Mr. McCORMACK. I repeat, I am sorry the gentlewoman from Arizona did not appear before the committee with or without a bill to contribute to the committee evidence to which the members of the committee might give consideration when it went into executive session.

This substitute is suddenly offered. Nobody knows its contents. Somebody takes the floor and tells us it means an increase to $20, and somebody else tells us it means a reduction of $10 by a State. It contains some words to that effect. The age limit is reduced from 65 to 60, and the appropriation is increased from $50,000,000 for the first year to $250,000,000. No committee of the House has considered the plan which is offered as a substitute. Nobody knows how many people over 60 are on welfare in this country. We do know, however, there are approximately 1,000,000 people on the welfare list of the country who are 65 or over.

Mrs. GREENWAY. The welfare agencies can furnish statistics as to how many on relief are over 60 and how many are over 65.

Mr. McCORMACK. How many are over 60?

Mrs. GREENWAY. Just a little under 1,000,000; and their names and addresses are contained in the welfare catalogs.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentlewoman from Arizona states that there are a little less than 1,000,000 on welfare who are 60 years of age.

Mrs. GREENWAY. No; who are over 65.

Mr. McCORMACK. Can the gentlewoman from Arizona give any information as to how many are on the lists who are over 60?

Mrs. GREENWAY. No.

Mr. McCORMACK. That answers my question and my argument. There has been no evidence submitted to this committee as to the number who are on the welfare rolls over the age of 60, and this matter has received no consideration. On the other hand, the Ways and Means Committee have given 3 months to the consideration of this bill.

Mrs. GREENWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I am sorry; I have but a moment left.

In the consideration of this great movement we must not break down our dual system of government. I have great pride in State rights; I have great pride in our States' governments, and I have equally great pride in our Federal Government. This amendment is a step in the direction of the disintegration of our dual system. It provides for a two-thirds contribution by the Federal Government and one-third by the State government. Why not go the whole distance if you want to do this; why not federalize each of the unfortunates of our country rather than have them subject to the jurisdiction of their local government and subject to local sentiment? Why have the social workers from one part of the country go into other parts of the country where they have no knowledge of local conditions or of local sentiment and enter into the family life and dictate the principles of family life in the sections of the country into which they go?

We want local sentiment governing our social service with reference to the unfortunate dependents of our country. I want those who have knowledge of conditions in Massachusetts to administer the law in Massachusetts; and in California, Idaho, and other States I want those administering the laws to be people acquainted with local conditions, persons in whom the people have confidence.

I am speaking for the Committee on Ways and Means. This amendment is not meritorious, is impractical, and unworkable, and the committee hopes it will be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MOTT and Mr. SHORT) there were—ayes 87, noes 165.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CONNERY offers the following amendment: On page 8, before title I, insert the following as a new title:

"TITLE I

"The Secretary of Labor is hereby authorized and directed to provide for the immediate establishment of a system of unemployment insurance for the purpose of providing compensation for all workers and farmers above 18 years of age, unemployed through no fault of their own. Such compensation shall be equal to average local wages, but shall in no case be less than $10 per week plus $3 for each dependent. Workers willing and able to do full-time work but unable to secure full-time employment shall be entitled to receive the difference between their earnings and the average local wages for full-time employment. The minimum compensation guaranteed by this act shall be increased in conformity with rises in the cost of living. Such unemployment insurance shall be administered and controlled, and the minimum compensation shall be adjusted by workers and farmers under rules and regulations which shall be prescribed by the Secretary of Labor in conformity with the purposes and provisions of this act through unemployment-insurance commissions directly elected by members of workers' and farmers' organizations.

"SEC. 2. The Secretary of Labor is hereby further authorized and directed to provide for the immediate establishment of other forms of social insurance for the purpose of providing compensation for all workers and farmers who are unable to work because of sickness, old age, maternity, industrial injury, or any other disability. Such compensation shall be the same as provided by section 1 of this act for unemployment insurance and shall be administered in like manner. Compensation for disability because of maternity shall be paid to women during the period of 8 weeks previous and 8 weeks following childbirth.

"SEC. 3. All moneys necessary to pay compensation guaranteed by this act and the cost of establishing and maintaining the administration of this act shall be paid by the Government of the United States. All such moneys are hereby authorized to be appropriated out of all funds in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated. The benefits of this act shall be extended to workers, whether they be industrial, agricultural, domestic, office, or professional workers, and to farmers, without discrimination because of age, sex, race, color, religious or political opinion, or affiliation. No worker or farmer shall be disqualified from receiving the compensation guaranteed by this act because of past participation in strikes, or refusal to work in place of strikers, or at less than average local or trade-union wages, or under unsafe or insanitary conditions, or where hours are longer than the prevailing union standards of a particular trade or locality, or at an unreasonable distance from home."

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto do close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], just gave as one reason for opposing the previous amendment, his desire to see State rights protected and not to have outside social workers coming into communities and interfering with the lives of the people. I agree with my friend on that proposition.

I call attention to the fact that in the Lundeen bill which I am offering at this time we prevent social workers from going into the States and interfering with the rights of the citizens. Under the Lundeen bill the workers elect their own representatives under the administration of the Secretary of Labor; and so in this bill the people of Arizona, California, Massachusetts, Florida, and every other State, have the say in how they want these funds to be administered. Concerning the bill before the House I have no fault to find with the Ways and Means Committee. That committee worked hard and deserve great credit for that reason.

They said they discussed that bill for 3 months. I want to call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that the Committee on Labor, of which I have the honor to be chairman, has been considering that legislation for 15 years. We have considered old-age-pension legislation, unemployment insurance, maternity care, child-welfare care, and every phase of legislation contained in this bill, and as a result of 15 years of study by the Committee on Labor our committee reported favorably to the House of Representatives by a vote of 6 to 1 of the subcommittee and by a vote of 7 to 6 of the full committee the Lundeen bill which I am offering now as an amendment to the pending bill.

Mr. Chairman, we know all about unemployment insurance from the testimony before our committee in the past 15 years. We know all about old-age pensions. We know who is going to stand the burden of this bill brought in by the Ways and Means Committee before the House. We do not want the poor people of the United States to carry the burden of supporting themselves. We want the tax to come where it ought to come from. The other day in passing the McSwain bill taking the profits out of war, the House adopted an amendment providing for an excess-profits tax of 100 percent in order to take the profits out of war. We are asking you today in the Lundeen bill to take off the burden from the backs of the poor people to stop the big employers, the big money interests of the United States, from exploiting the great masses of the people. You now have the opportunity today to vote for this Lundeen bill in order to take care of the unemployed men and women of the United States, in order to take care of their dependents as well. Do not take the money from the poor by a pay-roll tax, but get the money where it ought to come from, namely, by taxing tax-exempt securities, by taking it from the big swollen fortunes of the United States, from men who do not want to pay the share which they ought to pay toward taking care of those who are responsible for their wealth, the poor, helpless, and exploited masses of the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the amendment. Permit me to call attention of the Members of this House to the fact we are not getting roll calls on these amendments. I cannot understand the frame of mind of these gentlemen in control. I think we should have roll calls on the McGroarty-Townsend amendment, as well as on the amendment presented by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM], so ably supported by the distinguished gentlewoman from Arizona [Mrs. GREENWAY].

Mr. Chairman, we should have a roll call on the amendment presented by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY], the able Chairman of the great Labor Committee. But these amendments are all being voted down one after another and there are no roll calls on any of them. That is what we are objecting to. We ought to have roll calls so that the country may know how we voted on these various measures. The roll call is the best means of ascertaining where we stand.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. The gentleman understands, of course, that we cannot have a roll call in the Committee of the Whole under the rules of the House.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I grant that, but if I had the say and if there were a labor party in control of the House of Representatives, we would have a rule so that the people of America could find out how Congressmen stand on the McGroarty-Townsend bill and on the Lundeen bill, which has been favorably reported by the Labor Committee.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield to the able and courageous gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. We could have had a roll call if they had brought this bill in under a special rule providing for two or more motions to recommit, as was done in the case of the bonus bill. The so-called "generosity" flaunted here this morning is, therefore, a sham, and we are still working under a trick rule.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The gentleman is right, and he reminds me of another matter. I am thinking of the huge appropriations which have been made for the next war, and I am in favor of adequate defense, but we have gone absolutely wild with appropriations of a billion dollars for 1936 to prepare for wars on other continents. At the same time we have no money for the veterans of America. I am for the Patman, so-called, "bonus bill." The administration says we cannot pay that. We ought to do something for the American people. The bill before us provides not a dollar, not a cent, not a nickel, for the twelve or fifteen million unemployed. What are you going to tell your folks back home when the unemployed rise up in the campaign and say, "Where do we come in?" You will have to say to them, "You do not come in." Perhaps they will have something to say to us then.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield to our leader from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. Before the subcommittee the gentleman had some 80 witnesses appear, which witnesses covered every walk of life?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Yes; and some of them were prominent economists of the country, from Bryn Mawr College, Smith College; the College of the City of New York, Johns Hopkins University and from Bradford College.

Mr. CONNERY. And labor?

Mr. LUNDEEN. And labor. I thank the gentleman for his suggestion there. I may be mistaken, but I do not believe there has been a single labor union connected with the American Federation of Labor that has endorsed the administration bill. If so, I would like to have the name of that labor union. Can any of you gentlemen name me one? There seems to be no answer. We have endorsements of thousands of labor unions in this country, American Federation of Labor unions. I refer you to the Senate Finance Committee hearings for the names of the organizations that have endorsed the Lundeen bill—they want unemployment insurance now. They want old-age pensions to commence with the passage of this bill, not in the dim, distant future, when half of these people are dead. We want to do something for the unemployed today, men and women who builded America into a mighty Nation, veterans, farmers, workers, now unemployed; they have a right to exist; they have a right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

THE TOWNSEND PLAN

We just listened to eloquent appeals for the revised Townsend plan, demanding that we give adequate compensation to the aged now—today—and not wait until sometime in the future. The House has seen fit to vote down that proposal. I call attention to the fact that I was the fifth signer on the petition on the Speaker's desk to bring the Townsend plan before this House for discussion. Is there any reason why we should not fully debate so important a plan before this House and have a roll call vote which you are being denied today?

THE GREENWAY PLAN

We have listened to the distinguished lady from Arizona [Mrs. GREENWAY] one of the ablest and most courageous Representatives on the floor of this House, pleading that we do something now for the aged. Meanwhile, the administration bill talks about doing something in the dim and distant future when millions of these aged will have passed from this life, and certainly the proposal of the gentlewoman of Arizona deserves a roll call vote in this House.

You have voted down all of these proposals. You have beaten them back, and you have said to them, "We will not do anything for the aged now. We will not permit you to help the aged today or tomorrow or this year or next year. We will think about doing something for them several years from now."

HOUSE LEADERS DECLARE ADMINISTRATION BILL INADEQUATE

I say to the Members of this House that you will face the voters in 1936, and these aged people will rise up in your audiences and demand from you, "What did you do to bring us adequate, genuine old-age pensions in the Seventy-fourth Congress?" And I predict that they will not be satisfied to hear you say that "We voted something for you for sometime later on—years from now." And remember that the initial appropriation of $49,750,000 has been rated by able men on this floor—Democrats, I might say, notably the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN]—as low as $4.17 per month on the basis of 1,000,000 out of 7,500,000 people who are more than 65 years of age, and $2.08 per month on the basis of 2,000,000 aged people who the gentleman estimates are in need of this relief. The gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] estimates that the initial old-age provision of the administration bill will provide $6.56 per year, 54 cents per month, 1½ cents per day, and even then there are many States in such deplorable financial condition in the midst of this panic that they cannot pay even this pittance, pitiably and utterly inadequate, as provided in the administration bill.

I want Members of this House to know that the Lundeen bill, H. R. 2827, is designed to help all workers, men who toil in the shops and factories and transportation lines of our country; who walk behind the plow; domestic workers, professional and office workers, and all men and women who are unemployed through no fault of their own; and it is designed to begin payment now, not later on, but now; and I say to you gentlemen of this House that we are asking for only $10 per week minimum and $3 per dependent, and that is all. That is the minimum. Oh, you may say, what about the maximum. The maximum is the average wage of the community in which they live, which averages less than $100 a month, as shown by official Government labor statistics. Why gentlemen of the administration were talking here yesterday about $85 a month as not an unreasonable amount.

COST OF PRESENT RELIEF

Harry L. Hopkins, able Federal Emergency Relief Administrator, in a speech published by the President's Committee on Economic Security, page 3, says that—

> We now have 4,600,000 families on relief, and 800,000 single persons in addition.

And he states on the same page, in a prior paragraph, that—

> It is going to cost the American people far more in the future than the proposed $4,000,000,000—perhaps twice four billion—if we keep up this relief.

Why, gentlemen, under the Lundeen bill, we are not asking for any more than the costs of actual adequate relief in the country, but we are asking for it on the basis of equality and on a basis of right. We are demanding it for the working people of these United States, whether they work in an office or in a shop, or on a farm, or in a factory. We are asking for it on the basis of respectability, for upstanding American citizens who do not have to beg for charity. We demand that these American men and women have the right of a pension, of the right of a compensation. For did they not build this country out of a wilderness, and did they not raise the mansions of the rich? Did they not build our factories and financial institutions and great cities here with their own hands and with their technical knowledge? We cannot drive these people into further distress and misery and poverty. Continued relief will tend to destroy their moral fiber and self-respect and tend to make of them medicants who beg for daily aid. That is not Americanism. That is going back to the medieval ages. That is going back to the day of the castles and the barons and the serfs. We want none of that.

"BONUS" PAID INDUSTRIALISTS

We talk about more money for the Army and the Navy, and I am in favor of an adequate defense of the home soil of our country, but we are overreaching ourselves. We are going mad with war preparedness and all at the very moment when we spend a billion for further armaments and battleships for wars to be fought in Europe, Asia, and Africa, we turn on the soldiers who fought and won the last war and tell them, "You shall not have immediate cash payment of your adjusted-service certificates. They shall not be paid until a million or more of you are dead. Then we will think about paying you in 1945." But we did not hesitate to pay the munitions makers, the bankers, and the railroads as soon as war ended when they clamored at the doors of the Capitol for millions and billions.

We promptly paid them. There was no hesitating; they were paid. We did not hesitate to loan to kings and emperors of Europe more than $10,000,000,000 for rehabilitation to put the industries of Europe on their feet so that they could cut our own throats with our own money, and when that interest had been figured into 62 years, and the sum total amounted to $25,000,000,000, we did not hesitate on this floor and in the Senate and in the White House to cancel one-half of that twenty-five thousand million dollars, principal and interest—about the year 1926; and I must say I had no part in that. I opposed these loans to Europe. We canceled, I say, $12,087,667,000; and the kings and emperors and militarists of Europe went us one better. They said: "All right, you canceled half, now we will cancel the other half", and they did just that. We have unloaded from the backs of the European taxpayers twenty-five thousand million dollars, and we have placed that load upon the American taxpayer and he is staggering under that load today.

We did not hesitate to do that, to the everlasting injury and harm of the great American people; but when the aged come to Washington, these men and women who suffered and toiled and struggled to build this great and grand country of ours, then we have no money and then we proceed to talk about passing a camouflage bill that holds up the illusion like some mirage which they see in the distance, and that they ever walk toward and seek to find but never find. In the dim and distant future they are to get an old-age pension, and if they ever get it, if they live long enough to get it; it is going to be as the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] says during the first year $6.26 for each person of the seven and one-half million over 65 years of age in these United States on a first year fixed offer of $49,750,000, which amounts to 54 cents a month, or a little better than 1½ cents a day, for each of the seven and one-half million.

That is something, my fellow citizens and colleagues, to give the aged of the United States so that they can enjoy the blessings guaranteed by the Declaration of Independence: "Life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

PROMINENT LEADERS SUPPORT LUNDEEN BILL

I want you, my colleagues, to remember the words of Congressman WILLIAM P. CONNERY, Chairman of the Labor Committee, on this day. I think his words will ring in your ears long after you have left this hall. I want you to remember the words of Congressman SIROVICH, Chairman of the Patents Committee, who said, page 1602 of the RECORD for February 6, 1935:

I still consider the Lundeen bill as the only bill that would solve the social problem of old-age pensions and the unemployment insurance.

I want you to remember the words of Congressman KENT KELLER, Chairman of the Library Committee of this House, who said, page 5552 of the RECORD for April 12, 1935:

The Lundeen bill is an idea, and it is a broad-gaged idea. It is an idea that is worth the time of any Member on this floor giving attention to, because I am not willing to say it might not hereafter become the ideal plan to be adopted by the American people. * * *

I want you to know that the Authors' League of these United States, the men who write the editorials and the news articles for the great newspapers of the United States—these men have endorsed the Lundeen bill.

I want you to know that professional organizations without number have endorsed H. R. 2827, known as the "workers' bill." I want you to know that thousands of American Federation of Labor local unions, international unions, six State federations of labor, and scores of central labor bodies have endorsed this bill after debate and over the opposition of high officials of the American Federation of Labor. I want you to know that thousands of these American Federation of Labor organizations have endorsed this bill, and I challenge anyone here on the floor today to show me a single union of the American Federation of Labor which has endorsed the administration bill. I may be mistaken. If I am, I want to be corrected now. I have heard of not one single such union, have you?

I want to repeat here the words of William Green, president of the mighty American Federation of Labor of these United States, with millions of members, who, in an article published in Labor for February 5, 1935, stated that the administration bill is "pitiably and utterly inadequate."

What more devastating, destructive, completely annihilating statement can any man make in this country today than that—"pitiably and utterly inadequate"? That is the statement of William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, and I want to say that I am proud today to have the leading labor leader of the House of Representatives, Hon. WILLIAM P. CONNERY, than whom no bolder warrior for the rights of labor ever stood on this floor, leading the fight today in behalf of the Lundeen bill, H. R. 2827, and I am proud to march in the ranks whenever he leads the way.

I want you to see, and I will be glad to show any Member of this House, wires and letters from scores and scores, hundreds and hundreds of great organizations—not just wires and telegrams from various individuals, but from great organizations who have thoroughly debated this measure and who are for this bill, and I will say without hesitation that there is no bill before the Congress today that has been endorsed by so many organizations as has H. R. 2827, known as the "Lundeen workers' unemployment, old-age, and social insurance bill."

OLD-AGE PENSIONS FOR THE DEAD

You have drafted a bill for unemployment insurance. You provide no insurance for those now unemployed. What kind of an unemployment insurance bill is that? Please define that to me. You say this is a bill for the aged, and then you tell the aged that they must wait until they die before they get old-age pensions. You say that you will help the States, when you know that the States are bankrupt and financially wrecked because of the war which gentlemen on this floor and in the Senate and in the White House thrust upon the people of the United States, against their expressed vote in the November 1916 election, when they voted to keep us out of that war. I say that that Congress, and I say that the Government of the United States put the American people into this panic, into this terrific financial disaster and drove our people into this misery and poverty, and I say it is up to the Congress of the United States to pay our aged and unemployed people, and the way to pay these people is to tax the fortunes of the superrich in the United States.

We want a tax on all income figures above $5,000. Leave the little fellow below $5,000 alone, but when a man is earning five or ten thousand, or $25,000, or a million or more, it is time to make him realize that he has a responsibility to the people who made this money for him; for he surely did not create all this wealth himself. He is merely a custodian for this money, which other people sweated and toiled and made for him. He may have been a good manager; he may have had a good business head, but others created the wealth for him. He is merely a custodian of that wealth, and he owes something to the man and the wife and the children of the man who created the wealth for him. I propose to lay a heavy hand of taxation upon these men who shouted for war and who were so "patriotic" in 1917 and who told the soldiers that they could have anything if they would go to Europe and protect their international investments; who told the American people that unless they went to war, the Kaiser and his legions would be marching up Pennsylvania Avenue.

ARE BRITISH MILLIONAIRES MORE PATRIOTIC THAN AMERICAN MILLIONAIRES?

These men are responsible for the terrible tragedy that we are in. I say, let them pay! I say that we have a splendid method of taxation in mind, not an untried method of taxation. It is the British system of taxation. We have a great habit in the United States of trailing along behind the British Government, in recent years, at least, I must say. Now, I propose to follow them at least in one respect, although no one can say that I have been much for legislating in the wake of England—and that is, the British have a system of income and inheritance taxes which they have enforced upon the superwealth of their country, and that system of British taxation if it had been applied to the United States in 1928, it would have yielded us more than $5,000,000,000. This you will find in reading the hearings of the Labor Committee as placed in the RECORD, by noted economists.

We might have collected over five billion, which would have been enough to take care of all of the provisions of the Lundeen bill. It is true that in years subsequent to 1928 their incomes have been somewhat decreased, but I am informed by reliable financial authorities that large incomes have increased in the last 12 months and that wealth is piling up and men are growing richer at this very moment, so I say the time has come to apply the British income-tax and inheritance-tax rates on incomes about $5,000, and the time has come to levy income, inheritance, and gift taxes, so that the Treasury of the United States may have the war funds with which to fight this depression. I want to recall to your minds—and you know that I am telling you the truth—that every dollar of this money that you pay to these people in compensations and pensions will be infused into the arteries of commerce and that it will flow into the channels of trade and stimulate business. Then men will once more in America walk erect, look their fellowmen in the eyes, and stand erect in the sunlight of God, self-respecting American citizens instead of cringing before the relief administrators in front of some counter where some haughty clerk looks them over and passes upon their means test or pauper test—foundations of financial poverty and distress.

The time has come to end this shameful condition in this country, and I say to the ladies and gentlemen here, and I hold all of you good colleagues of mine in high regard, that if we do not solve it and solve it as self-respecting Americans should solve it, we will be given a vacation from the Congress of the United States and an angry citizenship will rise up and send here to these halls men and women who will dare to carry out the wishes of the rank and file and the mass of American voters.

LABOR COMMITTEE HEARINGS REVEAL MERITS OF LUNDEEN WORKERS' BILL

The Committee on Labor, which held hearings on the Lundeen bill, H. R. 2827, reported the measure favorably and without amendment and recommended the passage of the bill.

The hearings commenced on February 4, 1935, and concluded on February 15, 1935, during which time testimony was heard from 80 witnesses who appeared to speak in favor of the bill. The witnesses included seven economists, specialists in the law, social service and relief, women in industry, maternity care, and medical service; 12 representatives of American Federation of Labor local unions, most of whom were delegated by district committees of American Federation of Labor locals representing hundreds of locals; farmers, veterans, unemployed workers, small home- and landowners; a representative of the railroad brotherhoods; representatives of professional workers, including writers, teachers, physicians, architects, engineers, chemists, and technicians; dentists, and many others. All of the above-mentioned witnesses testified as to the wide-spread necessity for genuine unemployment and social insurance and testified in favor of this bill, H. R. 2827.

FEATURES OF THE BILL

The bill provides for the immediate establishment of a system of social insurance to compensate all workers and farmers, 18 years of age and over, in all industries, occupations, and professions, who are unemployed through no fault of their own, and for the entire period of this involuntary unemployment. To prevent the lowering of minimum standards of living, insurance benefits are to be equal to full average wages in the locality; and in no case less than $10 a week, plus $3 for each dependent. Those employed part time who are unable to find full-time employment, are to be paid the difference between their earnings and the prescribed insurance benefit. As a further safeguard of the minimum standards of living, stability of the purchasing power of the insurance payments is to be maintained by requiring the minimum compensation for unemployment to be increased with increases in the cost of living. Administration of the insurance and adjustment of the minimum compensation shall be controlled by unemployment-insurance commissions directly elected by workers' and farmers' organizations under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Labor in conformity with the purposes and provisions of the act.

Similar social insurance would be established by the Secretary of Labor for all workers and farmers who are unable to work because of sickness, old age, maternity, industrial injury, or any other disability.

Moneys necessary to pay the compensation and to administer the act would be paid by the Government of the United States out of funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, increased if necessary by levying additional taxation on inheritances, gifts, and individual and corporation incomes of $5,000 a year and over.

DIFFERENCES FROM OTHER PROPOSALS

This bill differs from other proposals in that (1) it covers all the unemployed for the entire period of their unemployment, whereas other systems limit the occupations covered and the duration of benefits so that numbers of the unemployed who are outside its scope or who have exhausted benefit payments are left dependent upon private charity or public relief; (2) it derives its funds from current taxation instead of from reserves built up through taxation on pay rolls, which inevitably raises prices to the consumers, taxes wages and salaries, directly or indirectly, and by the reserve features complicates the debt-credit structure of the monetary system, thus tending to prolong depression and to create further maladjustment between funds available for investment and money available for consumers' purchasing power; (3) it provides democratic administration by workers' representatives.

WHY SOCIAL INSURANCE IS NEEDED

Testimony summarizing the need for this new form of social insurance showed that the continuation of extensive mass unemployment demands comprehensive action to provide insurance for all workers, in lieu of income from earnings now cut off through long-continued depression. Estimates of present unemployment placed before the committee ranged from 14,000,000 to 17,000,000. Indices of employment and earnings were cited showing that both are still considerably below the level of 1923–33 or 1925–27, but that total earnings are disproportionately low as compared even with the continued low level of employment, indicating a lowering of the purchasing power of the masses. At the same time, output per man per hour has considerably and disproportionately increased, indicating the probability of increase in permanent technological unemployment.

The great and vital need of the unemployed for means with which to buy the necessities of life for themselves and their families is not and cannot be met by the uncertain and inadequate provision for relief. The new proposed work-relief program will, at best, if enacted, provide relief for approximately one-third of the jobless in the United States who are seeking employment. Yet there are at least 20,000,000 persons in this country whose sole or chief source of subsistence is obtained through the program of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration. For these only an assured and immediate social-insurance program can prevent appalling destitution which will permanently undermine standards of living.

Mass unemployment, though unusually long continued and wide-spread in the present crisis, is not an unusual emergency, but has recurred at frequent intervals in this country. Between 1793 and 1925 the number of depressions was 32, with an average period of 4 years from panic to panic. For every year of depression, there was only one and a half years of prosperity. The time has come for definite recognition of the obligation of government and the economic system to insure continuity of income.

The Lundeen bill is a practical proposal. Technicians and scientists agree that the productive capacity of the United States is equal to a far greater measure of security and to far higher standards of living than have yet been established; and science and invention promise to expand this productivity to a higher level if the productive system can be freed from the recurrent burden of industrial depression.

This, however, cannot be achieved merely by rearranging workers' earnings by taxing pay rolls for reserves for future unemployment. The first step is compensation for insecurity by taxing higher incomes, not pay rolls.

As a continuing problem, mass unemployment requires congressional action because of the mandate laid upon Congress by the Constitution to provide for the general welfare. The general welfare is undermined at all points by mass unemployment.

ESTIMATES OF COST OF THE BILL

To determine the cost of the social insurance which would be provided in H. R. 2827 requires several estimates, which should be used with caution. In the first place, the United States has no current basis for ascertaining accurately the number of the unemployed.

The second and more important point requiring caution relates to the estimate of the effect of social insurance upon purchasing power, and its consequent results in decreasing the amount of unemployment through stimulation of reemployment. No experience in this country is available to indicate the extent to which an increase in consumers' purchasing power for those in the lower income groups would stimulate production and increase employment.

If it is assumed, however, that the entire amount of benefits paid under the provisions of this bill would appear in the market as new purchasing power, economists have calculated that 60 percent of this total would become available as wages and salaries. Therefore, on the basis of given average wages and salaries, it can be estimated how many persons could be reemployed, and this would result in a corresponding decrease in the number of unemployed eligible for benefits, and therefore in a reduction of costs.

Having in mind the above cautions, it may be said at once that if there be 10,000,000 unemployed, the annual gross cost, after taking care otherwise of those who should receive old-age pensions and those who are unemployed because of sickness or disability, and eliminating those under 18 years of age, to whom the bill does not apply, would be 8,235,000. Deducting from this the estimated decrease in the cost of unemployment insurance on account of the reemployment of workers following the establishment of a social-insurance program, $6,090,000,000, and adding to it the cost of old-age pensions, sickness, disability, accident, and maternity insurance, and deducting present annual expenditures for relief amounting to $3,875,000,000, we would have a net annual increase for the Federal Government imposed by the provisions of the bill amounting to $4,060,000,000.

If the number of unemployed be equal to the average number estimated as unemployed in 1934, as 14,021,000, then the annual net increase in cost, after deducting present expenditures for relief and estimating the reemployment which would follow adequate social insurance, would be $5,800,000,000.

The estimate of total costs of the program for social insurance under the bill should be compared with the amount that workers have lost in wages and salaries since the beginning of the depression. According to estimates published in the Survey of Current Business for January 1933, total income paid out to labor since 1929 was as follows (in millions):

	1929	1930	1931	1932	1933
Total income	$52,700	$48,400	$40,700	$31,500	$29,300
Loss from 1929		4,300	12,000	21,200	23,400

The total loss to workers in wages and salaries in the first 4 years of the depression has amounted to $60,900,000,000. It is with these huge losses sustained by American workers during these 4 years that the costs of security provided by the bill should be compared. Furthermore, in view of the inadequacy of present relief measures, it must be realized that the cost of truly adequate relief would be the cost of this bill.

SOURCES OF FUNDS

An important difference between H. R. 2827 and other proposals is in the source of funds. Other proposals, including H. R. 4120 and H. R. 7260, the Wagner-Lewis-Doughton bills, depend on the building up of reserves in advance of payment of benefits, these reserves to be secured by a tax on pay rolls. Several serious objections are made to this method. In an article in the Annalist, published by the New York Times on February 22, 1935, by Elgin Groseclose, professor of economics, University of Oklahoma, under the title, "The Chimera of Unemployment Reserves Under the American Money System", attention is called to the provisions in H. R. 4120 in these words:

> The Wagner bill, as introduced in Congress, sets up in the Federal Treasury an "unemployment trust fund" in which is to be held all moneys received under the provisions of the act, and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to invest these moneys, except such amount as is not required to meet current withdrawals, in a defined category of obligations of the United States or obligations guaranteed as to both principal and interest by the United States.

The Annalist article summarizes the objections to these reserves for unemployment insurance as follows:

> (1) Finance reserves can be effective only in cases where contingencies can be calculated and determined by actuarial methods and where these contingencies arise in sufficient regularity to permit the arrangement of reserves in accordance therewith. (2) The incidence of depressions are irregular and unpredictable, and hence defy actuarial procedure. (3) Purchasing power cannot be stored up en masse under our money system, which is a system of debt, rather than metallic circulation. (4) The attempt to create unemployment reserve will intensify booms. (5) Unemployment reserves are incapable of mobilization when needed and any attempt to mobilize them will only result in further intensification of depressions.

Testimony before the Committee on Labor on H. R. 2827 brought out the further objection that a tax on pay rolls is a tax on cost of production which is passed on to the consumer in higher prices to all consumers and to workers in lower wages as well as in higher prices to them as consumers. It tends to reduce rather than to expand purchasing power, causing in itself recurrent industrial depression which arises out of the failure of consumption to keep pace with production, or a disproportion between money available for consumers' purchases and funds available for investment in increased production.

Moreover these reserves, even if they could be accumulated without these disastrous effects upon consumers' purchasing power, and upon the monetary system, would be inadequate to cover more than a fraction of needs. The Commissioner of Labor Statistics and Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER—in radio addresses on March 7—have estimated that if H. R. 4120 had been in effect from 1922 there would have been set aside by 1934 the sum of $10,000,000,000; yet, the figures on the national income published by the Department of Commerce show that in 4 of those years workers lost $60,000,000,000 of wages and salaries. Therefore, even if reserves seem to involve saving the Treasury from obligation, as a matter of fact, they leave unsolved the real problem of protecting workers against the destitution of mass unemployment.

As the only adequate solution of the problem, and to avoid the unsound idea of setting aside reserves, the funds required in H. R. 2827 are made an obligation upon existing wealth and current higher incomes of individuals and corporations. These sources may be indicated as follows:

First. Income taxes of individuals: If the United States were to apply merely the tax rates of Great Britain upon all individual incomes of $5,000 or over, a considerable sum would be available for social insurance. These rates in 1928 would have yielded the Federal Government five and three-fourths billion dollars as against slightly over one billion actually collected. In 1932, a year of low income, we would have collected on the same basis $1,128,000,000, as against the actual receipts of $324,000,000.

Second. Corporation income tax: Compared with other countries also our corporation tax is very low. Taking a flat rate of 25 percent, we would have raised in 1928 the amount of $2,600,000,000 instead of $1,200,000,000.

Third. Inheritance or estates: Here again the United States is very lenient. In 1928 on a total declared gross estate of three and one-half billion dollars, the total collected by Federal and State taxes was only $42,000,000, or a little over 1 percent. If an average of 25 percent were taken this would have been raised in 1928 to $888,000,000.

Fourth. Tax-exempt securities: Exact figures on the total are not available, but here is an important source of large additional returns which should be available for the general welfare.

Fifth. Tax on corporate surplus: In 1928 the corporate surplus, representing the accumulation by corporations of funds which had not been distributed to labor and capital amounted to $47,000,000,000, and even in 1932 it was over thirty-six billions. Made possible as it is by the cooperation of labor and capital, thus surplus which is now set aside to meet capital's claims for exigencies certainly should be also a source of funds for labor's social insurance in the exigencies of unemployment. The Department of Commerce has showed in its study of the national income that labor has lost a larger percentage of its earned income in the depression than capital has lost in interest charges, because capital has been sustained by drawing both on current income and on accumulated surplus. The great economist, Adam Smith, 150 years ago, called the industrial system a "collective undertaking." It is both logical and just to provide a tax on corporate surpluses as a source for social insurance.

THIS BILL IS UNQUESTIONABLY CONSTITUTIONAL

This bill provides for the appropriation of Federal moneys out of the Treasury of the United States for the payment of compensation to the unemployed, the sick, the disabled, and the aged. It is simply an exercise of the appropriating power, the power of Congress to spend money. The bill does, indeed, do more than provide for appropriations; it provides for the setting up of the administrative machinery. But the appropriating power of Congress necessarily carries with it the incidental power to provide administrative machinery for disbursing the moneys appropriated and for insuring their proper application to the purposes sought to be achieved by Congress.

One of the enumerated powers set forth in the Constitution is the power of Congress to "lay and collect taxes, pay debts, and provide for the common defense and the general welfare of the United States." To limit this power to spend moneys for the "general welfare", the power to spend money for the execution of other enumerated powers, is to rob the "general welfare" clause of its meaning, and thus to violate an elementary principle of constitutional construction. Such distinguished constitutional authorities as Washington, Madison, Monroe, Hamilton, Calhoun, and Justice Story have repudiated the conception of an appropriating power limited by the other powers. Our highest authority, the United States Supreme Court, has, in the famous Sugar Bounty case, definitely upheld appropriations by the Government in payment of purely moral obligations, entirely beyond the scope of the other specifically enumerated powers. Congress itself has uniformly and consistently exercised its appropriating power for any purpose which it deems for the general welfare, and irrespective of whether the purpose came within the specifically enumerated powers or not. Surely it could not be said that a bill which will provide a system of unemployment and social insurance for millions of unemployed, sick, disabled, and aged is less for the "general welfare" than other bills, such as the one above. If Congress passes the bill, it will thereby declare that, in its judgment, the bill is for the "general welfare", and no court has the power to substitute its judgment on this question for that of Congress.

While the bill does indeed invest the Secretary of Labor with large discretion, this does not render the bill unconstitutional. The United States Supreme Court has again and again sustained delegations of power to the President, Cabinet officers, and commissions. The Tariff Act of 1922 was held constitutional, although it vested the President with the power to raise or lower the tariff upon any important article whenever it found that American products were at a competitive disadvantage with those imported from abroad. Again an act of Congress which gave the Secretary of the Treasury, on the recommendation of experts, the power to fix an established standard of purity, quality, and fitness for consumption of certain commodities imported into the United States was held constitutional.

In H. R. 2827 the discretion vested in the Secretary of Labor is narrow, for the beneficiaries who are to receive the compensation are named, the minimum compensation is prescribed, the maximum compensation is ascertainable, and the nature of the compensation is fixed. Certainly the discretion here vested in the Secretary of Labor is far less wide than that vested in the Secretary of Agriculture by the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933, wherein the Secretary of Agriculture was granted the power "to provide for rental or benefit payments in connection with crop reduction in such amounts as the Secretary deems fair and reasonable."

No specific amount is appropriated by this bill, but this does not render the bill unconstitutional, for general indefinite appropriations are common. The first of such general indefinite appropriations was passed when Congress directed that all expenses accruing and necessary for the maintenance of lighthouses should be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. Since then hundreds of statutes containing similar indefinite appropriations have been passed.

This bill deprives no one of his property without the "due process of law" guaranteed by the Constitution. Unlike all other unemployment and social-insurance plans, this bill does not involve the setting up of "reserves" created by enforced contributions by employers or employees. The only way that any person could regard himself as in anywise deprived of property for the purpose of financing this bill would be by regarding this bill as a taxing measure. The bill provides that—

> Further taxation necessary to provide funds for the purposes of this act shall be levied on inheritances, gifts, and individual and corporation incomes of $5,000 a year or over.

But even if it can be argued that this is a taxing measure, the bill is a proper exercise of the taxing power of Congress, since Congress has the power under the Constitution to lay taxes for the "general welfare", subject to two limitations only. In the case of duties, imports, and excises "this must be uniform." In the case of direct taxes they must be apportioned according to the census. Neither limitation, however, applies to incomes, gifts, or inheritances since the sixteenth amendment. Once Congress has levied such a tax, the tax cannot be assailed by a taxpayer, since the courts will not review the exercise of the congressional discretion involved. The decision of Congress is thus final.

This bill in no way involves a question of usurpation of the rights of the States. While the power of Congress to regulate commerce and industry is limited to the "interstate commerce power" and any matters "not commerce" is unconstitutional, this argument is wholly inapplicable to the present bill. This bill is not an exercise of the interstate commerce power; it is an exercise of the appropriating power. This bill does not involve any regulation of intrastate commerce of matters "not commerce." It does not involve the setting up of "reserves." It does not set up such business relationships as might possibly be involved in the creation of special accounts with employers or employees based on their contributions to a reserve fund. The Supreme Court has explicitly declared that no State will be heard to complain that the Federal Government is invading State rights when it simply exercises its appropriating power.

The Congress which passed the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933 declared that the loss of the purchasing power of the farmers endangered the entire economic structure of the Nation. The mechanism set up by that act was conceived as a device to restore purchasing power. Similarly this bill is an effort to restore purchasing power and may be therefore conceived to remove obstacles to the free flow of interstate commerce by creating purchasing power for the masses who must spend the money for the necessities of life and who, in spending the money for these necessities, will thereby remove obstructions to the free flow of interstate commerce.

Since this bill is merely an exercise of the appropriating power, it rests upon the same constitutional basis as do the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act and Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act, which involve merely an exercise of the power of Congress to spend Federal moneys. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act, and, indeed, the bulk of the national emergency legislation which has been enacted during the Hoover and Roosevelt administrations, involve recognition of the national character of our problems. These acts all provide for direct aid to persons, firms, and corporations in the States. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act supplies Federal moneys directly to banks throughout the country. Unemployment and social-insurance problems are even more clearly Federal problems. They require a similar national solution.

The Congress which passed the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act, and the bulk of the national emergency legislation clearly conceived that it was for the "general welfare" that individuals, corporations, and banks should be given money out of the Treasury of the United States. When Congress passes this bill it will have realized that it is for the "general welfare" that all human beings in the United States who through no fault of their own are unable to earn the necessities of life should receive money representing their contribution to production so that they may purchase the necessities of life and, in so doing, maintain not only their lives, but the economic life of the United States. In view of the foregoing considerations this bill is clearly constitutional.

This bill is necessary to prevent and relieve wide-spread destitution; practical in view of the great productive capacity of the Nation and its surpluses available for taxation; sound in its probable effects upon purchasing power and the monetary system; and constitutional under the obligation of Congress to legislate for the general welfare.

STRENGTH OF A GOVERNMENT DEPENDS UPON THE LOVE OF ITS PEOPLE

Now there are a lot of good people in these United States who are worrying about the flag. They are afraid somebody is going to pull it down. They are worried about the Constitution, that someone is going to tear it up. They talk about the Reds, Bolshevists, the Communists, Socialists, and radicals, and what not, and they lie awake nights seeing the red bogeyman in the attic.

Now, I want to say that I know how to allay their childish fears. I can tell you the remedy for that situation. If you wish to preserve and protect this country, and we all do; if we want to live on in peace, common sense, health, and happiness, then let us pass real, genuine, adequate social-security, unemployment, old-age, and social-justice legislation, and put it in force now—immediately—and stop this relief business, because, after all, the safeguard of any flag or any constitution or any government is not in its armies or in its navies or in its guns or in its magazines for war, but in the love of the people for that country and that government, and you can gain the affection of the American people in no greater measure than by passing adequate and genuine social-insurance legislation. That will be the best way to protect the flag and to safeguard the Constitution written by our forefathers, and it is up to us to show that we are worthy of the trust handed down to us by our forefathers and that we do not pattern after European medieval castles and that we are not believers in peasantry, serfdom, and peonage; but if you want to imperil this flag and put the Constitution in danger—and I cannot conceive of any sane person in the United States who wants that—if you want to do that, proceed as you have been doing and build up your relief rolls and increase your unemployment rolls until you have so many millions of unemployed that you cannot even count them, so that no man on this floor will know how many unemployed we have, but we can only guess how many tens of millions are on relief and unemployed lists.

SOCIAL SECURITY MEANS GOVERNMENT SECURITY

If you want to imperil this Government and shake it to its very foundation and have marching into Washington great masses of people who may come here not to overthrow the Government, but for the purpose of demanding their rights—if you wish to avoid this, you can do so very easily and very readily by passing the Lundeen workers' bill, H. R. 2827, giving social justice and social security to the American home and the American fireside.

I say to you, my fellow citizens, you shall not crucify American labor upon the cross of international finance. You shall not press down upon the brow of labor the crown of destitution, misery, and poverty. The American people, all of them, are entitled to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. We are entitled to that; less than that we will not consider. We mean business, and those who legislate must act now. There may come a day when it is too late. "For of all sad words of tongue or pen, the saddest are these: 'It might have been.'" We will fight on until life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness are ours finally and forever. [Applause.]

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TRUAX to the Connery amendment: On page 3, line 8, after the word "on", strike out the remainder of lines 8 and 9 and insert in lieu thereof "all individual fortunes of $1,000,000 and over, inheritances, gifts, and individual and corporation incomes of $5,000 a year and over."

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I happen to be a member of the Labor Committee that reported, by a vote of 7 to 6, the Lundeen so-called "workers' old-age pension and unemployment bill."

There is only one thing that I see wrong with this bill. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN], in his bill proposes to tax inheritances, gifts, and all annual incomes of individuals and corporations in excess of $5,000 per year. This provision of the bill, in my judgment, does not go far enough. We ought to tap right now, once and for all time, every fortune in this country of ours of $1,000,000 and over.

Mr. Chairman, how long do you think it is going to take the United States of America to recover and to rehabilitate the 20,000,000 who are on Government relief rolls or on doles? How do you ever expect to reemploy 11,000,000 men who seek jobs, but where jobs cannot be found? You cannot do this by continually and everlastingly skimming the skim milk off of the wealth of the country. You have got to get down to the cream of wealth, the millionaire crowd, down to the enormous fortunes, and to the swollen, predatory wealth of the country. Why, this is the reason you are considering this very legislation today. It is because you have too many millionaires and too few people with an annual, livable income, or people of modest means.

Where do you expect to get the money? I do not care if you amend this bill and make it $30 or $50 a month, which I favor for all men and women who are destitute at the age of 60, and $75 for all men and women who are destitute at the age of 70, but where will you get the money if you amend this bill and adopt these amendments?

This committee has made an intelligent, a worthy attempt to solve this problem. They have gone as far as the present orthodox system of government financing will stand, and when you go further you have got to get at the swollen, plutocratic wealth of the country. For one, I would take old Morgan and let him bear the entire expense of this humanitarian legislation until you got his swollen fortune down to $1,000,000. If he cannot live on $1,000,000, let him leave this country and go to England, the country in which he lives, and in which he pays taxes. I would take old Andy Mellon, who is now spending his declining days in attempting to defraud the Government of $3,000,000, and I would let him bear the cost of this legislation for a while until you scaled his fortune down to $1,000,000. Then, I would go after the fellows with incomes of $50,000 a year and more. This is enough income for any man or woman in this country.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Not now; the bankers are all against my plan, anyway. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY], which is commonly known as the "Lundeen bill."

I think the only proper way in which to approach this question is by comparing the Lundeen bill with the present bill under consideration by this Committee. There are two outstanding, glaring defects in the bill proposed by the Ways and Means Committee: First, it does nothing for the present 11,000,000 unemployed; second, the Ways and Means Committee bill provides that the burden of taxation for unemployment insurance and for old-age pensions eventually must fall on the shoulders of the wage earners of America.

You may call this a pay-roll tax in one case to be imposed on the employer, but as I explained yesterday, any form of pay-roll tax, any form of direct taxation of this sort, is bound to fall on the wage earners of America who cannot afford to pay any tax today and cannot defend themselves against any wage cuts.

By your bill and our bill we agree that unemployment insurance is inevitable; we agree that old-age pensions are inevitable, but there is one fundamental difference between yours and ours, and that is, in your bill you place the burden on the poor of the Nation and in our bill we place it on the wealth of the Nation, where these burdens should be imposed. [Applause.]

The form of taxation provided under your bill, and I have asked the members of the committee about it repeatedly in general debate, is just as vicious as a sales tax. I have repeatedly challenged the committee to distinguish between a pay-roll tax and a sales tax. In effect, they are both the same. They fall on the poor of the Nation. I shall never forget March 24, 1932, when I sat in the gallery up there, before I ever dreamed of coming to Congress, when I heard the following words spoken on the floor of this House:

My reason for opposing a sales tax is that I know it is unsound in principle and will be harsh, burdensome, and unjust in its operation. It contravenes every accepted theory of taxation. Not even in the emergency of the World War did our Government seriously consider such a tax.

* * * * * * *

Are we willing now, with our boasted wealth, to admit that conditions are so desperate and that other sources of taxation have been exhausted and are inadequate and we must violate the time-honored policy of our Government, as advocated by both the great parties, and adopt a sales tax? Are we Democrats willing to make a record in this House, after being out of power for 12 years, and accept the responsibility for the enactment of the sales tax, notwithstanding the fact that such bill has been recommended by the Ways and Means Committee? I served notice when the bill was reported by the committee that I would offer an amendment to strike out this part of the bill; and if it were not stricken out, that I would vote against the bill on final roll call. * * *

Remember, if you do this, you will be writing on the statute books of the Nation a record that you never can explain—never can justify—and it can be justly capitalized as a campaign issue against you for generations. But let me make this prediction: If this sales-tax provision remains in the bill and becomes a law, you Republicans will not only have to take the blame for its necessity, if there be one, but also the responsibility of its enactment; for certainly a majority of the Democrats in this House will by their action this day demonstrate that they not only do not approve but will not accept this unjust, unreasonable, unnecessary, and unconscionable form of taxation. Who are urging this sales tax anyway, and where did it have its birth and inception? That Andrew Mellon, William Randolph Hearst, and the millionaires and multimillionaires have had for their sole purpose and determination for years to get a sales tax fastened on the country in order that they may be relieved of paying income taxes, everyone knows. * * *

Now is the time and the accepted time to demonstrate to the American people that their Representatives have heard their voice and know their will and will obey it. Let us kill it now, kill it dead, and trust it is killed forever.

Mr. CONNERY. Who said that?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. These are not my words, these are the words of a man whom I revere and respect, and I revere and respect this man for his great fighting qualities. America owes this man an everlasting debt of gratitude for having defeated the sales tax on the floor of this House. I am referring to fighting BOB DOUGHTON, the author of the present bill under consideration [applause], and I appeal to him that the same reasons urged by him on March 24, 1932, against a sales tax exist today against a pay-roll tax, which is just as un-American and vicious as a sales tax.

I appeal in the name of the wage earners of America, in the name of the aged of America, in the name of the unemployed of America, let us kill the pay-roll tax and let us, like humane and just Americans, place the burdens of taxation for the care of the poor on the shoulders of the wealthy, on the shoulders of the community, where it belongs, and hence preserve our American institutions, our American form of government, and be justly proud of our actions as representatives of the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. It may be that there is some good in the Lundeen bill. I am frank to say that I am not thoroughly familiar with all of the provisions of that bill, not having had the time to examine it in detail, being so busily engaged on the bill under consideration by the House.

I may say that notwithstanding there may be merit in the Lundeen bill—and I do not care to criticize it at this time—I am sure that the Lundeen bill has no place in this bill.

This bill under consideration now under the rules of the House has had 23 hours of general debate, wherein Members of the House could sit here and hear explanations of every title, every provision, every section, every line, and every word of the bill, so that they would have an opportunity to vote intelligently on the proposed legislation. They have been so busy that they may not have time or the opportunity to give intelligent consideration to the Lundeen bill, which every Member of the House ought to give before he is called upon to discharge the solemn responsibility of voting on legislation of this importance.

Now, the gentleman from New York referred to a speech I made on the floor of this House with reference to a sales tax. I will say that I have nothing to recant, nothing to take back, nothing to apologize for as to that speech. I would make the same speech again under the same conditions, but the situation today is not what it was at that time when that bill was under consideration.

The tax imposed in this bill is not a sales tax. It is an income and an excise tax, not for the purpose of balancing the Budget. A sales tax may be justified in a great emergency, and under some circumstances I might vote for it, but this legislation is not to meet an emergency, but to provide permanent legislation.

Mr. LUNDEEN. But why not tax great wealth?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I will say that we are taxing great wealth. If we were not taxing great wealth the expenses of this Government could not be met. Great wealth is now taxed for all purposes for which a tax can be legitimately imposed by this Government. You cannot tax wealth until it disappears. If you did, then how do you propose to finance the cost of government?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The British income-tax rates are the ones we advocate, and would be thoroughly adequate, and Britain announces that she is on the high road to prosperity.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Oh, very often it is a case, Mr. Chairman, of those who "darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge." Great Britain has only one taxing authority for all of the units of the British Government. They are all provided for in one tax, whereas in this country we have a State and a county and a municipal and a Federal tax and a tax going and a tax coming and a tax for the living and a tax for the dead, tax without end. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the original amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CONNERY) there were—ayes 52, noes 204.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. DOUGHTON and Mr. CONNERY to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 40, noes 158.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLMER: Page 4, line 19, after the word "to", strike out the words "one-half" and insert in lieu thereof the words "four-fifths", and on page 5, line 16, after the word "than", strike out the words "one-half" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one-fifth."

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, like every Member on this floor I have been intensely interested in seeing the aged people of my congressional district receive some benefits from the legislation which has been proposed and is now being advocated for the security of these aged people. Frankly, in my judgment, there are going to be very few aged people benefited under this legislation as it is now written, and, as it is quite apparent, it is going to be passed by this Committee of the Whole. I call attention particularly to the fact that, assuming that your States can qualify by the proper legislation, there are many States in the Union that are not financially able to match dollar for dollar the amount put up by the Federal Government. I have no idea that my State can qualify, and I dare say that, if you will give as much thought to the question of your own particular State as I have to mine, you will come to that same conclusion.

This should be recognized as a national problem. The States should not be required to contribute dollar for dollar. If I had my way about it I would eliminate entirely State participation, but I realize as a practical measure what we are up against here and so I have offered this compromise measure. I trust when you are called upon to vote for or against this amendment you will take into consideration the aged people in your districts in the States less wealthy and bear in mind they are not going to get anything under this legislation and that you will have to face that proposition when you get back home.

Mr. DONDERO. Does the gentleman's State now have any tax at all for the aged?

Mr. COLMER. It does not and I doubt if it could afford one. I shall not dwell on this longer. I hope you will not railroad this amendment down but will give the aged people in these States that are not able to put up this money an opportunity to qualify under the bill. My amendment simply means that if the State puts up a dollar, then the Federal Government will put up $4 for this proposition. It does not materially change the bill. It only changes it in that one aspect. It will give these States an opportunity to participate and these people an opportunity to receive benefits. I appeal to you in the name of the aged people in your districts to give them this opportunity. I hope you will agree to the amendment. This piece of legislation if enacted into law without amendments will stand out as the greatest disillusionment possibly of any piece of legislation ever passed the House. I repeat that very few of the States will be able to qualify, and the hundreds of thousands of aged people seeking relief at the hands of this Congress will be keenly disappointed. Our aged people are clamoring for bread and we offer them a stone. This legislation does not meet the demands; it is highly inadequate. And frankly, Mr. Chairman, there is little inducement offered to vote for it. If my amendment does not prevail I shall feel very despondent indeed about it. And the only justification that I could possibly find in voting for the bill as it was reported out of the committee would be that possibly it would be a step in the right direction and because of the other wholesome provisions of the bill aside from the old-age pension. [Applause.]

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FORD of Mississippi offers the following substitute amendment for the amendment offered by Mr. COLMER: Title I, page 3, line 16, strike out the word "one-half" and insert in lieu thereof "99 percent"; and on page 4, line 19, strike out the word "one-half" and insert in lieu thereof "99 percent"; and in line 25, strike out "$30" and insert in lieu thereof "$15"; and on page 5, line 16, strike out the word "one-half" and insert in lieu thereof "1 percent."

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I concur in what my colleague from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER] has said to the Committee this morning. That is why I have offered the substitute amendment for the consideration of the Committee, because I realize there is opposition on the part of the membership of this House to increasing the amount of the pension to be paid over the sum of $15. I would like to see the Federal Government put up $25 and the States put up $5, and provide $30 for the old people of this country, but after seeing the amendments heretofore offered voted down, I fear that the majority of the membership of this House will not vote for more than $15 to be paid by the United States. It is with that in mind that I come before the membership of this House this afternoon and appeal to you. If we intend to do anything for the old people of this country, you should support the substitute amendment I have offered to the amendment offered by my colleague from Mississippi. I want to briefly explain it to you. Under the proposed legislation now under consideration it is required that the Federal Government pay $15, provided the States match this sum with $15. My amendment simply strikes out the provision that the State pay one-half, and provides that the Government pay 99 percent and that the State pay 1 percent, thereby retaining the provision that the States will administer this fund, and protect the State rights which the able gentleman from Massachusetts was talking about a moment ago.

I do not say this in criticism of the membership of the Ways and Means Committee, but I say it to you in fairness and frankness that the old people living in some of the States of this country will not be able to obtain one dollar in pensions, because the States which they reside in are not able to finance the payment required of them under the bill now before the House.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I am in thorough accord with the provisions of the gentleman. I am wondering how he would have this 1 percent provided by the State. Would that require an act of the legislature?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Yes. It would require all States to enact legislation as provided in the bill, but would relieve the States from having to pay $15 before the aged living in those States could qualify. It does not change anything in the bill except to provide that the Federal Government will pay 99 percent of the $15 and the States will put up 1 percent, and will have charge of administering the fund under the plan set out in the bill now under consideration.

Ladies and gentlemen, I appeal to you in order that we may reach all of the old people of this country and not discriminate against those who may not be fortunate enough to live in a rich State. I hope you will vote for this amendment so that we may give a universal pension of $15 a month to the old people of this country. By doing this the legislature of every State can increase the amount if they desire. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER] proposes that the Federal Government contribute four-fifths of the total amount of a pension of $30 per month and that the State contribute one-fifth of the total amount of the pension. The substitute offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. FORD] proposes that the $15 provided in the bill as presented be the total amount of the pension and that the contribution by the Federal Government be 99 percent thereof. In other words, $15 is the total amount of pension contributed by both the Federal Government and the State government. Out of that, under the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. FORD] the Federal Government will contribute $14.85 of the $15, and the State will contribute 15 cents of the $15 to the total pension of $15. It is so obvious on its face that that is simply a subterfuge, that the State under that provision would not be participating in any substantial amount, that it does not justify further argument in opposition to it.

I therefore ask that the Committee vote down the substitute and then vote down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER].

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question arises on the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. FORD] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now arises on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TREADWAY: On page 2, line 10, strike out "$49,750,000" and insert "$69,750,000"; on page 4, line 25, strike out "$30" and insert "$40."

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I am offering this amendment in carrying out the attitude and policy of the minority members on the Ways and Means Committee. We have said from the very beginning that we favored old-age pensions, and we favored a larger amount than appears in the bill. The bill calls for an appropriation of $49,750,000 "in order to assure reasonable subsistence compatible with decency and health to aged individuals without such subsistence."

Now, I claim, Mr. Chairman, that there are a great many instances where $30 a month is not sufficient to care for aged people in the manner in which section 1 of the bill provides. If we match $20 with $20 from the States, an aged person can then receive the amount of $40 per month, which is $10 more than is provided for in the matching manner that the committee has suggested.

In my remarks on page 5709 of the RECORD during the general debate I covered this item as fully as was necessary, and I refer the members of the Committee to what I said at that time. We are simply asking that this Committee and the House carry out the idea that in aiding aged people we do it decently and sufficiently to care for their needs in their old age.

The minority report reads:

> We favor such legislation as will encourage States already paying old-age pensions to provide for more adequate benefits and will encourage all other States to adopt old-age pension systems. However, we believe the amount provided in the bill to be inadequate and favor a substantial increase in the Federal contribution.

I am, therefore, asking that this substantial increase be made, $20,000,000, in order that the purpose of aiding the aged may be accomplished to a certain extent.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TREADWAY. I have only 5 minutes; I prefer to use my time. I am sure the gentleman can get recognition. Now, that is a very definite proposition; and while I realize there are many pending amendments to title I, I think this is the crux of the matter, whether the House intends to favor a decent allowance to the aged people or whether it intends to scrimp them. Twenty-eight States already have adopted old-age pension systems. This would encourage them and would encourage others to go along with them. It is something in which the American people have shown their interest. It is the most important title in the bill. In fact, it is one of the outstanding features of the bill. Members on this side of the House have said from the beginning of the consideration of the bill and from the beginning of the debate in the House that we stood solidly behind an amount sufficient to care for the aged people in a decent and respectable manner, which they are entitled to. I trust, therefore, this amendment I have offered will be given the favorable consideration of the majority, and I assure the majority that we on this side of the House will go along with them in an effort to provide proper care for these aged and unfortunate people. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I would not want to go into the RECORD uncontradicted the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts that in proposing an increase in this appropriation by the paltry sum of $20,000,000 he is providing adequate pensions for the poor aged people of this country. After sitting on the Ways and Means Committee for 3 months on this bill, the gentleman certainly ought to know that an increase of $20,000,000 would not be adequate; that an increase of $200,000,000 would not be adequate.

This bill carries provision for about $50,000,000. It takes a very short problem in simple arithmetic to show that $50,000,000 would pay not more than 300,000 people the sum of $15 a month. The gentleman's proposal is to raise the pension from $30 up to $40. I might go along with him on that increase if he had any system of increasing the number who would get it. If you adopt his amendment, the additional number of people who will be provided for by it would hardly be worth making the change in the bill; in fact, it would not add any more to the number of beneficiaries; 300,000 out of the 4,000,000 or 5,000,000 who should be pensionable under the terms of this bill. It gives these 300,000 people $5 or $6 a month more, about $5, but it does not add another single aged person to the pension roll of the country.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. It is a fact, though, that those aged who would be benefited under the bill will be benefited to the extent of an additional $10.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I admit that if the gentleman's amendment is adopted it will mean that 300,000 people will receive a few dollars apiece more, maybe $5, but it will not add one additional person to the pension rolls of the country. The hearings show that there are 1,000,000 people in this country over the age of 65 who are on F. E. R. A. relief or public charity. Certainly these million people are all qualified for pensions, and we ought to pass a bill which will give them all a Federal pension of at least $15 a month, and it will take the sum of $180,000,000 to give 1,000,000 people over 65 years of age, all of whom are now on F. E. R. A. or public charity, $15 a month; if the gentleman proposes to increase the monthly pension to $40 from $30 and pay for it out of $20,000,000 under the pretext that he is furnishing the poor people of this country an adequate pension, it ought to be voted down as an insult to them instead of giving them an adequate pension.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. I appreciate the gentleman's courtesy, because I declined to yield to him; but I want to call his attention to the clause following the amount where my amendment would be inserted:

> Amount of $69,750,000 for the first year ending June 30, 1936—

And quoting the language of line 10:

> And there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year thereafter a sum sufficient to carry out the purpose of this title.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I am not interested in the other years now; what I am interested in is the first year. The sum provided in this bill and the sum provided in the gentleman's amendment would not grease a skillet. I say the House should pass a half-way decent old-age-pension bill, which would pay now.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Does this amendment in any way cut off or add a beneficiary? Does it not merely increase the benefits of those who will be taken care of; and is not the situation the gentleman attacks to be found in the bill instead of in the amendment?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I agree with the gentleman that it will simply increase by a few dollars a month the pension these 300,000 people will receive but will not add any beneficiaries.

Mr. LEHLBACH. That is the fault of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes; that is the fault of the bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, it is very evident from the debate for the last 30 or 40 minutes that none of these amendments representing the ideas of any of these special groups are going through. We are about through with this title. What are you going to do about it? Do you want $5 a month more from the State and $5 more from the Government? Do you not want to raise it $5 for the Federal Government and $5 for the State, making $10 altogether? If so, here is your chance.

Mr. Chairman, there is nothing about this that needs a lengthy explanation. It is simply a straight out-and-out proposition. This is about our last chance to vote on the proposal. I, for one, think we ought to extend this benefit so that the rich States may come forward with more money, if they desire, without imposing any additional compulsory burden upon any of the smaller States. The poor States are not compelled to put up an extra nickel.

The amendment ought to satisfy everybody. The Republicans will vote for it, and the Democrats should vote for it, especially those who have been on their feet for the last 30 or 40 minutes trying to get more money. No man is justified in saying he will not vote for this, because it does not do justice. The question is, Is this as much as you can get? Is this the last chance? I say it is. Now is the time to say whether you stand for a maximum as high up as you can get it, even if you cannot get it as high as you want it. Do you stand for a proposition that will permit the rich States to give the poor people all they want to give them and permit the poor States to give them as little as they want to give them? If you do, you should vote for this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, there is no compulsion about this. It is a fair, honest proposition. Personally I am satisfied with the $15 limit now provided in the bill, but in order to satisfy those who are not satisfied this amendment is offered.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the majority members of the committee, of course, hope that this amendment will not prevail. We have always heard the expression "Beware of the Greeks bearing gifts." That is the situation here today.

The Ways and Means Committee spent 3 months carefully considering every phase of this important measure which has for its purpose social security for the people of our country. The gentlemen on the other side now rise to try to do what they say will make a contribution to this measure; yet we know from their speeches made here during the 23 hours of general debate that they are against the bill anyhow. I appeal to those Members who are interested in this legislation to carry forward the program of the President as we have brought it to you.

Mr. Chairman, what are the facts with reference to this amendment? There are only two States in the Union that have a law which would permit them to pay a greater amount than that provided here in the bill, and those are the wealthy States of New York and Massachusetts. The other 46 States of this Union could not receive any benefits under such an arrangement as is provided here, as their laws now stand. It should also be borne in mind that under the provisions of this bill, as it now stands, it gives larger benefits; it contains more liberal provisions than those afforded in the legislation of any other country in the entire world. This bill provides for $30 a month. That is greater than now being paid in any of the 29 States which have old-age pension legislation. It is greater than is now being paid by any other country in the world.

Mr. Chairman, it should be borne in mind that we are now pioneering the way, we are now enacting legislation that is charting a new course in this country of ours. The President in his conferences with us about this bill, as well as those who have appeared before the committee and who have given thought and consideration to this important question, have stated that we should move cautiously, that we should start on a plan that we know can succeed and will not break down. We have presented to you the plan that has the best prospect of success in the great field of social security. The only purpose in bringing forward this amendment is to try to disrupt this program and try to defeat the very purpose we have set out to accomplish. I appeal to all the Members to vote down this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. REED of New York) there were—ayes 85, noes 121.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. DOUGHTON and Mr. TREADWAY to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 80, noes 142.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KNUTSON: On page 2, line 10, strike out "$49,750,000" and insert "$99,500,000"; on page 4, line 1, strike out "65" and insert "60"; and one page 4, line 25, strike out "$30" and insert "$60."

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I am prompted to offer the amendment that has just been read because I certainly believe the provisions of the bill that we have before us are wholly inadequate. This is particularly true in the Northern States where $30 per month would not give the aged and indigent economic security and, as I understand the purpose of this legislation, that is the aim of the present administration.

Mr. Chairman, I also feel that the age limit of 65 is too high to give material relief. It certainly will not be of any assistance in relieving the unemployment problem that so seriously confronts the country at the present time. If we are going to pass an economic-security bill in this Congress, we ought to pass something that is more than a mere gesture, and that is all $30 a month is, so far as it applies to the northern United States.

I can understand that down in the Cotton Belt, perhaps, $30 a month would be enough, but it certainly is not anywhere near enough in the sections of the country where the people have to buy fuel 6 or 7 months of the year.

I feel strongly, Mr. Chairman, that if we are going to pass legislation of this kind we should pass something that we do not have to go home and apologize for.

I realize that my amendment will not completely take care of the situation. There are a number of States that are unable to take any advantage of this legislation. As I see it, Mr. Chairman, the whole thing should go over until the next session of the Congress. It is plain to be seen from the debate we have had under the 5-minute rule in the consideration of this measure, that there are as many different opinions upon this proposition as there are varieties of preserves and condiments put up by a man named Heinz.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Would the gentleman be in favor of paying pensions to the aged in one State and denying such pensions to the aged in another State, even though the States may be adjoining?

Mr. KNUTSON. I would not. Such an idea is un-American and unfair, but what are you going to do with such a steam roller in operation as we have in this House? They talk one way and then they vote the other way when we have a teller vote. [Laughter.] Yes; this is a sample of your consistency—you talk one way and vote another.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. It would require about $4,000,000,000 a year to pay an adequate pension to all of the old people who need money in this country and who are over 60 years of age, would it not?

Mr. KNUTSON. I do not know just what the exact figure would be.

Mr. MOTT. Does the gentleman think it is possible to raise $4,000,000,000 or any other amount that would pay an adequate pension by the system proposed in the pending bill?

Mr. KNUTSON. Of course not. This pension should be financed through a turn-over tax that would be equally distributed among all.

Mr. MOTT. Can it be raised in any other way?

Mr. KNUTSON. No; it cannot be raised except through a turn-over tax, and what we have before us is merely a shot in the arm—it is not even that. It will prove a bitter disappointment to our people.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The gentleman from Minnesota is one of those men who is naturally in opposition to anything proposed even by his own party, to say nothing of this side of the House. It will be recalled that after the minority had made a report on this bill, and I believe the gentleman from Minnesota concurred in that report, he went off by himself and, after sulking awhile, decided that the minority report did not suit him, and he made a separate report of his own.

If this side of the House had incorporated in this bill the very provision suggested by the amendment he has now offered, it would not have suited him, and he would have offered something else and would have jumped on the proposal offered by this side with all his strength. He is one of the men on that side of the House whose head is a fountain, whose eyes are rivers of water, on account of the great burden that is going to be imposed on industry in the payment of the taxes necessary to finance this bill, and yet he knows very well, because he is an intelligent man, that if we increased the amount as he has proposed in his amendment, this burden would fall on industry and would double the amount of taxes necessary to finance this scheme of old-age pensions.

The gentleman has not said a word about where he will get the money. In a few years it would take out of the Federal Treasury at least $1,000,000,000 annually and yet he is one of the men who lament the fact that this measure will impose such an unbearable and intolerable burden upon industry, and because there are certain States that may not get any benefit at all, the gentleman proposes an amendment whereby industry will have to bear a still further burden and a burden much heavier than that proposed in the bill.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman speaks about raising money. Why, this administration has a magic wand with which it can go out and raise $4,880,000,000 by simply calling on a few leaders. Let them call on a few more leaders and raise the money necessary to give the poor, downtrodden, hungry people something to eat.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is just a sample of the billingsgate and the balderdash that this gentleman unloads on this House from day to day, and that is all it is.

I call for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky offers the following amendment:

On page 2, section 1, line 10, strike out the figures "49,750,000" and insert the following "100,000,000 or so much as may be necessary."

On page 2, lines 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17, strike out all in section 1 after the word "title" and period, and insert the following: "There shall be paid by the Federal Government as a pension to every needy citizen of the United States and its Territories and the District of Columbia 60 years of age or over, and to every needy blind person, and to every needy person totally and permanently disabled, who shall make application therefor and who shall make satisfactory proof of the requirements of the board or agency set up by the Government to administer this act, the sum of $25 per month from the date of the passage of this act up to and including June 30, 1937, without any contribution from the State or States. Beginning with July 1, 1937, the Federal Government shall match funds provided by the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, to the amount of not exceeding $20 per month for each person pensioned under this act."

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, under general debate I discussed this measure in detail and at some length. I pointed out how grossly inadequate the provisions of the bill were and that very few people in any State, and no one in Kentucky, would receive an old-age pension within the next year, and, perhaps, not within the next 2 years, and I also pointed out that while this measure is called an "unemployment" insurance bill, it would not put a single person back to work and did not provide a single dollar for the unemployed. I expressed the hope that liberalizing amendments would be offered and adopted. Many have been offered by several outstanding Democrats, men and women of the House, but were ruthlessly voted down.

The amendment that I have offered provides:

(a) To fix the minimum age at 60 instead of from 65 to 70 years as is provided in the President's bill.

(b) It authorizes an appropriation of $100,000,000 and such further sum as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this amendment, for the year beginning July 1, 1935, instead of $49,750,000 as provided in the President's bill.

(c) It provides for the immediate payment of $25 per month by the Government, without any contribution from the States, for each and every needy man or woman 60 years of age or over, and this payment to continue without the State's contribution until June 30, 1937. The bill of the President does not permit the Federal Government to pay out one dollar except and until the State or States change their laws and levy and collect taxes for that purpose, or at least provide a fund for that purpose.

(d) My amendment also provides the same pension to needy blind and needy people who are crippled and disabled, $25 per month, whatever their age may be. The President's bill does not include needy blind people or needy crippled people, unless they are 65 years of age or over, and then the Federal Government will not pay anything unless the State first matches the Federal Government's money.

NO RELIEF FOR THE AGED, THE BLIND, OR THE CRIPPLES IN KENTUCKY

Under the President's bill, the State must first have its legislature meet and fix the qualifications under which needy old people could get a pension, and they may fix the minimum age anywhere from 65 to 70 years; and the State must agree to levy and collect taxes and provide a fund to meet the Government's money; and the pension would be limited to whatever the State fixed it—any sum from 1 cent to $15 per month. The Government, under this bill, will not match more than $15, and only $49,000,000 in all is authorized under this bill for the year beginning July 1, 1935, and ending June 30, 1936.

There is little doubt but what there are at least 6,000,000 people in the United States over 65 years of age that are wholly dependent. Of course, if all applied and were allowed pensions and each State would match the Government's total contribution of $15, it would only pay each person the sum of $1.40 per month, or about 4½ cents a day, for the year beginning July 1, 1935, and ending June 30, 1936.

But the thing that alarms me most is that the aged needy in Kentucky will not receive anything for the next 2 years. We have been informed that it will be necessary to amend the constitution of Kentucky, and the constitution of Kentucky can be amended only by a vote of the people at a regular November election; and after our constitution shall be amended, it would be necessary for the legislature to meet and provide for the levy and collection of a tax for old-age pensions. This will mean more delay.

Kentucky already is heavily in debt. It has a burdensome sales tax, and even with the sales tax it is going deeper in debt every day. What if Kentucky is unable to raise the tax to match the Government's money?

So, under the President's bill, the needy old people of Kentucky must wait and wait and if Kentucky does not change its constitution and laws and match the Federal money, then there is no relief offered in the President's bill for these needy old people in Kentucky at any time.

The President's bill does not hint at any relief for the poor blind people or for poor men and women who are cripples and permanently and totally disabled.

The age limit is too high. Therefore, I am urging you, ladies and gentlemen of the House, to support this amendment of mine and fix the age limit at 60 years and include needy blind people and needy crippled people and to pay each of these groups $25 per month, to begin just as soon as this measure becomes a law and to continue these payments until June 30, 1937. This will give Kentucky and other States similarly situated time and opportunity to amend their constitutions, change their laws, and provide a fund to meet the Government's fund, although so far as I am concerned I favor the Federal Government paying a reasonable sum to each one of these groups so that all of our citizens may be treated alike and let each State that is able to do so add to the Federal contribution.

Of course, the rich States—New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, New Jersey, and other rich States—will be able within the next few months to adjust their laws and finances to meet the Government's money because they now have effective old-age-pension laws.

Then we will have the spectacle of Kentucky, under the general revenue laws, as she did last year, pay between eighty millions and one hundred millions into the United States Treasury and that money go to help pay old-age pensions in other States out of this Federal appropriation and the old and needy, the needy blind, and the crippled people in Kentucky will not receive anything.

IS THE PRESIDENT'S BILL SACRED?

Scores of Democrats, including Mrs. GREENWAY, of Arizona, Mr. SCHRUGHAM, former Governor of Nevada, Mr. EKWALL, Mr. COLLINS, Mr. FORD, Mr. CONNERY, Mr. MILLER, Mr. MASSINGALE, Mr. SAUTHOFF, and several Republicans, have introduced amendments to liberalize this bill, with the purpose of getting relief to these old and needy people now; but your big Democratic machine in this House has rolled over them and defeated all liberalizing amendments.

As pointed out, the President's bill proposes no relief whatsoever to the needy blind and to the needy cripples. My amendment will provide a pension for them. If this is a bill for the relief of the needy, on what theory will you vote down this amendment for the blind and cripples? There are no groups in this country that need help more than they do.

There never has been a time in this country when poor old people needed relief as much as they need it now. My amendment provides immediate relief.

The distinguished chairman, Mr. DOUGHTON, says that I have roared like a mountain lion against this bill. I am one of those who sincerely and earnestly believe in immediate relief for the needy old people, for the poor blind, and the poor cripples of this country. Let me say to my good friend Mr. DOUGHTON that I am in dead earnest. I know how sorely disappointed will be these needy groups and the needy dependent children and poor widows if we pass the President's bill in its present form. Your machine has run over everybody here who has attempted to offer amendments to bring immediate relief to these needy groups, and more than likely your big Democratic machine will defeat my amendment. If this bill is passed in its present form, there will be persons roaring other than myself, and it will not be like one mountain lion but it will be more like the roar of 10,000 African lions. The wails of disappointed needy people in this country will be heard from one end of the Nation to the other. Your Democratic machine may run over us in the House now, but you have another problem when you undertake to run over the sentiment and the humanity of the American people next year, when you will be called upon to give an accounting of what you are doing here.

You have the majority; you can defeat this needful amendment; I can do no more than to present it to you and plead with you to forget party politics and urge you to adopt it. If you run over these needy old people, the blind, and the cripples, the responsibility is yours and not mine.

FAVOR MOTION TO RECOMMIT

Indications are that you Democrats at the behest of the President will jump through the hoop and pass this, the President's bill, as it has been submitted. I am advised that the Republicans will offer a motion to recommit. In that they will propose to increase the amount to each needy old person, fixed in this bill, and will vote to eliminate the section that proposes to tax the wages of the railroad workers, miners, and others. This motion to recommit does not go as far as I should like for it to go but, in my opinion, it is an improvement on this bill and I shall support it. I have not lost an opportunity and shall not lose an opportunity to vote for amendments and motions that have for their purpose to liberalize and improve this bill.

Permit me to repeat again, as I did in my speech the other day, the so-called "employment insurance" in this bill is a misnomer. This bill does not make any provision to give work to a single unemployed person, unless it is to an army of faithful Democrats in the many offices that are created by this bill. It does not provide a job for any one except for a Democratic politician. It gives no work to the unemployed. It does not provide for a single dollar for the unemployed, unless such unemployed persons are over 65 years of age and their respective States provide a fund to match the meager Federal old-age-pension fund set up in this bill.

But this bill does put a 3-percent tax on every dollar of wages of those who are employed or may become employed—mark you, not to provide any money or relief for the unemployed, but to help those who pay in the taxes, provided they pay them in a number of years and then become 65, or dead, or unemployed. Each worker must work and pay in for at least 5 years. The workers in Kentucky already have a sales tax of at least 3 percent on everything they buy with their wages, and under the railroad workers' compulsory pension law, they now pay 2 percent of their wages. If this measure should become a law, there would be at least 6 percent on every dollar earned by other workers and at least 8 percent on each dollar earned by the railroad workers in Kentucky. Therefore, in view of this fact, I think this motion to recommit is in the interest of those workers of my State and of this country, and it proposes to increase the amount of old-age pensions as fixed in this bill, and I shall vote to recommit the bill and have it amended with these provisions.

MUST LOOK TO THE SENATE FOR RELIEF

On final passage, I shall vote for the bill. A vote against it might be construed that I oppose old-age pensions and relief for needy widows and children and for public health and public welfare. My great objection to these features of this bill are the amounts set up are too small and the people in the poor States, and in my own State of Kentucky, will not get any relief now and, more than likely, will not for at least 2 years, and perhaps not at all. I want these needy groups in Kentucky and all other States to get this relief now. I do not want to put any additional taxes or burdens on the wages of the workers, most of them only getting one-half time, and they have more burdens than they can now bear with their small earnings and the high cost of living.

We are voting to send this bill to the United States Senate. I cannot believe that the Senate will pass this bill in its present form. I am very hopeful and confident that a lot of these salutary amendments that others and myself have been trying to get through will prevail in that body. If they do not God pity the needy old people, the blind, the cripples, and needy widows and orphan children of this country. Must they continue to suffer with hunger and cold?

This is the last opportunity I shall have to address you on this important measure, and permit me again to repeat that you Democrats have the majority and the power to defeat this and other helpful amendments. However, if you do, the responsibility is yours, and not those of us who have tried to bring relief now to these needy people. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, my distinguished and handsome friend the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] roars like a mountain lion against this bill. If I recall, he has been a Member of Congress, a very able and distinguished Member of Congress, for many years, and it seems that just now he has awakened to the dire needs of the class of people for whom he speaks so eloquently.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Oh, this is not the first time I have done anything of this kind. I helped to pass the bill for vocational rehabilitation, and the public-health and child-welfare legislation.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Did the gentleman appear before our committee with any proposition or suggestion, or offer us any help or assistance in any way when we were sitting week after week holding hearings? He was silent as the grave, but now when this question is up here in the last hours of debate he comes with an amendment that even the expert draftsman cannot tell what it means, and he expects us to disrupt the entire bill by incorporating in it some half-baked, ill-considered suggestion, just for political purposes back home.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not yield.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. It is not for political purposes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not yield to the gentleman. If I understand the gentleman's amendment, it cuts out State participation for 2 years. I do not know whether it does or not, but that is what the legislative draftsmen tell us. It cuts out State participation for 2 years. That would disrupt the organization in every State that now has an old-age pension, and would turn its administration in those States over to Federal control, and necessitate the creation in those States of a Federal organization to carry out this law.

I do not think my good friend from Kentucky, when he sits down and thinks this over deliberately, would be willing to set up Federal commissions in each State in the Union to administer this law. If the Federal Government finances it, of course the Federal Government, as a matter of right, would administer the law.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Has not this Government for 3 or 4 years, and does it not now propose to turn over billions of dollars to the States?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Why not turn over something now to the aged and needy?

Mr. DOUGHTON. What the gentleman refers to has been done in a temporary measure, but this is permanent legislation, and the gentleman knows that he would not set up temporary organizations in the State to administer this law for 2 years, with all of the expense and the bureaus that would have been established, as well as the expense in the State. The gentleman is bound to know that that would be impractical; and no one in this House would oppose a proposition of that kind more readily or eloquently than the gentleman himself. The truth is that he is bound to find some excuse, and that in his estimation nothing good can come out of the Democratic Party. The gentleman knows the inception and origin of this great humanitarian legislation came from and is now proposed by the greatest President this country has had, at least since the Civil War.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, the social-security bill will in time affect everyone of us. It is so comprehensive in its scope and so far-reaching in its possibility of assuring security to the people of this country that we should thoroughly examine it and deliberate upon it before we vote on it.

In the short time allowed to me today I can only say a few words about it, but I expect from time to time to speak about the bill more fully and at length.

THE MAIN PROVISIONS OF THE BILL

I shall first review, if only in brief, the chief provisions of this bill.

The bill does not provide direct immediate payments to the aged, to the unemployed, or on behalf of children. The bill does not provide for direct immediate benefit payments of any kind. It does not set up a Federal system of old-age pensions or of unemployment insurance or of child care. I believe the people do not understand this fundamental principle of the bill and will be bitterly disappointed when they realize it. To my mind, it is a fundamental weakness of the bill. The bill does not set up a Federal system of old-age insurance as distinguished from pensions. The payment of insurance benefits under that system to the aged of this Nation will begin January 1, 1942.

The bill does attempt to induce every State of the Union to create, establish, or improve an old-age-pension system or a system of unemployment insurance, called "unemployment compensation" in the bill. In the case of old-age pensions, the Federal Government undertakes to pay large sums of money to those States who have or will establish old-age-pension systems with certain minimum standards. One-half of all money expended by the States for old-age-pension payments is to be paid by the Federal Government.

In the case of unemployment insurance or unemployment compensation, the method resorted to is altogether different. The Federal Government, under the provisions of this bill, will levy a tax on pay rolls of certain employers, viz, those who employ 10 or more persons, of 1 percent in 1936, of 2 percent in 1937, and of 3 percent in 1938, and in every year thereafter. This tax will be levied upon these employers in every State of the Union, regardless of whether or not the particular State has an unemployment-compensation system, but if the State establishes an unemployment-compensation system with certain minimum standards described in the bill, the employers will not have to pay this tax to the Federal Government. To be more exact, the employers will be permitted to set off the unemployment payments which they make to a State fund against the Federal tax levy up to 90 percent of the tax levy. To put it in a still different way, if the employers make payments to an unemployment fund, equal to the payments required by the Federal Government, they need only pay 10 percent of the Federal tax.

The effect of these provisions is that in the States which have unemployment systems, the tax will be paid for the benefit of the employees in that State; in the States which do not have such systems the tax will be paid, but the employees of such a State will derive no benefit from the tax payments, since they will go into the general funds of the Federal Government.

It is quite certain that this should induce most States to pass some sort of unemployment-compensation laws.

A vital defect in the Federal law is that it does not prescribe definite and adequate minimum standards for the State unemployment-insurance systems. This is one of the serious defects of the bill.

PROVISIONS RELATING TO OLD-AGE PENSIONS SHOULD BE LIBERALIZED

As to old-age pensions, this bill requires the States to pay pensions to persons 65 years or over (except that up to the year 1940 a higher age limit is allowed). The Federal Government will make grants to the States of one-half of the money which they pay out for old-age pensions except that the Federal Government will not contribute more than $15 per aged person.

I urged changes in those provisions before the Committee on Ways and Means during the hearings. The age limit should be reduced from 65 to 60 years, so that every person 60 years of age or over should be eligible to old-age-pension payments. The same change should be made in the Federal system of old-age insurance. Further, the payments should be increased. The States will not be more liberal than the Federal Government, and therefore the maximum for all practical purposes will be $30 per aged person. This is far too low from every point of view.

DESIRABLE CHANGES OF UNEMPLOYMENT-INSURANCE PROVISION

In my testimony before the Committee on Ways and Means I also urged changes in that part of the bill relating to unemployment compensation. Industry in the United States is organized along national and not along State lines. Industrial production knows no State lines. Unemployment insurance should be under a Federal system and it should set up standards far superior to those provided for in this bill. It should raise most of the money, if not all of it, by inheritance and gift taxes instead of by taxes on pay rolls, and it should make provisions for those that are now unemployed.

I have prepared several amendments for the purpose of liberalizing vital and important parts of the bill. From a survey of the sentiment of the Members of the House it is quite clear that under their present state of mind no amendment could possibly pass, and I therefore do not believe that I shall offer them. I shall wait until the bill has passed and a calmer spirit prevails.

THIS BILL IS ONLY A PART OF THE PRESIDENT'S PROGRAM

In justice to the bill, I must emphasize a point that has not been stressed in this debate and which is quite pertinent to what I am now discussing. The bill before us is only a part of the program of the President for social security and for the care of the unemployed. It is only a part; let us remember that.

The President's program contemplates that all those who are now unemployed and who are employable—7,000,000 of them—shall be given jobs; not relief, but jobs under the $4,000,000,000 public-works bill.

The program therefore is to take care of those who are now unemployed by public works and to care for those who will be unemployed in the future by the creation of State-wide unemployment-compensation systems.

I am somewhat skeptical of the ability of the Federal Government to give jobs to all unemployed employables within a reasonable time or even within a year under the $4,000,000,000 public-works program.

PROVISIONS FOR CHILDREN

Other sections of the bill provide that the Federal Government pay one-third of all the money paid by any of the States for the aid of dependent children, children who have lost their father and breadwinnner, and therefore need the assistance of society.

Pennsylvania now has such a law. It is called the "mothers' assistance fund", but Pennsylvania has not appropriated enough money to pay out to these mothers and children what is due them under the State law. The law has been on the statute books in this State, but thousands upon thousands of children and widowed mothers who were entitled to payments did not receive their pension.

Under the Federal bill they will all receive their pension.

We will understand the importance of this part of the bill when we realize that 40 percent of all persons on relief—approximately 9,000,000 individuals—are children under 16 years of age. These 9,000,000 children will be given a fair measure of security with the passage of this bill.

The bill also provides for the expenditure of large sums of money by the Federal Government in aid of the States for maternity and child welfare, for hospitalization of crippled children, for the care of crippled or physically handicapped children after they have been discharged from the hospitals, and for public-health service.

THE SOCIAL-SECURITY BILL IS INADEQUATE

I am not satisfied with the social-security bill as it passed the House of Representatives a few days ago. I am not satisfied with the provisions which it makes for the aged, for the jobless, or for our handicapped orphaned children.

I want to emphasize that point strongly. The bill as it passed the House and as it most likely will pass the Senate of the United States and be enacted into a Federal law is not sufficient. It does not go as far as it should go. Indeed, it does not go as far as we could justly expect it to go.

THE ADOPTION OF THE PRINCIPLE OF SOCIAL SECURITY IS A GREAT STEP FORWARD

But I also want to emphasize another point just as strongly. That point is this: The principle which this bill establishes, the decent and humane philosophy upon which it is based, is more important than its specific provisions. We have the foundation; we can improve and better from time to time what we put on this foundation.

We have here a beginning and, with all its shortcomings, with all its obvious defects, it is a mighty step forward toward the goal of real social justice. Let us keep in mind that high-minded men and women have fought this battle for social-security legislation for many years. They believed and they preached that it was the duty of the Government to care for its aged, to assume responsibility for fatherless or handicapped children, and to provide for the jobless through unemployment insurance.

THE STRUGGLE FOR SOCIAL SECURITY

It seemed almost impossible to convince the rugged individualists who were governing this great Nation that social insurance was a fundamental task of a liberal and democratic government. In all the years during which that battle was fought, no bill was passed in either House of the Congress of the United States concerning any part of social security until the passage last year of my own resolution H. R. 249, which provided for a study of a national contributory system of old-age insurance such as we are going to have under the social-security bill.

These pioneers for social legislation fought that battle in administration after administration in Washington, and they never gained an inch of ground. They got nowhere, and achieved nothing, until this administration under the leadership of Franklin D. Roosevelt came into office. And I want to pay tribute today to his inspired leadership for giving us this bill, for persuading the Congress to accept the principle that the Government of the United States has a solemn responsibility for the well-being of every one of its citizens.

FUTURE SOCIAL LEGISLATION

The mistakes and shortcomings of this bill are quite substantial. But it is a beginning. Let us take new courage and strength from what we have achieved so far. Let us pledge ourselves to continue the fight for social justice. If we fight hard enough, we shall see the enactment of a social-security bill so widened, so enlarged, and so liberalized that there will be real security for everyone in the United States, for dependent mothers and children, for the aged, for the needy, and for the jobless—all of them as important to the progress and security of this country as those more fortunate, and all of them deserving the economic peace and happiness which, I hope, will eventually be theirs.

FUTURE PROSPECTS

I visualize for the future a succession of laws that will look after the children from the day they are born, on through school until they are fully grown—a succession of laws that will guarantee to all men and women in the United States the inalienable right to a job that will pay unemployment benefits during period of unemployment; laws that will set up a system of old-age insurance so that when we have grown older and want to retire from the noise and bustle of this life into the quiet peace of our homes we will be assured a sufficient income either by pensions from the State or by old-age-insurance payments.

Every one of us would feel happier if he were assured security in his life, security in his job, or security of income while he is jobless, and security in his old age. Social-security legislation means just that. It means real security which is to accompany the human being from the time that he is born all through his life and until he reaches the end of his days.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TERRY: Page 6, after line 12, add a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. Whenever the President finds that a State is unable to contribute sufficient funds to furnish a reasonable subsistence compatible with decency and health to aged persons without such subsistence, and the President certifies such fact to the Secretary of the Treasury, then the Secretary of the Treasury shall, through the Division of Disbursements, make such quarterly payments as directed by the President to such State for such aged persons, except that such payments shall not exceed $15 per person per month."

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, this is a simple amendment. As the bill now reads, the Government will contribute a maximum of $15 for matching the State. There are, as everyone knows, many States which are unable to provide an old-age pension or contribute to an old-age pension at this time, due to unusual economic distress, that some portions of the country have been undergoing for the last several years. I am speaking in behalf of those old people who live in those sections of the country which are not able to do their part in contributing to the old-age-pension fund at this time. These States are not trying to dodge this responsibility, and this amendment merely provides that those States which claim that they are unable at this time to match the national contribution may have their finances investigated by the President; and it is left to his discretion and to his good judgment to say whether or not those States are, in good faith, unable to contribute at this time. Although I am in favor of a more adequate pension, for the purpose of this amendment I do not seek to raise the maximum amount that the Committee on Ways and Means, in its good judgment, has fixed as the maximum to be contributed by the Government. The amendment merely provides that when the President finds these States are unable to contribute he will direct the Division of Disbursements to make the quarterly payments to such States, not to exceed $15 per month per person. We are now taking old-age pensions as a duty national in scope, on account of the economical condition that the country is facing, and we say the old people should in some measure be taken care of by the National Government.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TERRY. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I am in thorough sympathy with the amendment offered by the gentleman. I think it is not only logical but it is very humane. This will not be any burden or handicap on the other States. It does not take anything from them at all.

Mr. TERRY. I thank the gentleman. This does not take one cent from the other States and does not add one penny to the maximum amount that the Ways and Means Committee has said the Government must contribute.

Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, I ask you in the name of humanity, in the name of these old unfortunate people who have the misfortune, if you want to call it that, to live in sections of the country that are not able to contribute at this time, to give them the advantage of this amendment. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MILLER. I offer a substitute amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MILLER as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. TERRY: On page 6, line 12, after the word "centum", strike out the period, insert a colon and add the following: "Provided, That the States shall not be required to match the funds herein provided prior to January 1, 1938, and the amount provided by this title shall be paid to the respective States to be paid by them to all persons eligible to receive a pension under the provisions of this title."

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, the reason I am offering my amendment as a substitute is that I believe it will more nearly obtain fair treatment for all and removes the discretion which is permitted under the amendment of my colleague. I am not unmindful of the feeling of this House with reference to amendments, but I have a high regard for the sense of fairness of the American Congress, and it is in that spirit that I want to appeal to you.

Together with my colleague, Mr. Terry, I come from a State that is anxious to discharge its duty as a member of this Union. We want to do all that we can and fully provide our share of the governmental expenses. The State, because of its financial condition, is unable to contribute one single dime to this worthy cause and I do not want my people penalized. The legislature, which has just adjourned, has passed laws in an effort to extract tax money to put ourselves in a position to make a contribution toward the payment of old-age pensions.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does the Constitution of the State of Arkansas permit that the legislature shall present a "plan" in order that the gentleman's old people might be benefited by his amendment?

Mr. MILLER. It is very doubtful, and for that reason I think the 2½ years allowed under the substitute amendment is a reasonable time for our States to qualify.

Further, one of the statutes that was recently enacted by the legislature is now in the course of being tested with reference to its constitutionality.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. In my judgment the constitution of the gentleman's State and the constitution of my State as I know, would not permit the legislature to adopt such a plan as required by this bill and therefore with the gentleman's amendment adopted, it would not be possible for his old people to get one penny. Why does not the gentleman provide by amendment which would require the Federal Government to pay the pension direct to those people who are entitled to it?

Mr. MILLER. I do require it. It is required under my substitute amendment.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman's substitute amendment does not obviate the "plan."

Mr. MILLER. Yes. It requires the payment of $15 a month only under the limitations and restrictions in this bill, which contains a limitation of 65 years. This requires the money to be paid to the State, to be disbursed by the State to the people who are entitled to it according to the provisions in this bill and the passage of the substitute amendment will solve the question and will guarantee to those States 2½ years in which to comply with the provisions of the bill and place themselves in a position to make the contribution, and pending this time our eligible people will receive the same from the Federal Government as do the people from other more fortunate States.

I do not want to interfere with the theory for the payment of old-age pensions. I realize that every State ought to make its contribution, but we are facing a condition and not a theory. I am speaking to you about actual conditions. I know that Members from New York, Massachusetts, and the more favored States do not want to see old people, wherever they are situated, deprived of this aid. I do not care whether you call it a bounty and I do not care whether you justify it in the name of relief. I do not care whether you say it is a reward for loyal citizenship, but I do know and believe that the Congress is anxious to see justice done to all alike. The substitute amendment I have offered does not permanently relieve the States of their duty to make contributions. Public sentiment in those States will demand that by January 1, 1938, they shall have put their house in order and be in a position to make the contribution. It will render substantial justice, and that is all. It will render substantial justice to Tennessee, to Alabama, and to other States.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. Does the gentleman think it is fair to exclude certain States from bearing their share of the burden of supporting the old people?

Mr. MILLER. No, no; but when I look back over the time the gentleman from Massachusetts and I have been here and see the billions of dollars which this Congress has appropriated upon first one pretext and then another, I think it does not lie within the mouths of any of us to begrudge the pitiful sum of $15 a month to any American citizen, be he from Massachusetts, Arkansas, or where not. [Applause.] I do believe that justice ought to be done. That is why I am appealing to you to support this substitute amendment. This substitute amendment will give us a chance to provide our share in paying this pension, and I am sure that our State governments want to do this. As you know, I am not connected with our State government except as a citizen, but I am told that it cannot make its contribution now. This being true, my people will not immediately receive this aid unless you adopt this substitute, and in the name and on behalf of our aged men and women, loyal and good citizens,

I ask you to join me in seeing that they receive what the Federal Government gives to others, even though our State government is at present unable to make its contribution or pay its part.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the substitute amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I regret very much to reach the conclusion that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] will not obviate the necessity that the State should present a plan. Many of the States have no constitutional authority to present such a plan. Therefore they cannot be benefited by the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Now, there are some principles involved in this legislation. The first is: Does the Federal Government owe any duty of relief to the old people of the country when they are in need? If the Federal Government owes no such duty, then this bill has no proper place here.

If, on the other hand, the Federal Government does owe that duty, such obligation is in no wise conditioned upon the States making a contribution to the pension fund. And there is ample room for difference of opinion on whether we owe such duty; there is ample ground to question the wisdom and the soundness of the policy of the Federal Government entering into a pension system. But by this bill that principle is waived, that question is answered in the affirmative; then I say that no man who admits such a duty upon the part of the Federal Government can say that the pension should not be paid, forsooth, because a State fails to make its contribution or because a State is too stricken by poverty to do it. [Applause.]

Now, I say, let us have some regard for principle even at this time. I invite the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] and his associates on the committee to have some regard for principle. Why are they here with this bill? It is because they hold that the Federal Government has a duty to perform. Then I ask how can they come here to recognize that duty as to certain citizens of this country and at the same time ignore it as to other citizens who are equally worthy and equally in need?

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I yield.

Mr. TERRY. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that my amendment, not the substitute offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], but my amendment, provides that it is in the good and sound judgment of the President to say whether or not these States are in such financial condition that they cannot contribute.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes; it obviates the necessity for a plan; yet the amendment is hinged upon the President's discretion. If we owe the duty we are they who should recognize it. We should not leave it to the President or to anyone else to decide upon. We cannot acquit ourselves here by such subterfuges as this bill involves in certain of its aspects.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. The substitute removes that discretion.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman and I differ about that.

Mr. MILLER. The substitute removes that discretion and simply provides for a contribution.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. But for only a limited time. The gentleman's amendment does not recognize any responsibility upon the part of the Federal Government to pay the old-age pensions whether the State pays them or not.

Mr. MILLER. Yes; it does.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I say that if it is our duty to pay them, we should do it irrespective of whether the States do it or not; that is principle.

Mr. MILLER. I agree with that view; but we are taking into consideration the bill that is provided. We have got to get the best we can for these old people.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I am not trading.

Mr. MILLER. I am not trading either.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to both the amendment and the substitute.

Mr. Chairman, speaking for the committee, the committee hopes both these amendments will be defeated. We have already passed upon similar amendments this afternoon on at least two different occasions. These amendments in substance have as their objective the same objective had by at least two of the other amendments offered this afternoon.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. The amendments passed upon were permanent amendments, were they not?

Mr. McCORMACK. No. There was the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM] which was limited to 1937. Other amendments were offered which had the same objective.

Addressing myself now to the argument I urged in opposing the amendment offered by my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM], I do not want professional social workers of the Federal Government coming into Massachusetts and dictating to the old people of my State who are receiving benefits from a noncontributary pension system. I do not think the people of Nevada, or the people of any Southern State, of any Northern State, or of any Western State want to have professional social workers of the Federal Government dictating to the unfortunate aged of their State. That is one of the questions involved. A lot of other conditions will follow from such supervision. You cannot give the money of the Federal Government directly without the Federal Government controlling completely the administration of it and dictating to the beneficiaries of such legislation.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. My amendment does not make any change whatever in the method of administration.

Mr. McCORMACK. Federal money cannot be given without the Federal Government taking control and supervision over its payment and administration.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. TERRY. Whether the State contributes or not, the same administration is had under my amendment.

Mr. MILLER. Under both amendments, as a matter of fact, the money is contributed to the States and is administered by the States under the terms of this bill. This being so, where is there Federal interference any more than is provided in the original bill?

Mr. McCORMACK. My friend does not realize the natural and probable consequences of his amendment. A bill has not been passed but what natural and probable consequences flow therefrom. Will the gentleman from Arkansas stand for a Federal old-age pension without State responsibility?

Mr. MILLER. No.

Mr. McCORMACK. Does the gentleman want the Federal Government to go into Arkansas and give the pensions to the people of his State?

Mr. MILLER. I am not asking that.

Mr. McCORMACK. These are the things which actuated the Ways and Means Committee in their consideration of the bill. We are trying to preserve the dual system of government; trying to provide that the law shall be administered by local hands, responsible to local public opinion, by people who will have sympathy with the beneficiaries of this meritorious and progressive legislation.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I am always glad to yield when I have time.

Mr. MILLER. I do not want the Federal Government interfering in our internal affairs in Arkansas or in any other State; and if my amendment is adopted they will not be interfering. All I am asking is that the Congress give to Arkansas and the other States this contribution until 1938, and then if we shall not have put our house in order, cut us off.

Mr. McCORMACK. Until 1938 it is money of the Federal Government, is it not?

Until 1938 the Federal Government is going to administer the spending of this money during which time they are contributing the entire amount. I do not yield further because the gentleman and I have an honest difference of opinion as to the operation of his amendment and the operation of the amendment offered by his colleague from Arkansas.

Mr. Chairman, if there is one State in the Union where they take pride in their local responsibility and in their desire to control the operation of this law, it is and should be Arkansas, and I join with Arkansas and the people of any other State in their desire to reserve to the several States as great power as possible in the administration of this law, so that the unfortunate beneficiaries will not be subjected to the administration of this law by the Federal Government.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY].

The substitute amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TERRY) there were—ayes 59, noes 102.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MARTIN of Colorado: At the end of section 2, on page 4, add a new paragraph, as follows:

"(c) No State shall be disqualified to receive its quota of old-age assistance under this act by reason of failure to submit a plan in conformity with this section or any requirement thereof before July 1, 1937, after which date such State shall be disqualified to receive old-age assistance until its plan has been submitted and approved."

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, whether all the Members agree with this amendment or not, there can be absolutely no dispute about the facts upon which this amendment is based. It is so very brief that I am going to read it to you again:

No State shall be disqualified to receive its quota of old-age assistance under this act by reason of failure to submit a plan in conformity with this section or any requirement thereof before July 1, 1937.

Mr. Chairman, it will be recalled that in the debate last Saturday I made the statement that certain provisions of section 2 of this act, and particularly subparagraph (2) of section 2, on page 4, would disqualify every State in the Union to receive any old-age assistance under this act until they had passed laws which would enable them to submit a plan in conformity with the act. There was some disposition to question the correctness of my statement, even by members of the committee, but all those who were here will remember that when the argument was concluded it was admitted, and it is shown in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD covering the debates of last Saturday, that the State of Delaware is the only State in the Union which can comply with the requirements of section 2 of this act and be qualified to receive the old-age assistance provided for therein. That is by reason of the fact you only have to live 5 years in the State of Delaware in order to qualify for a State pension, which is the residence requirement of this bill. The other States require from 10 years upward; my State requires 15; therefore, all those States are disqualified to receive pensions under the Federal requirement and cannot submit a plan which will meet with approval. You will find the table of all State old-age residence requirements in my remarks in the RECORD of April 13, at page 5821.

My thought with reference to section 2 has broadened somewhat since the debate of last Saturday. There are 10 requirements in section 2 that must be complied with. I would be willing to bet any Member of the House $100 that Delaware cannot comply with all these requirements. No fish in the country, however small, can escape the net of this bill. The only thing you can do with it, if you want any of the people of your States to get Federal old-age assistance, is to postpone the operation of this section until July 1, 1937, in order to give them a chance to get their houses in order. Three-fourths of the States are disqualified because they cannot make a contribution. All but one of them are disqualified under the residence clause in section 2 of this bill, and that is admitted, and several of them are disqualified by reason of the fact they will have to amend their constitutions before they can take advantage of this bill.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. MILLER. In the event the amendment offered by the gentleman is adopted, may I ask whether between now and January 1, 1937, the $15 a month is payable to the people of all States alike?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I am going to be frank about this matter.

Mr. MILLER. In other words, is the $15 a month payable to all those over 65 years of age?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. This amendment does not expressly call for that. I decided to do the simplest thing possible and that is to offer an amendment which, if adopted, would be at least a declaration by the committee that this section 2 of the law will not go into effect against the States until they have had time to make provision to comply with it.

Mr. MILLER. According to the gentleman's amendment, nothing would be payable or might not be payable until July 1, 1937?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. May I say what my amendment does cover. All of the State old-age pensions plan requirements are outlined in section 2 in order that it may conform to the Federal plan. My amendment simply says that no State shall be disqualified until July 1, 1937, for failure to submit such a plan. There can be no mistaking what my amendment means. If its adoption requires the amendment of section 3 also, which provides the plan of Federal payment to the States, we can take care of that when we get to it. It would not be germane to section 2. If we are unable to do that, this amendment would at least be a peg upon which the other body might hang further needed amendments.

The point raised by the gentleman's question has been suggested to me before and I drew several forms of my amendment containing mandatory provision for Federal old-age assistance to all dependent old people, but I finally decided that the simplest move would be the best and I drafted the amendment as it now reads, which does not change a word in the law, but simply adds that the State shall not be disqualified to receive Federal old-age assistance for a period of 2 years because of its failure to submit an approved plan under section 2. In my judgment it will take 2 years for most of them to comply, and the upshot of it will be that the majority of the States will get nothing from the Government the next year or two.

Mr. Chairman, apparently the bill is going through the House just as it came from the committee. Only 50 or 60 of us have voted for the McGroarty, the Lundeen, and the Greenway amendments, each of them intended to give the people a pension as well as a plan. My vote for those three amendments does not mean that I favored all the provisions in them, but it did mean that I favored the principle and spirit of those plans, any one of which, I believe, could be worked into a practicable plan. I believe if we would provide even a modest pension and start in paying it, it would go a long way toward satisfying the great majority of the people. If we expect them to be reasonable, let us treat them reasonably.

Let me say one more word, and this is the important part of my statement. Every man here knows there will not be a dollar paid out under the unemployment title of this bill for years. Everyone knows there will not be one dollar paid out under the old-age contribution provisions in this bill for years. The only title under which one dollar can be paid to the old people of this country or to the unemployed people of this country is title I of this bill, and if you pass this act with this section in operation in the language it is now, they will not get a dollar under this bill for several years.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NICHOLS as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. MARTIN of Colorado: On page 7, line 17, after the word "individuals", add a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 7. Provided, That in the event States do not by January 1, 1936, appropriate funds as herein provided, with which to match funds to be supplied by the Federal Government, the Federal Government shall make payments as provided herein the same as though the State had appropriated money to match Federal funds."

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma desire to be heard?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes; but I am wondering what is the point of order.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. The amendment, certainly, is not a substitute for the pending amendment, because it is offered to a different part of the bill.

Mr. NICHOLS. No; it is a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The proposed amendment is not a substitute for the pending amendment.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado, while no point of order was made against it, is not germane to this bill, and its adoption would be a nullity. It does absolutely nothing.

The amendment starts out by saying that no State shall be disqualified until July 1937, but every word and every sentence and the entire spirit of this bill show that they could not possibly be qualified until the States had adopted a uniform plan. So the gentleman takes a negative view of this matter that is not compatible with the language or the theory of the bill. Not only this but if the amendment were adopted 20 States of the Union would be absolutely cut off at the hips, and so I ask that the amendment be voted down.

This is just another attempt to inject something here that has not been considered at all after the committee for 3 months has considered every phase of the subject matter in the bill.

With respect to the amendments that have been offered here by the gentleman from Arkansas, I concurred in them myself for a long time, as a member of the Ways and Means Committee; but we became convinced we could not carry out this social program, we could not provide for a pension that would get by the Executive of this Nation, and we could not have any relief at all if we started to adopt all kind of plans under which various States of the Union would be exempt from contributing.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the pending amendment.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, there is an amendment pending, offered by the gentleman from Colorado, on which we are asking for a vote. Has there been any amendment offered to that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] has been recognized to offer such an amendment.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, how many amendments are now pending?

The CHAIRMAN. There is one amendment pending and the gentleman from Ohio is offering an amendment to the pending amendment.

The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TRUAX to the amendment offered by Mr. MARTIN of Colorado: Page 2, line 17, add a new section, as follows:

"Where State plans have not been submitted or approved by the Social Security Board there shall be paid to all persons, by the United States Government, over 60 years of age, who are citizens of and residing in the United States for a period of 10 years, who are not gainfully employed and who have no income-bearing property in excess of $5,000, the sum of $30 a month. Upon attaining the age of 65 years, the amount of monthly payments shall be increased to $50. Upon attaining the age of 70 years, the amount of monthly payments shall be increased to $75."

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not an amendment to the pending amendment. The amendment is offered to a different section and a different part of the bill and embraces an entirely different subject matter.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado, it pertains to certain States that may be affected adversely during the next 2 years if this bill as written is enacted into law.

My amendment to his amendment prescribes the manner in which certain States will of necessity have to be handled if old-age pensions are to be made applicable to other States where plans have been submitted, and have been disapproved by the Social Security Board, or in certain States, such as the State of Arkansas, where satisfactory plans cannot be submitted to the Social Security Board because of lack of finances with which to meet the share contributed by the Federal Government. I claim that my amendment is germane to his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair sustains the point of order because the amendment applies to a different place in the bill. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN of Colorado) there were 29 ayes and 108 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 7, line 17, after the word "individuals", add a new section:

"SEC. 7. That in the event States do not by January 1, 1936, appropriate funds as herein provided with which to match funds to be supplied by the Federal Government, the Federal Government shall make payments as provided herein, the same as though the State had appropriated money to match Federal funds."

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, in presenting this amendment, I would like if possible to get some common ground upon which we could start. I assume by the very fact that the great Ways and Means Committee of this House has spent so much time in the consideration of this legislation, and by reason of the fact that this House is now spending so much time in consideration of this legislation, that by these actions we admit the Federal Government does have some responsibility to the aged people, indigent dependents of this country.

If that is so, and this Congress passes legislation saying to the old people of this country, "We will pay our obligation, provided thus and so"—I do not care what the proviso is—then we have been derelict in our duty to them.

This bill provides that the people in the States can get no benefit unless the legislature of that State sees fit to make appropriations to match the money of the Federal Government. If the legislature does make up its mind to do this, then they must find the funds in the State with which to match the Federal funds. And if the State does not have and cannot raise the money with which to do this, then the old people of that State are sunk.

I submit to you in all fairness that if the Government of the United States admits that they owe the old people of this country any amount of money in order to help them in their declining years—and I submit that by our actions now we do admit it—I do not care whether it is 1 cent or $100 or $1,000 per month, if the Government admits that they owe that, I say in all fairness it should pay it to them, wherever they are, and not place a penalty on them by reason of their geographical location, where the inhabitants are not able to match the funds of the Federal Government.

My amendment would simply do this. Of course in those States that could appropriate enough money to pay $15 or any other sum and match the money of the Federal Government, the people of that State would be greatly benefited, but in those States where they could not raise the money, the people would still have some help. If it is a responsibility of the Federal Government to contribute in a State where the State can match the money of the Federal Government, it is also a responsibility of the Federal Government to pay in those States that cannot. Some of the members have said to me, "Do you mean to tell me that you favor the Government paying a pension without the State contributing something?" I have answered "Certainly", and I have asked them why they do not favor it. Their answer is "Don't you know that if you do that, every time you make a campaign in your State to come back to Congress you will have to promise the people that you will raise the ante and raise the ante and raise the ante."

I do not know whether that will apply to some of you gentlemen, but it surely would not apply to me, except to this extent: That if I thought the ante should be raised I would promise to try and raise it; if I did not I would simply say I thought they were getting enough. If this bill is passed and becomes a law, and my amendment is adopted and the Government pays direct to the States, under my amendment the Government would pay it through your machinery, Mr. Chairman. I will answer the argument of the gentleman from Massachusetts when he says it would be necessary to send down social-service workers. There is no one in this House more strongly against importing women from one State to another, and calling them social workers and having them go around telling the women of the country how to raise flowers and children, than I am. My amendment will operate right straight through the State machinery just the same as though they were contributing, and no social service or Federal machinery will be necessary.

Mr. Chairman, my reasons for introducing and insisting upon the passage of this amendment, in addition to those above stated, are, briefly, as follows:

The taxes which are used to defray the expense of the Federal Government are collected from all over the United States, and every section of the United States contributes to the Government's support, and the barriers of State lines are considered; and therefore I say that when the benefits of government are to be given back to the people of the United States, and these benefits can only be derived from the collection of taxes, the benefits should be distributed back to the people by the Federal Government without paying any attention to State lines. And this is exactly what you do when you say that these benefits can only be derived by those old people who are so fortunate as to live in a State whose financial condition, or whose legislature will permit the passage of legislation to meet the requirements of this bill.

Frankly, I am of the opinion that the Constitution of the State of Oklahoma will have to be amended before Oklahoma can possibly bring herself within the pale of the provisions of this act. And I know that the old people of Oklahoma should not be penalized by reason of the fact that they live in Oklahoma.

Frankly, I do not think that this act provides a sufficient amount of money to be paid, even if my amendment were adopted, and I will frankly say to you that if my amendment is adopted, I will immediately offer another amendment to raise the amount which the Government must pay direct to the old people who are entitled to receive the pension.

The steam roller manned by you gentlemen who are members of the Ways and Means Committee is oiled and working in perfect condition this afternoon, and I want to warn you that if you crowd this bill down the throats of the American people, and it does not operate any better than I think it will operate, then I say that we are playing into the hands of the Republican Party of this Nation and are probably doing more to hurt the cause of democracy in the United States than anything else we have done this entire session.

I probably will vote for the passage of this bill, but if I do, I will not vote for it because I think it is adequate, nor because I think that it fulfills the pledge that I, and the majority of the Members of this House made, when we ran for office last fall, but I will only vote for it because I hope that every State in the Union can, and will, pass legislation which will permit the old people of those States to enjoy the benefits of this legislation—even though those benefits are not adequate, if and when they receive them, purely upon the theory that it is better to take a half loaf than none at all, and for the further reason that I deem it necessary to at this session of Congress put some sort of old-age pension legislation upon the statute books.

I have ever been for unemployment insurance, but I am not at all sure that if the unemployment insurance which we provide for in this bill is adopted, that it will take care of the situation.

As a matter of fact, I signed the Greenway petition, demanding that the Ways and Means Committee report these measures out, separated from each other, so that we could look at them and see their merits by themselves, and not be compelled to consider them in the form of an omnibus bill whose provisions are so interwoven with each other that it is almost impossible to disect them and know what the net result will be.

This measure will as surely pass this House as I am standing here today, in exactly the same form that it was brought to the floor by the Ways and Means Committee, and I sincerely hope that after we men, who have been flattened out by the wheels of the steam roller which has forced this bill upon us, have shaken ourselves to an awakening and find that the measure is in the hands of the United States Senate for consideration, that that body will have both foresight and intestinal fortitude enough to amend it, as we should have amended it, to bring it somewhere close to the proportions of the law that the old people of this Nation who have worn themselves out through toil and labor that these United States might today enjoy her position at the head of the procession of nations, are expecting.

In closing, I want to say that if I vote for this bill on final passage, I will be in the frame of mind that a man would be in were he to find himself in the middle of a blizzard without clothing, and was forced to put on a thin suit of B. V. D.'s for warmth, by reason of the fact that there were no warmer clothes available.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TRUAX. I rise to ask the Chairman if my amendment, just ruled out on a point of order, would be germane to the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it would not be. It would be germane as an original amendment after this amendment is disposed of.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, this is the same amendment that has been offered on three different occasions this afternoon. I do not see how any of my distinguished friends who propose such an amendment can argue that the Federal Government contributes all of the money, and at the same time that the Federal Government will, and should not, supervise the spending of that money. One follows the other, no matter what is intended. If the Federal Government is contributing all of the money, I expect the Federal Government to supervise and control the spending of that money. Personally I am opposed to that idea, but if that is to be the policy, then I want the Federal Government to control and supervise the spending of its own money.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Would the gentleman refuse to send Federal funds into a State to help the aged when that State is not able to match the fund?

Mr. McCORMACK. We cannot have two different systems in the United States. We cannot have Federal aid to a State making a State contribution in some States and have total Federal contribution to other States. It is ridiculous, in my opinion, to advocate any such plan; to have some of the States of the Union performing their functions as sovereign States and other States of the Union not performing their functions as sovereign States. I have just as much feeling and sympathy for the infirm and the dependent as has the gentleman or anyone else, and if we could afford a higher amount each month, I know that all would vote for it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I will. I have a very great respect for whatever the gentleman from Alabama says, and when he says anything I consider it very seriously before I disagree with him. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Why does not the gentleman or some member of the committee answer my argument on the merits, instead of stating something with reference to the formality of the situation?

Mr. McCORMACK. I believe it is the best policy to have a law which is consistent with our dual system of government, with the Federal Government contributing and the State assuming its responsibility.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does the gentleman think that such a measure as this which coerces and bribes the State into a system of Federal aid is conducive to the dual form of government? You are destroying our governmental system.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Oh, I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Alabama is out of order.

Mr. SABATH. This is encouragement to the State.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. What we are doing is to wipe out State lines. We are centralizing all of the powers here in Washington. We are trying to destroy our dual system of government. That is what is the matter with this measure.

Mr. McCORMACK. If we follow the gentleman's idea, we will destroy it. If we are going to take away from the State the State's responsibility, we will destroy our dual system, the State, at the expense of the Federal Government.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. McCORMACK. Let me say one more word about the gentleman's amendment. If the gentleman's amendment is adopted, no State intended will get a penny.

Mr. NICHOLS. No, no.

Mr. McCORMACK. Pardon me. What I may say is at least worthy of consideration. The gentleman has asked that the States get Federal contribution up to a certain time.

Mr. NICHOLS. Oh, no. The gentleman did not hear my amendment.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman's amendment provides for Federal contribution as provided in this act?

Mr. NICHOLS. That is correct.

Mr. McCORMACK. What is in this act? Not a penny.

Mr. NICHOLS. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. McCORMACK. Pardon me just a moment. There is nothing in this bill as to what the Federal Government will contribute until the State passes a law. Then the Federal Government says, "We will contribute, dollar for dollar, up to $15 a month."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] has expired.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have two additional minutes. I would like to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McFARLANE and Mr. MARTIN of Colorado) there were ayes 47 and noes 126.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask if it will be germane to offer an amendment asking for $50 a month for every person over 60 years of age who is in need?

The CHAIRMAN. Whenever such an amendment is offered the Chair will pass on it.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on title I and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McCLELLAN: Page 2, strike out title I and all of section 1 of title I, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"TITLE I. OLD-AGE ASSISTANCE

"APPROPRIATION

"SECTION 1. In order to furnish financial assistance, such as to provide, as far as practical, reasonable subsistence compatible with decency and health to aged individuals without such subsistence, who are American citizens and who have or shall hereafter attain the age of more than 65 years, and who may qualify as eligible to receive such aid under the conditions herein prescribed, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $450,000,000, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year thereafter a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of this title."

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to strike at two of the principal faults of title I of this act. The first is that if the Government is going to deal with one of the major problems confronting this Nation, it ought to accept the responsibility for dealing with it to a final conclusion and so as to get satisfactory results.

The subject of title I is Grants to States for Old-Age Assistance. If it was a problem of constructing State improvements or improvements for the Nation, where a State receives some special benefit, where property rights were involved, and where property values were increased, it would be quite appropriate, in my judgment, for the United States Government to say to that State thus affected that the Federal Government will not pay anything for that purpose until and unless the State and its citizens are willing to help raise the revenues for that purpose. But here we are not dealing with property rights. We are not contributing to the material wealth of States as such. We are making a contribution, if we are doing anything, or we ought to be making a contribution, to the individual citizen who desires our aid and whom this legislation proposes to assist.

Under the present bill there is proposed an appropriation of $49,750,000 for the first year. I want to say to you—and I am talking to those who have given the most study and thought to this measure, the members of the Ways and Means Committee—that you are not deceiving anyone. We all know, and you must admit, that during this time of emergency, during this time of distress, when the Government is appropriating $4,880,000,000 to try to find work for able-bodied men, we should consider those who have reached that age where they can no longer work. The emergency is just as great or greater for those people. Still you propose for the next year only $49,000,000 from the Government's Treasury to aid those who are old, infirm, and can no longer earn a livelihood. Of course, you are proceeding on the assumption—and correctly so under the terms of your bill—that States cannot match it, that States will not match it, and State laws will not be effective, and therefore no greater appropriation will be required. That is one of the great injustices this bill inflicts. Do you know what you propose to appropriate—$49,750,000—will provide? It will only amount to $4.17 per month on the basis of 1,000,000 out of 7,500,000 people who are more than 65 years of age. Is that adequate? I say to you that today there are 2,000,000 or more who ought to have this relief. If you put it on that basis you will provide for only $2.08 for each of these old people each month. That is not adequate to make the contribution to which they are entitled. I realize the temperament of this body, and I know you are going to vote this down. I think this is a problem of such magnitude that partisanship should play no part in it.

I am not interested in warning the Republican Members of their danger, but I say to you, my Democratic colleagues, the responsibility in the passage of this legislation is ours—the one in power today. The President of the United States is our leader and we have a large enough majority in either branch of Congress to pass any bill we desire. The few Republicans here are not in our way. We, as Democrats, must accept full responsibility for this bill and the consequences resulting from its passage. My amendment proposes an appropriation sufficient to pay $15 per month to 2,500,000 who can and will qualify for these benefits, and should be passed. If you pass this bill in its present form with this meager appropriation you are going to seriously discriminate against a large percentage who are entitled to these benefits. It will be disappointing to everyone and result in consequences you shall soon regret.

I plead for your consideration before it is too late. The old and infirm bring to you and me as their representatives their baskets empty and ask for grain. Are you going to fill them with shucks instead and leave them destitute and hungry? Let us not turn them away. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN] has expired.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, unusual as the practice is in these times, I wish to make an appeal to reason and to logic. This bill provides for a system of State aid for which there is no warrant in the Constitution and which can be sustained, as the Supreme Court has decided in the Massachusetts case, merely because there is nobody eligible to call it in question. It provides for a system of old-age pensions for which there is no warrant in the Constitution, and upon the soundness of which men of ability and character might well find themselves in radical difference.

As I stand in this Chamber I wonder what those who have gone before us would have said had they stood here today. What would Jefferson have said—what would any of the great Democrats of the past have said—had he been in the House and have seen a committee of his party coming in here with a bill based upon such principles as characterize this bill?

By saying that we should have a system of old-age pensions, through a system of State aid, the gentlemen of the committee have conceded the point that the Federal Government is responding to its proper function. They say that we are come upon a new day, in which the Government shall recognize its obligation to pension the old. Discussion of that point has now passed for them. Now, will the Government meet this responsibility? Will we do what we say the Government ought to do?

If members of the committee will not do it, then give me some reason. I appeal to you to answer this on its merit. No member of the committee has attempted to answer on the merits so far as I know. I have heard no defense. I am tired of evasions; I am tired of assigning reasons of formalism and of technicality when reason is appealed to. I am tired of appeals to sentiment and of plays to prejudice against social workers.

One Member replied that not to require contributions from the States would tend to destroy our system of government. What, I ask him, could have more influence toward the destruction of our duality of government than an offer to the legislatures of the States a bribe of a grant of Federal funds to do a thing that they perhaps otherwise would not do? [Applause.] What greater force to destroy our form of government can be offered than for the Federal Government to coerce, through a measure such as this, the States into establishing a pension system which they otherwise might not want to do?

What we are doing here may have consequences reaching far beyond the horizon of the lives of those now here. Its tendency is to destroy our form of government. Its tendency is to centralize all the affairs of government in Washington until, following onto its logical end what is being done by this bill, the time may come when our dual system will be destroyed and the Union be dissolved into sections, not through force but in disgust and by unanimous consent.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOFFMAN: On page 4, section 2, line 6, strike out the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "ten"; and on the same page and section, line 7, strike out the word "nine" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifteen."

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, the difficulty the gentlemen on the Democratic side find themselves in and the cause of their bitter disagreement grows out of the fact that they have disregarded a statement of our President. Last year, when he came back from that trip across the Pacific, which he so richly deserved, and stopped over in Wisconsin, he told us very plainly that "you should not rob Peter to pay Paul." That was a sound, sane statement of a principle.

Now you have a plan whereby you propose to take a certain amount from one class of citizens and give it to another class, and today we find Members from some States, the poorer States, States which cannot meet the requirements of this bill, which cannot get anything under the provisions of this bill, opposed to those requirements and arguing with Members of their own party who live in more wealthy States.

The bill itself is merely a modified form of HUEY LONG'S "share the wealth" proposition, a mild version of the Townsend plan. Unlike those plans, it provides the machinery for the collection of the necessary funds to put it into operation.

It takes from thrifty, saving Peter to pay unfortunate Paul, whether that misfortune be due to his lack of opportunity, lack of thrift, aversion to labor or to misfortune over which he had no control.

To the operation of this scheme, as between individuals, you have no objection, but, when you attempt to apply it and the States are each required to furnish an amount to match that taken from a certain class by the Government, then you of the poorer States object and you Democrats of the wealthier States refuse their plea; you will not give to a poor State or to the inhabitants thereof that which you insist the impoverished individual shall have from his more fortunate neighbor—the height of inconsistency. But that is nothing new in your legislation.

The Chairman of the Committee on Rules, Mr. O'CONNOR, this morning asked a question and he made a statement, neither of which should go unanswered. Referring to the Republicans, he said "They fought every humanitarian piece of legislation." Perhaps he made that statement because, when talking, he was a zealous partisan; perhaps he made it because he has always lived in New York and has never visited "the sticks" and by "the sticks" I mean that country west of the western boundary of Pennsylvania and east of the Rocky Mountains—other than Chicago.

His sincerity is unquestioned, his knowledge unbounded, and it could only have been in a thoughtless moment that he advanced that idea; because in Michigan for many years, under Republican rule, we have had legislation granting mother's pensions, aid to children, and workmen's compensation laws. Did he refer to humanitarian legislation? Surely he has not forgotten the legislation which preceded, that which followed, the emancipation proclamation; that declaration by the first Republican President and those laws enacted by a Republican Congress, the greatest single enunciation looking toward the freeing of humanity ever made by any one man.

And is he familiar with the history of the legislation looking toward the prevention of child labor and of that which was enacted to better the working conditions, not only of women, but of men, as to hours and places and safety of employment? Michigan's statute books contain enactment after enactment for those very purposes.

The number of children who were benefited by the enactment of the Federal laws against the exploitation of childhood was negligible when compared with those benefited by the laws of Northern States enacted under Republican rule.

The gentleman from New York asked the question: "When did the Republicans think of old-age pensions during all the years they were in power?" That is a fair question. Never was there necessity for old-age pensions until you gentlemen began your raids on the Public Treasury. [Applause.] We never even dreamed it would be necessary as a national proposition.

When did we begin to think of it? I will tell you when. When the people discovered that you, as a party, did not mean what you said; when you repudiated the platform you adopted at Chicago; when you repudiated the promises that you made during the campaign and on which your candidates won their election.

Consideration of old-age pensions and like legislation became necessary after business men learned that you did not intend to balance the Budget, that the promises your President had caused to be printed upon the Government's obligations were not intended to be fulfilled; when the regulations imposed by the last Congress, under the present administration, prevented the natural, normal recovery which has always, unaided, followed a national depression.

Some of us remember the administration of Grover Cleveland, the 50-cent wheat, the work in the factories at $3 per week, and we recall that, out of that depression, when McKinley was elected in the campaign where the battle-cry was "a full dinner pail for all", "Protection for American industries", how the wheels of industry, after his election, began again to hum and smoke from the factory chimneys once more clouded the skies.

No; never under the long, long years of Republican control and administration, has it been necessary to consider the question of old-age pensions, of unemployment insurance, as a national question. Only when a Wallace and a Tugwell began their efforts to control the operations of nature did such a question arise.

Oh, I know what you will say: That Harding's administration gave us this depression. But remember that, while there were rascals in the Republican Party, while we had a Teapot Dome, a Doherty, and, to our sorrow, others of like mind, that your party has never been free from men of the same stripe and with the same purpose in mind, and the poorest excuse in all the world and the one which you persistently use is that Hoover did this or that or something else. When she caught me with jam on my face and fingers, mother never accepted the excuse that my little sister had taken it from the shelf.

"Playing politics with human misery"—no; neither good Democrats nor good Republicans would intentionally do such a thing, but, unfortunately, we each, and always a successful party has more of them, have within the party organizations a few plunderers. Never before, however, has a great party openly—yes, proudly—used public money for political ends. During the last campaign, you all know, not that some of your party chiefs played politics with human misery, but that they played politics with money, and that not their own, but the money of the taxpayers.

Nor have you kept faith with the people. I hold in my hand Liberty bond no. 1298252, issued by the United States Government of America, dated October 24, 1918, bearing the authorized facsimile signature of Mr. McADOO, then Secretary of the Treasury. This bond contains this statement:

> The principal and interest hereof are payable in United States gold coin of the present standard of value.

This bond was issued and it was sold during the administration, and presumably with the authority and approval of a great Democratic President.

Last year another Congress and another Democratic President, one who stands for the underprivileged, repudiated this promise. And, for the first time in the history of our country, in the one hundred and fifty-ninth year of our Government, you caused us, as a nation, to violate that promise, to repudiate our obligations.

Honesty the best policy? Why teach the children honesty, if a nation may be dishonest, keeping its promises only as convenience dictates? I shall not say that this repudiation was a lie—that is a harsh word—and it does not apply to the failure to keep a promise which was intended to be kept when made. The repudiation is a breach of good faith.

It is, however, what might be expected from a great national party which adopts a platform, which makes a campaign upon a declaration of principles, upon promises, and then, within a few short months, repudiates the platform, disregards the principles.

No Republican need criticize Democratic policies or legislation. If you wish constructive criticism, turn to the statements of that venerable and patriotic Senator from Virginia, CARTER GLASS; read what Bainbridge Colby, President Wilson's Secretary of State, has said; read and consider what Senator TYDINGS, over in the Senate, had to say just a few days ago about your conduct and what was certain to follow. You will cease to criticize Republicans. You will understand that, however sincere and laudable your purpose may be, the incompetent, arbitrary, and unjustifiable interference with those who produce the wealth of this country by all of these plans, which your President has said were merely experiments and one of which, the triple A, Secretary Wallace is quoted as having said was a "political expediency", give you the real reasons why you are now considering this bill. The quackery practiced by your experts has brought on a disease which you, no doubt, believe can be cured, or at least alleviated, by this remedy. Let us hope and trust you are right. We on this side can do naught else. Let us hope and pray that the results will be no worse than your other so-called "remedies."

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. TRUAX: On page 2, line 17, add a new section, as follows:
> "Where State plans have not been submitted nor approved by the Social Security Board there shall be paid to all persons by the United States Government, over 60 years of age who are citizens of and residing in the United States, for a period of 10 years, who are not gainfully employed and who have no income-bearing property in excess of $5,000, the sum of $30 per month. Upon attaining the age of 65 years the amount of monthly payments shall be increased to $50. Upon attaining the age of 70 years the amount of monthly payments shall be increased to $75."

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman withhold his point of order?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I reserve the point of order for the present.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, objections to this amendment and other similar amendments have been made by the members of the Ways and Means Committee on the argument that to adopt these amendments would mean a decentralization of the powers invested in the States and in the Federal Government by this bill. May I advise my good friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], that has already been done in the case of Federal relief work in the State of Ohio and some other States.

In the State of Ohio Mr. Harry L. Hopkins a few weeks ago summarily, arrogantly, and unjustly withdrew all cooperative efforts with the State of Ohio in the administration of relief funds. Mr. Hopkins followed with a statement a little later on in which he said that any Members of Congress or other politicians who mixed in relief work in any State would be kicked out, and damn quick.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. May I say to the gentleman from Ohio that there is less power vested in the Federal Government under the administration of title I and the other grants and aids to States than any other similar statutes on the books.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, permit me to say that this Congress has already appropriated from forty to fifty million dollars more for the Army. I understand there will be set aside the sum of $900,000,000, to be spent by Dr. Rexford Tugwell to buy land and to alleviate the dust menace; yet here we are considering and voting to make available a lousy, measly $49,000,000 to take care of 1,000,000 aged people in this great country of ours. Think of it—$49,000,000 as measured against $900,000,000 for Dr. Tugwell's relief. Is that justice? Is that fair? Is that giving the aged people what they deserve? Mr. Chairman, our very eloquent colleague, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON], spoke very feelingly and eulogistically of Thomas Jefferson and George Washington.

In the time of Thomas Jefferson and George Washington there was no need for old-age pensions. Ninety-eight percent of the American people lived on the farms. The farmers were energetic and frugal and the 2 percent who lived in the urban centers of population waxed fat on the toil and production of the farmers. Following the Revolutionary War, Alexander Hamilton, Secretary of the Treasury, found a new-born nation confronted with a seemingly insurmountable debt. The farmers shipped their surplus grains and commodities to Europe. Alexander Hamilton levied a gentle import duty upon the manufactured commodities made in Europe and bought by the American farmers. It was then that Hamilton said that he had "smote the rock from which the golden flow of prosperity gushed forth", when, as a matter of truth, it was the farmers' labor and thrift that did the trick.

The bill we are considering is H. R. 7260, to provide for the general welfare by establishing a system of Federal old-age benefits, and by enabling the several States to make more adequate provision for aged persons, dependent and crippled children, maternal and child welfare, public health, and the administration of their unemployment compensation laws; to establish a Social Security Board; to raise revenue; and for other purposes. This bill was introduced in the House of Representatives April 4, 1935.

On April 11 the House adopted the rule making the bill in order and providing for 20 hours of debate.

A careful study of the bill will disclose that in section 1, title I, the sum of $49,750,000 is authorized to be appropriated for the coming fiscal year and for each fiscal year thereafter, a sum sufficient to carry out the provisions of this title. The sums made available shall be used for making payments to States. In my judgment the sum herein appropriated is entirely too small.

In his annual message to the Congress, President Franklin D. Roosevelt said:

> In addressing you on June 8, 1934, I summarized the main objectives of our American program. Among these was, and is, the security of the men, women, and children of the Nation against certain hazards and vicissitudes of life.
>
> At this time I recommend the following types of legislation looking to economic security:
>
> 1. Unemployment compensation.
>
> 2. Old-age benefits, including compulsory and voluntary annuities.
>
> 3. Federal aid to dependent children through grants to States for the support of existing mother's pension systems and for services for the protection and care of homeless, neglected, dependent, and crippled children.
>
> 4. Additional Federal aid to State and local public-health agencies and the strengthening of the Federal Public Health Service. I am not at this time recommending the adoption of so-called "health insurance", although groups representing the medical profession are cooperating with the Federal Government in the further study of the subject, and definite progress is being made.
>
> With respect to unemployment compensation, I have concluded that the most practical proposal is the levy of a uniform Federal pay-roll tax, 90 percent of which should be allowed as an offset to employers contributing under a compulsory State unemployment compensation act. The purpose of this is to afford a requirement of a reasonably uniform character for all States cooperating with the Federal Government.
> We pay now for the dreadful consequence of economic insecurity—and dearly. This plan presents a more equitable and infinitely less expensive means of meeting these costs. We cannot afford to neglect the plain duty before us. I strongly recommend action to attain the objectives sought in this report.

Hearings were started on January 21, 1935. The testimony compiled from the hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means on the Economic Security Act totaled 1,141 pages. The recommendations of the committee cover four subjects, namely:

First. Unemployment compensation.

Second. Old-age security.

Third. Security for children.

Fourth. Extension of public-health services.

Yet we authorize only $49,000,000 for the aged! On unemployment compensation the bill proposes a Federal pay-roll tax upon all employers throughout the country who employ four or more employees. A Social Insurance Board is created to consist of three members appointed by the President functioning within the Department of Labor. The old-age security portion of the bill provides for an old-age pension of $30 per month, the cost of which is to be borne equally by State and Federal Governments. In the event of States not passing adequate legislation indigent people 65 years of age will be down and out. The bill provides for an old-age annuity system for all employed persons and for a system of voluntary annuities for people of small incomes. That section which deals with security for children seeks to meet the costs of dependent children, oftentimes referred to as "mothers' pensions." Ten million dollars is proposed for the extension of public-health services. Total appropriations authorized in the bill amount to $98,500,000 in the fiscal year 1936 and $218,500,000 in subsequent years. Only a beginning. That is all and nothing more. We are only scratching the surface; hence, my amendments to obtain funds from the millionaire class.

The minimum age, both in States wherein old-age-pension laws have been enacted, and in the minds of legislators who have given this subject considerable thought, is 65 years. In my judgment, the limit should be reduced to 60 years. The reason for this suggested reduction is twofold. First, it gives the needy individual 5 additional years in which to enjoy, if he can, the fruits of hard toil and industry during the earlier years of his life. Hence, I choose to call all such measures as the one under discussion "old-age rewards." Second, under the system of government which has permitted ultrarich individuals and wealthy corporations and trusts to accumulate 95 percent of the wealth of this country, under a system which has created a mortgaged and bonded indebtedness, public and private, of approximately $230,000,000,000, largely controlled by the international Wall Street bankers and their fellow pirates, the mortgage-loan companies and 36-percent loan sharks, under a system which has resulted in massed finance, massed industry, and 11,000,000 idle men, it is impossible for a man 60 years of age to obtain work, even though he be able-bodied and willing to work.

The average longevity of persons reaching the age of 65 is about 11 years for men, 15 years for women. Eleven short years of picking for men and 15 for women what few crumbs of happiness and contentment that may be gleaned from the festal boards of the twentieth century Dives by the modern Lazarus. Surely, every human being reaching 65 is entitled to 11 short years of relaxation and contentment before being struck down by the withering hand of death.

Mr. Chairman, that a comparatively small class are absorbing the wealth of the country as fast as it is produced, leaving to those who create it scarcely a bare subsistence, is apparent to all.

The people I plead for are the struggling masses, the farmers, the wage workers, small business men, and producers who for 45 years have toiled with hand and with brain, toiling away day by day, month by month, and year by year, creating the wealth of the country, paying the taxes of the country, to have that wealth accumulated by the favored few of special privilege and grand larceny.

During the recent winter practically all of the opponents of taxing the rich were happy and comfortable in their own homes. They were warm. Yet thousands and tens of thousands of little children shivered because of the inability of their parents to buy coal or gas. People still are hungry in a land of plenty. People freeze in a country that abounds in coal and oil. People are homeless because there are too many homes. Eleven million men are still unemployed because there are too many men who want to work. Too many millionaires and too many paupers!

What shall be done with these distressed people? Why, give them the reward of a fixed annuity or retirement when they become 60 years of age and let that reward be at least $50 per month?

You who have a home, who sit by the warmth of your fire in winter, in the coolness of your spacious porch in the summer, who are blessed with an income, it is you who must be your brother's helper in this great crisis. It is easy to be happy and contented when you have a good job or a good income.

It was easy enough to be a good citizen and a consistent patriot when you have plenty. But it is poverty and economic slavery, suffering and distress, sorrow and disappointment, that try men's souls, that proclaim to the world the kind of stuff of which they are made.

Mr. Chairman, we seek to rescue and rehabilitate, with old-age pensions, the human derelicts beached on the sands of misery and despair by the tidal wave of legalized burglary, organized plunder, and bloody racketeering of the Morgans, the Kuhn-Loebs, the Mellons, the Wiggins, the Lamonts, and all the other high priests of the money aristocracy and scavengers of human misery. You cannot do it on $15 a month.

What about the farmer who lost his farm? What about the unemployed home owner who had his home cast upon the bloody altar of the money lender? What about those of us who have a home and means of livelihood? How many of us can sleep soundly tonight, secure in the knowledge that when we reach the age of 60 we will have a roof for shelter and an income sufficient to provide food and warmth for our bodies?

What about the father who wielded the pick, the shovel, the hammer, the saw, that communities might be built? What of the humble tiller of the soil who blazed the trail and made the desert to blossom as the rose?

What of the men who have gone down into the bowels of the earth to bring forth the natural resources for the enrichment of the coal barons, the copper kings, the oil magnates, the steel monarchs, and the electric-power barons?

What of those who have gone down into the factories and shops to feed the roaring blast furnaces, to operate the turning lathe, the punch press, the trip hammer, to become mere cogs in the mechanistic equipment of the gigantic industrialists, only to be kicked out like yellow dogs when they reach middle age. Oh, the Fords, the Schwabs, and other great industrialists boast of high wages and short hours. Yet, with their mammoth conveyor systems, the strain is so great, the toil so devastating, that men are worn out and crushed at 45 and 50 years of age.

No; you cannot provide old-age rewards with a Federal pension of $15 per month. The United States Government, by levying a capital tax on all million-dollar fortunes, a proper tax on all inheritances, gifts, and all incomes, can pay a pension of $50 per month. They can pay it now, they can pay it in 1936, 1937, and 1938. Instead of empty promises, instead of a meaningless pledge, we can give them action; and we can and should give them humane and just legislation now! [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DEEN. I have tried several times to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman has an amendment to offer, the Chair will state that he may offer it and it may be voted on without discussion.

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Chairman, I endeavored several times to get recognition. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes in order to present what I think is a worth-while amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DEEN: On page 7, after line 17, add a new section reading as follows:

"EFFECTIVE DATE

"SEC. 7. The provisions of this title shall not become effective until at least three-fourths of the States have adopted a State old-age assistance plan meeting the requirements of section 2 of this title."

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in order to protect States, like my own State, which will have to have action by the State legislature in the form of a constitutional amendment before they may participate in the benefits involved in this legislation. I do not think it is right or fair for the taxpayers of the Federal Government to give these benefits to some of the States while nearly half of the States will be denied that privilege for the next 2 or 3 years. I think as a matter of policy my amendment ought to be adopted and the proposition approved by three-fourths of the States before it becomes effective, and I hope, Mr. Chairman, this amendment will be accepted. I am in favor of old-age pensions and I want to vote for this bill, but my amendment will enable all the States to participate. As it stands in this bill, only about half of the States will benefit, while all the people will pay the taxes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DEEN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MASSINGALE: Amend section 1, title I, by striking out the figures "49,750,000" in line 10 and insert in lieu thereof the figures "500,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOTT: Page 4, line 1, after the word "than", strike out "65" and insert "60."

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MOTT) there were—ayes 13, noes 115.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE II. FEDERAL OLD-AGE BENEFITS

OLD-AGE RESERVE ACCOUNT

SECTION 201. (a) There is hereby created an account in the Treasury of the United States to be known as the "Old-Age Reserve Account", hereinafter in this title called the "Account." There is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Account for each fiscal year, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, an amount sufficient as an annual premium to provide for the payments required under this title, such amount to be determined on a reserve basis in accordance with accepted actuarial principles, and based upon such tables of mortality as the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time adopt, and upon an interest rate of 3 percent per annum compounded annually. The Secretary of the Treasury shall submit annually to the Bureau of the Budget an estimate of the appropriations to be made to the Account.

(b) It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to invest such portion of the amounts credited to the Account as is not, in his judgment, required to meet current payments. Such investment shall be made in any interest-bearing obligations of the United States or in any obligations guaranteed as to both principal and interest by the United States. The Secretary of the Treasury may at any time sell any such obligations. The interest on, and the proceeds from the sale of, any such obligations shall be credited to the Account.

(c) All amounts credited to the Account shall be available for making payments required under this title.

(d) The Secretary of the Treasury shall include in his annual report the actuarial status of the Account.

OLD-AGE BENEFIT PAYMENTS

SEC. 202. (a) Every qualified individual (as defined in section 210) shall be entitled to receive, with respect to the period beginning on the date he attains the age of 65, or on January 1, 1942, whichever is the later, and ending on the date of his death, an old-age benefit (payable as nearly as practicable in equal monthly installments) as follows:

(1) If the total wages (as defined in section 210) determined by the board to have been paid to him, with respect to employment (as defined in section 210) after December 31, 1936, and before he attained the age of 65, were not more than $3,000, the old-age benefit shall be at a monthly rate of one-half of 1 percent of such total wages;

(2) If such total wages were more than $3,000, the old-age benefit shall be at a monthly rate equal to the sum of the following:

(A) One-half of 1 percent of $3,000; plus

(B) One-twelfth of 1 percent of the amount by which such total wages exceeded $3,000 and did not exceed $45,000; plus

(C) One twenty-fourth of 1 percent of the amount by which such total wages exceeded $45,000.

(b) In no case shall the monthly rate computed under subsection (a) exceed $85.

(c) If the Board finds at any time that more or less than the correct amount has theretofore been paid to any individual under this section, then, under regulations made by the board, proper adjustments shall be made in connection with subsequent payments under this section to the same individual.

PAYMENTS UPON DEATH

SEC. 203. (a) If any individual dies before attaining the age of 65, there shall be paid to his estate an amount equal to 3½ percent of the total wages determined by the board to have been paid to him, with respect to employment after December 31, 1936.

(b) If the board finds that the correct amount of the old-age benefit payable to a qualified individual during his life under section 202 was less than 3½ percent of the total wages by which such old-age benefit was measurable, then there shall be paid to his estate a sum equal to the amount, if any, by which such 3½ percent exceeds the amount (whether more or less than the correct amount) paid to him during his life as old-age benefit.

(c) If the board finds that the total amount paid to a qualified individual under an old-age benefit during his life was less than the correct amount to which he was entitled under section 202, and that the correct amount of such old-age benefit was 3½ percent or more of the total wages by which such old-age benefit was measurable, then there shall be paid to his estate a sum equal to the amount, if any, by which the correct amount of the old-age benefit exceeds the amount which was so paid to him during his life.

PAYMENTS TO AGED INDIVIDUALS NOT QUALIFIED FOR BENEFITS

SEC. 204. (a) There shall be paid in a lump sum to any individual who, upon attaining the age of 65, is not a qualified individual, an amount equal to 3½ percent of the total wages determined by the board to have been paid to him, with respect to employment, after December 31, 1936, and before he attained the age of 65.

(b) After any individual becomes entitled to any payment under subsection (a), no other payment shall be made under this title in any manner measured by wages paid to him, except that any part of any payment under subsection (a) which is not paid to him before his death shall be paid to his estate.

AMOUNTS OF $500 OR LESS PAYABLE TO ESTATE

SEC. 205. If any amount payable to an estate under section 203 or 204 is $500 or less, such amount may, under regulations prescribed by the board, be paid to the persons found by the board to be entitled thereto under the law of the State in which the deceased was domiciled, without the necessity of compliance with the requirements of law with respect to the administration of such estate.

OVERPAYMENTS DURING LIFE

SEC. 206. If the board finds that the total amount paid to a qualified individual under an old-age benefit during his life was more than the correct amount to which he was entitled under section 202, and was 3½ percent or more of the total wages by which such old-age benefit was measurable, then upon his death there shall be repaid to the United States by his estate the amount, if any, by which such total amount paid to him during his life exceeds whichever of the following is the greater: (1) Such 3½ percent, or (2) the correct amount to which he was entitled under section 202.

METHOD OF MAKING PAYMENTS

SEC. 207. The board shall from time to time certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the name and address of each person entitled to receive a payment under this title, the amount of such payment, and the time at which it should be made, and the Secretary of the Treasury through the Division of Disbursement of the Treasury Department, and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, shall make payment in accordance with the certification by the board.

ASSIGNMENT

SEC. 208. The right of any person to any future payment under this title shall not be transferable or assignable at law or in equity, and none of the moneys paid or payable or rights existing under this title shall be subject to execution, levy, attachment, garnishment, or other legal process, or to the operation of any bankruptcy or insolvency law.

PENALTIES

SEC. 209. Whoever in any application for any payment under this title makes any false statement as to any material fact, knowing such statement to be false, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 210. When used in this title—

(4) Service performed as an officer or member of the crew of a vessel documented under the laws of the United States or of any foreign country;

(5) Service performed in the employ of the United States Government or of an instrumentality of the United States;

(1) He is at least 65 years of age; and

(2) The total amount of wages paid to him, with respect to employment after December 31, 1936, and before he attained the age of 65, was not less than $2,000; and

(3) Wages were paid to him, with respect to employment on some 5 days after December 31, 1936, and before he attained the age of 65, each day being in a different calendar year.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 8, strike out lines 11 to 24, both inclusive, and insert:

"(b) It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to invest such portion of the amounts credited to the account as is not, in his judgment, required to meet current withdrawals. Such investment may be made only in interest-bearing obligations of the United States or in obligations guaranteed as to both principal and interest by the United States. For such purpose such obligations may be acquired (1) on original issue at par, or (2) by purchase of outstanding obligations at the market price. The purposes for which obligations of the United States may be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, are hereby extended to authorize the issuance at par of special obligations exclusively to the account. Such special obligations shall bear interest at the rate of 3 percent per annum. Obligations other than such special obligations may be acquired for the account only on such terms as to provide an investment yield of not less than 3 percent per annum.

"(c) Any obligations acquired by the account (except special obligations issued exclusively to the account) may be sold at the market price, and such special obligations may be redeemed at par plus accrued interest.

"(d) The interest on, and the proceeds from the sale or redemption of, any obligations held in the account shall be credited to and form a part of the account.

"(e) All amounts credited to the account shall be available for making payments required under this title.

"(f) The Secretary of the Treasury shall include in his annual report the actuarial status of the account."

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, this is a committee amendment to which no objection in committee was interposed.

Under title II there are certain annual appropriations that are placed in the old-age reserve account. There is an obligation in this bill upon the part of the Federal Government that such appropriations will earn 3 percent compounded annually, in order to build up the reserve. The committee amendment, as offered, makes it mandatory on the Secretary of the Treasury that the special obligations which may be issued hereunder must yield at least 3-percent interest annually.

This provision is desired in order that there may be no deficit in the old-age reserve account, so that at the time the aged will be entitled to receive the benefits, sufficent money will be in the account.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the committee amendment.

Why should we change the language of this bill at this particular point? And if we are to change it at all, why do we not make an addition to the amendment so that we may be assured of a reserve fund to take care of any contingency that may arise?

We have had heated debate this afternoon, and there arose gentlemen from various States who felt there was a direct obligation on the part of the Federal Government to pay the old-age pensions directly to our people. They reiterated and realleged that under the plan of this bill it would be impossible for their aged to reap any benefit for at least years to come because their States had not the means to match the Federal contribution provided for the States, and I heard the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] ask what would men of character, ability, and understanding do in the circumstances, referring to our great men of the past. The gentleman knows his history, and he must be aware that when this country was faced with financial crises our forefathers, the founders of the Republic, were quick to meet them, and did so by raising large sums of money which were not available from ordinary sources. The time has come, certainly, in view of what has transpired during the debate on this social-security bill, when we should follow in the footsteps of our revered leaders of old, whose judgment we have upheld down through the years, and without quibbling and delay provide for a national lottery. The question was asked emphatically what Thomas Jefferson would do in the case before us, where we are undertaking to assist the States in caring for their aged, but under such conditions that many of the States claim that our legislation will be in vain because of complete lack of funds or on account of some State constitutional limitation. A complete answer to that is that Thomas Jefferson, he who gave his all to his people and grew white and infirm in the service of his country, would do as he was done by in his declining years when he was the recipient of a pension or competence from funds raised for him by lottery. [Applause.]

Either the committee which has jurisdiction should now make provision for the raising of this revenue, or the gentlemen from the States who complain that their treasuries are depleted and exhausted should join the great movement for a national lottery and at once. Once we establish a federally operated lottery the National Government will have ample funds for the payment of the entire amount of $30 a month to men and women over 65 years of age. The lottery money collected by the Federal Government might well be allotted to the various States for use in making payments of their part of the pension or for the discharge of any other obligation.

Instead of trying to get the pension money in its entirety from the Federal Government, which means obtaining it from certain States which will be compelled to bear the whole burden, my colleagues from the hard-pressed States should immediately enlist in the cause for a national lottery. My State of New Jersey is now paying over $96,000,000 a year to the Federal Government and getting back something like $52,000,000, including allotments for relief. In other words the State of New Jersey is contributing $44,000,000 to the Federal Government and part of this money is going out through the Federal Government to the States of the very gentlemen who are here today asking that we pay more.

We cannot pay more without great hardship. Many of our municipalities have defaulted on their bonds and we have our limitations. The time has come when we must lighten the load of our taxpayers. We cannot be held back by unwarranted scruples. Such scruples must be thrown aside. We must be sensible and practical. So stated a gentleman of the Committee on Ways and Means this afternoon. And so we must be—sensible and practical. To be so, all of us, and especially the gentlemen who are seeking the whole pension from the Federal Government, should give impetus to the great movement and establish our own national lottery. We would then have hundreds of millions of dollars available every year for old-age pensions and other worthy purposes. We would have them from our citizens in willing contributions that are now being sent abroad for participation in foreign lotteries. Scruples which are not well founded must not stand in the way. It is our duty to garner this money for revenue and allocate it whenever necessary to the States. Then the States now in dire distress will have money in their coffers and be able to insure the comfort of their people by meeting their share of the required contribution to old-age pensions which are indisputably worthy and desirable. [Applause.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Kentucky a question. There is only one copy of this amendment. I purloined this copy from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Every member of the Ways and Means Committee on both sides had a copy of that amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But those of us who are not on the Ways and Means Committee have no copy. I want to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question. I find this in the amendment:

The purposes for which obligations of the United States may be used under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, are hereby extended to authorize the issuance at par of special obligations exclusively to the account.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I may say that such authority is in existing law, and I know the gentleman will realize that bringing this quoted language into this bill adds nothing and detracts nothing.

The same principle and policy embodied in the language that the gentleman reads has been operating in the Treasury for several years in previous administrations. There is no new authority embraced in the bill except the one point to which I adverted a moment ago, and that was to require the interest rate on special obligations to yield at least 3 percent. This is desired because of the obligation of the Federal Government to make appropriations yield at least 3 percent compounded annually so that the reserve account would be on hand to pay the benefits under title II.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is a requirement necessary in the event that the manager of the fund cannot secure or purchase in the market United States bonds or other equivalent to yield a net of 3 percent; then the Treasury may issue some special bonds.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That is correct with this proviso, that if they cannot get Government securities, or securities the principal and interest of which is guaranteed by the Government to yield annually 3 percent or more, then the special obligations may issue and be sold. If the Federal Government can buy Federal bonds or securities, the principal and interest of which is guaranteed by the Federal Government that will yield an excess of 3 percent, then they can buy them.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In order to keep the fund intact, in the event the Government bonds do not net 3 percent, the Government will issue bonds; in other words, borrow money which will net 3 percent?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That is correct; because they have the obligation set out in this bill that the appropriations will yield 3 percent annually, compounded, the acturial figures are based upon 3 percent interest, compounded annually.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then, am I far wrong in stating—I cannot help remembering what the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] said yesterday—that the Treasury under this will be put in the position of borrowing money from the fund?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. No. The thing they will do is to get the money from the fund. The Federal Government borrows the money from the fund and replaces it with governmental obligations.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] brings up the very question that I brought up during the consideration of this paragraph in the committee. I was very much surprised to find there was such a large amount of authority vested in the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to the manner in which the funds were to be handled. The amendment that the committee has just offered has new matter in it, as I understand it, bearing on the interest rate only, and perhaps for the sake of the record I should ask to have placed in the RECORD a memorandum that Mr. Bell, the Acting Director of the Budget, sent me in answer to a question asking for information similar to that the gentleman from New York wanted. I ask unanimous consent to have that inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

(The communication referred to is as follows:)

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington.

Hon. ALLEN T. TREADWAY,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: This is submitted in compliance with your request for a statement of the provisions which confer authority on the Secretary of the Treasury to issue special interest-bearing obligations of the United States to the old-age-reserve account created under section 201 (a) of the social-security bill. You are advised that such authority has been granted by the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, the pertinent provisions of which are set forth in the attached memorandum.

I trust that the above information sufficiently answers your inquiry.

Very truly yours,

D. W. BELL,
By I. E. ERB,
Acting Director of the Budget.

[NOTE: If the amendment to section 201, which was approved this morning by the subcommittee, is adopted, this memorandum becomes moot, as the amendment contains express authority to issue obligations to the old-age reserve account and specifies the interest rate. I. E. ERB.]

AUTHORITY OF THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY TO HANDLE PUBLIC-DEBT TRANSACTIONS PURSUANT TO AUTHORITY CONTAINED IN THE SECOND LIBERTY BOND ACT, AS AMENDED

Section 1 of the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, approved September 24, 1917, reads in part as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized to borrow, from time to time, on the credit of the United States for the purposes of this act, and to meet expenditures authorized for the national security and defense and other public purposes authorized by law * * *.

"The bonds herein authorized shall be in such form or forms and denomination or denominations and subject to such terms and conditions of issue, conversion, redemption, maturities, payment, and rate or rates of interest, not exceeding 4¼ percent per annum, and time or times of payment of interest, as the Secretary of the Treasury from time to time at or before the issue thereof may prescribe * * *.

"The bonds herein authorized shall from time to time first be offered at not less than par as a popular loan, under such regulations, prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury from time to time, as will, in his opinion, give the people of the United States as nearly as may be an equal opportunity to participate therein, but he may make allotment in full upon applications for smaller amounts of bonds in advance of any date which he may set for the closing of subscriptions and may reject or reduce allotments upon later applications and applications for larger amounts, and may reject or reduce allotments upon applications from incorporated banks and trust companies for their own account and make allotment in full or larger allotments to others, and may establish a graduated scale of allotments, and may from time to time adopt any or all of said methods, should any such action be deemed by him to be in the public interest: Provided, That such reduction or increase of allotments of such bonds shall be made under general rules to be prescribed by said Secretary and shall apply to all subscribers similarly situated. And any portion of the bonds so offered and not taken may be otherwise disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury in such manner and at such price or prices, not less than par, as he may determine * * *."

The first paragraph above quoted was amended by the act of February 4, 1935, to read as follows:

"The Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized to borrow, from time to time, on the credit of the United States for the purposes of this act to provide for the purchase, redemption, or refunding, at or before maturity, of any outstanding bonds, notes, certificates of indebtedness, or Treasury bills of the United States, and to meet expenditures authorized for the national security and defense and other public purposes authorized by law, such sum or sums as in his judgment may be necessary, and to issue therefor bonds of the United States: Provided, That the face amount of bonds issued under this section and section 22 of this act shall not exceed in the aggregate $25,000,000,000 outstanding at any one time."

The Gold Reserve Act approved January 30, 1934, amended section 1 of the Second Liberty Bond Act by adding a new paragraph, as follows:

"Notwithstanding the provisions of the foregoing paragraph the Secretary of the Treasury may from time to time, when he deems it to be in the public interest, offer such bonds otherwise than as a popular loan; he may make allotments in full or reject or reduce allotments on any obligations whether or not the offering was made as a popular loan."

Section 5 of the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, provides for the issuance of Treasury certificates of indebtedness as follows:

"In addition to the bonds and notes authorized by sections 1 and 18 and 22 of this act, as amended, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, subject to the limitation imposed by section 21 of this act, to borrow from time to time, on the credit of the United States, for the purposes of this act, to provide for the purchase, redemption, or refunding, at or before maturity, of any outstanding bonds, notes, certificates of indebtedness or Treasury bills of the United States, and to meet public expenditures authorized by law, such sum or sums as in his judgment may be necessary, and to issue therefor (1) certificates of indebtedness of the United States at not less than par (except as provided in section 20 of this act, as amended) and at such rate or rates of interest, payable at such time or times as he may prescribe; or (2) Treasury bills on a discount basis and payable at maturity without interest. Treasury bills to be issued hereunder shall be offered for sale on a competitive basis, under such regulations and upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, and the decisions of the Secretary in respect of any issue shall be final. Certificates of indebtedness and Treasury bills issued hereunder shall be in such form or forms and subject to such terms and conditions, shall be payable at such time not exceeding 1 year from the date of issue, and may be redeemable before maturity upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe."

The Gold Reserve Act of January 30, 1934, further adds a new section (20) to the Second Liberty Bond Act which modifies the authority contained in section 5, quoted above. Section 20 reads as follows:

"SEC. 20. The Secretary of the Treasury may issue any obligations authorized by this act and maturing not more than 1 year from the date of their issue on a discount basis and payable at maturity without interest. Any such obligations may also be offered for sale on a competitive basis under such regulations and upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, and the decisions of the Secretary in respect of any issue shall be final."

Section 18 (a) of the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, provides for the issuance of notes as follows:

"That in addition to the bonds and certificates of indebtedness and war-savings certificates authorized by this act and amendments thereto, the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, is authorized to borrow from time to time on the credit of the United States for the purposes of this act, and to meet public expenditures authorized by law * * * and to issue therefor notes of the United States at not less than par in such form or forms and denomination or denominations containing such terms and conditions and at such rate or rates of interest as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, and each series of notes so issued shall be payable at such time not less than 1 year nor more than 5 years from the date of its issue as he may prescribe, and may be redeemable before maturity (at the option of the United States), in whole or in part, upon not more than 1 year's nor less than 4 months' notice, and under such rules and regulations and during such period as he may prescribe."

The Gold Reserve Act of January 30, 1934, further amended the Second Liberty Bond Act by adding thereto a new section as follows:

"SEC. 19. Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, any obligations authorized by this act may be issued for the purchase, redemption, or refunding at or before maturity of any outstanding bonds, notes, certificates of indebtedness, or Treasury bills of the United States, or to obtain funds for such purchase, redemption, or refunding under such rules, regulations, terms, and conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON].

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. TREADWAY: Page 7, beginning with line 8, strike out all of title II down to and including line 9 on page 15.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I think this is the worst title in the bill. It sets up a form of payment that is evidently provided for in an unconstitutional manner. It has been very difficult for even the lawyers of the Department favorable to the legislation to find any excuse for including this special tax. It will be a particularly burdensome tax upon industry, running to 6 percent on pay rolls, and eventually will be a tax on industry of $1,877,000,000. Evidently the majority party has very little consideration for industry. The Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace, yesterday made one of the worst exhibitions of himself that I think has ever been made, in a trip he made to Maine. He insulted the citizenship of New England in an outrageous manner. It is said that he laughed at the idea of Japanese competition as a threat to the cotton industry in New England, and suggested that the manufacturers in New England seek new lines of endeavor. Why should he tell the manufacturers of New England that they must seek new methods of industry? That is a great idea. Then he is reported to have said:

It gets my goat to see manufacturers trying to pull this sort of stuff. Where is the rugged individualism I have heard so much about?

And then went on to speak of this flabbiness of the third and fourth generations. Those third and fourth generations are just as good in New England today as the people of the day to which he refers in his remark about rugged individualism. He then said that some day we will recognize this as "the worst kind of bad manners, and immorality of the worst kind." What immorality of the worst kind did he find going from Boston to Portland, making dollar signs on the edge of his newspaper? What immorality did he find among the citizens of New England? He is quoted as saying:

It is time for New England to seek new fields of endeavor. I am astonished at all of this whining from New England.

Has not New England the right of livelihood? Evidently he wants to take it away from us, but we will not yield supinely to his orders or to his insults to our section of the country. But it is an indication of the spirit of certain people against New England's industry.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that the gentleman from Massachusetts is not confining himself to his amendment.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am confining myself to references to the effort being made to destroy industry in New England which is backed up by this bill, and we are not going to stand for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please confine himself to the amendment.

Mr. TREADWAY. I thank the Chairman. There is plenty to talk about in connection with the motion which I just made. I do not need to refer to the attitude of the Secretary of Agriculture to get a subject to talk about, because the whole purpose of this title in the bill is to tax industry, and we are overburdened, overtaxed, and overinsulted.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I renew my point of order that the gentleman is not confining himself to the motion.

Mr. TREADWAY. Does the gentleman want me to read any figures on taxation under this scheme? I will tell him what it is. The Secretary of Agriculture vouches for it, too. He is one of the proponents of this very bill.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I renew my point of order that the gentleman is not confining himself to the motion.

Mr. TREADWAY. I submit I am speaking in order, and I decline to be interrupted by the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Up to the present time the gentleman has been confining himself to the motion. The gentleman knows the rules of the House and will please confine himself to the motion.

Mr. TREADWAY. Title II is the most offensive title in this measure; and that is saying a whole lot. The majority has tried its best to find a way in which to defend and support the title. They are begging the question here. They cannot stand here in dignity and honor and debate this title II and the tax paid under title VIII. The two go together.

Now, what about this business tax? I said at page 5531, when we had this measure up for general discussion:

Business and industry are already operating under very heavy burdens. Many businesses at the present time are barely able to keep their heads above the water.

That is not only true but, further, if they do not keep their heads above water they have to pay that 6 percent, because that is included in title VIII just the same, whether business is operating at a loss or not.

I hope my motion will prevail.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to make any prepared address with reference to title II of the bill. You know, of course, that it is the provision applying the benefits arising under title VIII, namely, the title which imposes certain taxes upon the pay rolls of the country, one-half to be deducted from the employees' wages.

I need not say to you that thrift has been one of the great factors in the progress of the human race. This title is designed to provide a system of organized thrift in the interest of the workers of the country. Organized thrift, ladies and gentlemen, as designed in this bill, receives a most striking illustration in the industrial finances of the country.

I hold in my hand a statement showing the dividends paid by corporations in the United States during 4 years of the depression. Altogether, for the years 1930 to 1933, inclusive, $21,214,925,000 have been paid. Of this sum, $17,267,920,000 have been paid by those companies out of their reserves built up from the profits of previous years. Compare this seventeen billions with the total sums paid in relief, including R. F. C. and Public Works, and the comparative numbers of people involved.

I do not think this fact should be taken as a matter of reproach to the employers of the country. It was good financing; it was high prudence on their part to have set aside some $17,000,000,000 in the years of their good fortune and prosperity, to protect their stockholders and dividend funds when the day of failure and misfortune should come. But when the charge is made on the floor that no member of the Ways and Means Committee will so expose his honor as to defend this section establishing a like organized fund to protect the worker, I want to accept the challenge and say that while it was perhaps natural enough, as things go for these financiers, when setting aside $17,000,000,000 of reserves to protect their stockholders, to overlook the millions of human beings in their employ, we in this House of Representatives cannot overlook such a paramount duty.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. No. I have given the facts. If $17,000,000,000 are justified in reserves for the stockholders of the country, and I do not deny that they were, then certainly proportionate reserves should be set aside for the laborer and employees who help them make it, for days of similar need and distress. [Applause.]

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. By reason of the prudence——

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Oh, the gentleman is arguing.

Mr. MICHENER. No. I am asking the gentleman a question.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Well, ask the question.

Mr. MICHENER. If, by reason of the prudence and care of those industries of which the gentleman has spoken, the stockholder has been able to receive dividends and the working man has been able to continue his job in many instances throughout the depression, does the gentleman not think they exercised pretty good judgment in the flush days?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I have already commended their judgment as sound. The infirmity in the $17,000,000,000 fund was that it did not include their workers—it all went to the stockholders, it did not save the jobs of the workers. The practical circumstance is this, that with respect to the owners of our industrial system, boards of directors had control of the funds at their source, and were able to establish a system of enforced thrift for the stockholders. They did not put the question to a vote of the stockholders. They simply set the funds aside, from abundant profits, in the form of reserves.

Now the workers were not in a position to control such funds at their source and say, "So much of this excess shall be set aside for our day of tribulation—for the day when they think our arms are not as swift as others to turn the great wheels of competitive industry." That is our work this day. This chapter in the bill only provides the institution necessary for that purpose as is done in other countries. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to include at this point the table to which I have referred.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The table referred to is as follows:

[2] Deficit.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I know the hour is late, I know the Members are getting impatient to get away, and it is not perhaps the proper time to try to discuss this subject, but I earnestly beseech the Members to give me at least a minute or two of their time.

Not a man on the floor of this House is authorized to stand here and cast his vote on any piece of legislation until he has taken an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, to defend it against all enemies, foreign and domestic, without any mental reservation whatsoever and without any purpose of evasion.

The best legal talent the administration has been able to engage from the departments and elsewhere has endeavored to so frame title II, change its title, distort it, and put the tax features in title VIII, to mislead and deceive, if possible, the Supreme Court of the United States. I stated yesterday, and I state again today, that the members of the committee in their conscience know that title II and title VIII are unconstitutional. They know they are trying to set up as a Federal activity a police power that is reserved to the States.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. No; I cannot just now; I have only 5 minutes. Members of the committees know that the President of the United States, who is now urging that these two titles be enacted into law, when he was Governor of the State of New York in 1930, in a radio address broadcast to the country called attention to the fact that the Federal Government was invading the rights of the States, and he specifically mentioned the very type of legislation we have before us today. He said that this invasion on the part of the Federal Government must stop. Now, my colleagues, you know that what you are attempting to do is unconstitutional, and you know that for that reason title II and title VIII ought to be eliminated from the bill. They are not relief provisions, and they are not going to bring any relief to the destitute or needy now nor for years to come. It is more of your compulsory, arbitrary program. You are saying to a specified class of wage earners, not all—for, as I have said, you are not giving these benefits to the needy at all—but you are saying to the wage earner, "We are going to force you to pay a tax to buy an annuity from the Government." You propose to whip and lash the wage earner into paying this tax, but you are not treating everybody alike. Millions who labor are exempted from benefits. People who work on farms grow old; people who work as domestic servants grow old; they have the problems of old age, but they can starve in their old age so far as getting aid from this bill. Gentlemen, why talk about the difficulty of administering the act as an excuse for omitting them? You found no difficulty in providing for the administration of title I of the act, which reaches every person who is in need; but when it comes to certain classes, then you discriminate. This title ought to be removed from the bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I hardly think the argument——

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for an inquiry before he starts his statement?

Mr. McCORMACK. Certainly.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, how long is it contemplated that we are to work on the bill tonight?

Mr. McCORMACK. I am just an ordinary Member of the House; I am sorry I cannot answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the chairman of the committee how long he expects to keep the committee in session this evening?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I cannot say right now; it depends on what progress we make.

Mr. MICHENER. It is now 5:10, and we are at page 15. We have 59 pages yet to consider. We have been adjourning at 4 o'clock every day. I, for one, object to running through until we conclude consideration of the bill, and I shall make the point of no quorum. You can get a quorum, probably; you have the votes to go ahead, but the gentleman stated he would handle the matter reasonably.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Michigan cannot take the gentleman from Massachusetts off his feet by a point of no quorum.

Mr. MICHENER. I do not have to ask the gentleman to yield in order to make a point of no quorum.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I did not yield to the gentleman to make a point of no quorum.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado rose.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I suggest the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Colorado to make a statement.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I gladly yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my point of no quorum until the gentleman from Massachusetts shall have concluded. Then I shall renew it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, we hope to finish the consideration of the bill tomorrow. If we can do so, I hope, personally at least, that we may adjourn over Saturday. It does not make much difference how far we go tonight if we can get through tomorrow.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, may I address a question to the majority leader?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. I think we might have a reasonable understanding about adjourning this evening. As far as delaying the bill for passage tomorrow is concerned, there is no desire to delay the bill in any way. I think when we get by the pending question the major part of the bill that is of a controversial nature will be over. However, it does seem to me we ought to have an understanding that we adjourn at a reasonable time tonight, then we will cooperate with you on the other side with reference to finishing the bill tomorrow. I think we might as well have an agreement now as later in the evening.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think that probably Members on that side would like to get away tomorrow, and probably we can complete the bill tonight. I realize the gentleman may make a point of no quorum, but if it is possible to get through with the bill tonight it might be advisable to do that.

Mr. SNELL. Well, some Members have left the Chamber. There was no suggestion until within the last half hour that it was intended to finish this bill tonight.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I may say to the minority leader that in a brief conference with the ranking minority member of the Ways and Means Committee awhile ago he indicated that after the gentleman from New York spoke there was no one else to speak on this question. I think probably with 5 minutes more we could conclude it on this side and dispose of this section before we adjourned. This would give us ample opportunity to dispose of the rest of the bill tomorrow.

Mr. SNELL. After a speech of 5 minutes on that side and a speech by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] on this side it will be agreeable to adjourn?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Of course, it is not within my power to say.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. A speech by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] and one other speech on this side.

Mr. MICHENER. Then we will adjourn after two more speeches?

Mr. SABATH. No.

Mr. SNELL. A vote is desired on the pending amendment tonight?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I hardly think that the closing argument of my distinguished friend the gentleman from New York, with reference to the fact that farmers and domestic servants are not included in title II, and that there is less administrative difficulty, or no more at least, than there is with reference to title I where they are included, presents a fair picture as to the reasons why the farm laborers or the domestic servants are included in title I and are excluded from title II.

Title I is a noncontributory law. Title II is a contributory law. Title I, being noncontributory, every person in need who meets the requirements imposed by a State and who is over the age limit and meets the requirements imposed by this particular bill in the State plan, without regard to their previous employment, should receive the amount set out, provided and intended by this bill.

When we come to the contributory provision, there is an entirely different situation. The administrative cost enters into the picture. Furthermore, whether or not farm laborers and domestic servants receive a salary so that when they reach the age of retirement they will receive an earned annuity above $10 a month is also a matter of consideration. We have also excluded those employed in educational and religious activities and in all kinds of charitable activities. The committee has tried to draft a contributory annuity provision which will not only meet the purposes desired but do so in a manner that can be administered without any great difficulty.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am seeking information. Is it not a fact that it is hoped title II will grow and expand if soundly managed to such a point at which title I will cease to be an important obligation to the Government?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is the purpose as I understand it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. All right. Will the gentleman tell the House, if that is the case, why domestic servants are exempt from carrying their part of that burden, which is eventually to relieve the Federal Government of a major part of the straight-out old-age pensions?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield to me to answer that question?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The tax levy in title VIII is upon wages. Taking as a basis the total wage of the domestic servants, then 1 percent of that, and 1½, finally a maximum of 3, then if you multiplied it by 40 you would not have money in the account sufficient to purchase a substantial annuity. You would have a nuisance feature, such as a person being paid $1 wage and taking out 1 penny and having at the end of the road a small sum that would purchase a very small annuity. The same thing applies to agriculture, and the same thing applies to other occupations.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On the ground that the wages are low?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. On the ground the total wages over a period of years taxed would be inconsiderable.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is not true in the field of domestic servants.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts to say that the question of whether a man could comply would depend on regulations as fixed by the State?

Mr. McCORMACK. No; as to title II, the gentleman is in error.

Mr. MAY. I understand that this bill fixes the regulation.

Mr. McCORMACK. No; not title II.

Mr. Chairman, may I address myself now to the gentle- from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], and I know of no more distinguished Member of the House. I respect him greatly, even when we disagree.

My viewpoint of this, and this is just my picture for whatever it may be worth, and I approached it very slowly; I weighed the evidence and I considered the experiences of mankind in the past and the probable experiences we shall encounter in the future before I reached this conclusion. If we have a million persons 65 years of age and over, mounting as the years go by, constantly receiving a noncontributory old-age pension, based upon need, there is bound to be a loss of self-respect, and with such a large body throughout the United States growing in number year in and year out, this is bound to have a demoralizing effect upon the spirit of our citizenry in general.

You cannot have 1,000,000 or more people going into the Treasury and taking money out over a period of years without its having a degenerating influence from the viewpoint of good citizenship; and what I wanted was to try to meet one of the causes of dependency in old age, and the main cause is that during the years of productivity they did not or could not put money apart to assure some degree of security. Why they did not do it today is immaterial, so far as the immediate problem is concerned. It is, however, so far as the future is concerned.

Today we are confronted with a condition which requires title I, but we should try to remove as far as possible this condition, so that in the years to come such persons will receive an annuity in their own right.

You may disagree about the pay-roll tax, and I respect you in disagreement, but, frankly, where else could and should we impose it? If we put it upon society in general, it will be a dole. If we raise it through general taxation, we could not identify each one's particular account so we could determine what his annuity would be 30 years or more hence. Some people may ask, why they should be concerned about what may happen 30 years from now? They may say, "I may not be living." But as thinking legislators we should realize that we owe a duty to the future, and title II, in my opinion, meets the main cause of dependency in old age and undertakes to meet it. It is one of the most progressive and constructive of modern legislative history. [Applause.]

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in title I of this bill we recognize a responsibility of the Government, both State and National, to those who have come to the sunset of life and who are not able financially to carry their burdens. In this title we provide for the payment of a small gratuity that we call an old-age pension. I favor this. I made a speech this afternoon favoring a motion to increase the Government's share to be paid from $15 to $20 per month. I am a friend to this legislation, but I fail to understand why the administration is so determined to tie up with meritorious legislation unfair and unnecessary legislation.

In title II we say in effect that by 1970 we are going to forget all about charity. We are by that time going to forget all about our obligations to the old people. We are by title II saying to every young man that if he does not save, if he does not provide for himself and pay for an annuity there will be no old-age pension for him and that charity will have vanished from America. In other words, you enact title I and you boast that you are charitable, and in title II what do you do? You seek to compel every wage earner to pay for an insurance policy even though he cannot afford it. You should not mistake this for a voluntary annuity. They took out the voluntary annuity title, but they retained the compulsory title. You do not say to these people, "If you want to do so we will provide a system whereby you may save." You say, "You have got to save." Thrift is as far from compulsion as freedom is from slavery. Every young man who goes out in life, after this bill is passed and has a job, must pay 3 percent of his money whether he wants to or not, and every employer has got to pay 3 percent also. To whom? To the Secretary of the Treasury, who in this administration is in effect Franklin D. Roosevelt himself. What for? To provide himself with a little annuity insurance policy which the Government will pay him when he is 65 years old. If he works for 10 years and then becomes the owner of the establishment or goes into business that premium that he has paid in has bought him a little annuity that he cannot sell or assign. He must keep it until he dies or until he arrives at the age of 65. This is a regular insurance business that the Government is going into. Why, bless your life, you are going to build up a fund that by 1970 will have a surplus of $33,000,000,000.

This is thirty-three thousand million dollars which will be in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury and is more money than there is in the world. And you are going to raise this by compulsion. Regardless of its unconstitutionality, you are going to wring it out of the very sweat and the labor of the people; and is there any justice in this or any need of it now? This is only the mill out of which you continue to force from the people who cannot pay their taxes, the millions and the billions that is necessary to satiate the inordinate financial appetite of the greatest money spender that every lived.

Why talk about wanting to relieve the depression, why talk about charity, why talk about all these other things when you are placing a financial lash upon the backs of the people whose backs are breaking under a load of debts and taxes?

This is compulsion of the rankest kind. Do not be misled by the title. The title says "Old-Age Benefits." Shame on you for putting such a misleading and unfair label on such a nefarious bill. Old-age benefits? Think of it! Oh, what a travesty! Yes, if you work and sweat and scheme and drive yourself for a generation or for all your life, this title says that the Government will then pay you a little annuity when you are 65 years of age. Who knows who is going to become 65 years of age? Who knows about the uncertainties of life? All there is that is certain about this is that the Government will have accumulated $33,000,000,000 by 1970. The Government, by virtue of the passage of this act, will have wrung out of the poor people of this coming generation the greatest surplus ever contemplated by the brain of any business man.

Mr. Chairman, what is the hurry? Nobody is going to get a dime out of this until 1942. This will not put anybody to work. This will not buy bread for anybody now. What is the hurry about crowding an unconstitutional proposition like this through the House today? I cannot see it. I repeat, I cannot see it. And I do not believe that Franklin D. Roosevelt himself ever put his stamp of approval on this proposition. Let me tell you why I believe that he did not do so.

If he did, he has gone contrary to the Democratic platform. Of course, that does not hurt him, for he has done that frequently. I do not think he is in favor of this provision, for he permitted the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee to strike out title III, which was the title providing for voluntary annuities. They do nothing on the committee unless it is approved by the "brain trust." Title III did have a recommendation that title II does not have, in that title III was optional and a worker could take it or leave it; not so with title II, for it is compulsory. There was a would-be Democratic leader on the Ways and Means Committee who flung defiant lances at the cohorts of the "brain trusters." He promised most vehemently that title II would be stricken from the bill. He claimed that he had 7 votes, who would risk their political lives, if necessary, before they would permit title II to remain in the bill. These 7 votes, with the 7 votes on the Republican side, would have accomplished what he promised to do. Where is that would-be valiant fighter? Where is his valiant army of seven? Alas, he is among the missing. Jim Farley must have blown his withering breath toward them, and they are no more. What cowards politics makes of good men! They traded title III for title II, and the Tammany chief has seven more scalps dangling from his belt. If they had stood as they should have stood, and joined with the Republican vote on the committee, we would not have such an outrageous plan up for consideration today. Ladies and gentlemen, you cannot with one hand place the crown of charity upon the head of one group and say, "We do this because of the vicissitudes of the depression", and at the same time lay the lash of compulsion upon the bending backs of another group and say to them, "Pay! Pay! Pay regardless of the depression."

Mr. Chairman, it is a shame that we are going to be rushed into a program that puts Uncle Sam into an insurance business that will collect thirty-three thousand million into his Treasury out of the sweat and the blood of the working people of this country when they can scarcely make both ends meet. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. It is to be regretted that in this discussion we hear politics injected into the debate. Think of it. He regrets that the workingman may secure any money benefits under this title when he arrives at the age of 65. He says shame on us for giving the workers an opportunity to provide subsistence for themselves and families in their old age.

Why, my friends, the railroad workers of this country sought for 10 years and more to procure congressional authority to pay money into a fund in order to get retirement pay. They are today fighting in the Supreme Court to uphold their legislation passed in the last Congress.

The distinguished minority leader of the Ways and Means Committee always shoots at big game. He shoots at the mark. He makes no idle shots. In this instance, when he is attempting to strike out title II from the bill, he is aiming at the very heart and soul of the President's social-security program. I have been asked to say whether or not the President of the United States has advocated title II. I accept the challenge and say that the President of the United States advocates that principle. It is a most important part of his social-security program.

Benefits under this title will bring to the wage earner from $15 to $85 a month after 65 years of age. What will that do? Instead of being a tax burden on the country it will reduce the tax burden. I can only think of one witness who, representing industry, protested its passage. Leading industrial leaders and labor leaders, including William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, advocated this title.

In 1980 it is estimated that you will have upward of $4,000,000,000 a year to benefit the working man and woman. This in itself will be a great stabilizer of economic conditions of this country.

And, my friends, many of you have advocated for years the elimination of the tax-exempt securities. If you are sincere, let me tell you that if this is written into law the tax-exempt securities can be withdrawn from the open market under the power vested in the Secretary of the Treasury.

I want to repeat that this title is the heart and soul of the President's social-security program. Let no one deceive himself about that.

When you vote I know you will vote to keep in this title and then send this measure down to this great humanitarian, the first President of this country who ever brought to Congress a well-rounded social-security program, looking toward the benefit of the unfortunate men, women, and children of our land.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JENKINS) there were—ayes 41, noes 131.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. TREADWAY and Mr. DOUGHTON to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 49, noes 125.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read title III.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I understood that an agreement was made with the majority leader and the chairman of this committee that we would rise after voting on title II. That was the agreement as I understood it.

Mr. COCHRAN. After voting on the amendment. There might be other amendments.

Mr. SNELL. I ask the majority leader and the chairman of this committee if that was not the understanding?

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] and I talked about that a few moments ago. We made no agreement. I said that would be satisfactory to me, but we made no agreement.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. The gentleman from New York asked me if I would agree, and I said I had no authority to enter into any such agreement.

Mr. SNELL. I understood the majority leader to say that it would be all right to rise after this.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Nobody wants to have a misunderstanding or fool anyone. We want to keep faith. There may have been a misunderstanding.

Mr. SNELL. I certainly understood that was the agreement.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Would the gentleman be satisfied to start the reading of title III?

Mr. SNELL. We have already started the reading of title III.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer to title II.

The CHAIRMAN. But title II has been disposed of. The Clerk will continue the reading of title III.

Mr. REED of New York. I had this amendment here while title II was under discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regrets the fact, but we have disposed of title II.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to title II for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk had already commenced the reading of title III. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to revert to title II for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCREYNOLDS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 7260 and had come to no resolution thereon.

CONVENTION OF IMPERIAL COUNCIL, MYSTIC SHRINE

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 97, authorizing the appropriation of funds for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property during the convention of the Imperial Council of the Mystic Shrine in the District of Columbia June 8, 1935, to June 17, 1935, both inclusive. The Senate joint resolution is identical with House Joint Resoluton 233.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 97, which the Clerk will report.

IMPROVEMENT STEINHATCHEE RIVER

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein a memorial and resolution from the State Legislature of the State of Florida.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to call to the attention of my colleagues a worthy and important waterways project. It is the opening for navigation of the lower Steinhatchee River in Dixie and Taylor Counties, Fla.

The development of this river will give transportation facilities to a large volume of commerce in the way of sponges, fish, phosphate, lumber, naval stores, and general commerce. We have recently appeared before the Board of Rivers and Harbors Engineers and urged the adoption and completion of this project. The people of central Florida, south Georgia, and Alabama, in particular, are deeply interested in the project.

The board of county commissioners and citizens of Dixie and Taylor Counties, Fla., are lending their best cooperation for the project. In this connection I submit memorial from the Florida Legislature in the form of Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 5.

A MEMORIAL TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA NOW CONVENED IN SESSION AS THE SEVENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

Whereas the navigable waterway by name and known as the "Steinhatchee River", traversing the counties of Taylor, Lafayette, and Dixie, with its outlet in the Gulf of Mexico, possesses and has within its channel sand bars and obstructions, preventing travel of river boats and boats of similar character; and

Whereas the said citizens of the State of Florida are using their best efforts in the expenditure of moneys, labor, and materials to their best ability in the opening up, removing sand bars and other obstructions from the channel of the said Steinhatchee River; and

Whereas that the said Steinhatchee River would prove and be of great importance to the United States of America and to the State of Florida in the protection of life and property in time of war, and would provide a safe harbor for ships in time of storms and add to the commerce and shipping within this particular part of the State; and

Whereas it is the desire of the citizens of Florida that the said work of removing such sand bars and obstructions from the channel of the said Steinhatchee River and desiring to secure the assistance of the United States Government to carry on and complete the work now in progress; and

Whereas expenditure of moneys by the United States Government in conjunction with moneys now being expended by the counties and citizens, would provide employment for labor and for usage of materials and supplies in the removing of said sand bars and other obstructions from the channel of the said Steinhatchee River: Be it therefore

Resolved by the Florida Legislature, That the Senators and Representatives of the United States Congress of America, now convened in this the Seventy-fourth Congress, be, and they are herewith and hereby, respectfully requested and urged to make every effort and to appropriate such sums of moneys by their acts, for the purpose and usage to be spent and used in the removing of all sand bars and other obstructions from the channels of the Steinhatchee River, traversing the counties of Taylor, Lafayette, and Dixie, with its outlet in and to the Gulf of Mexico; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives of Congress, now convened in this the Seventy-fourth Congress of the United States, be, and they are hereby, respectfully requested and urged to appropriate sufficient sums of money, in addition to the removing of sand bars and other obstructions from the channels of the Steinhatchee River, to maintain a channel in the said river clear of all obstructions and sand bars; be it further

Resolved, by the membership of the Florida Legislature now convened in regular session, that a copy of this memorial be immediately forwarded under the great seal of the State of Florida, by the secretary of state of Florida, to the President of the United States of America, a copy to the Vice President of the United States of America, a copy to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of Congress, and a copy to each of the United States Senators from the State of Florida, and a copy to each Member of the House of Representatives from Florida, now serving in the Congress of the United States, and a copy to be furnished to the press for publication.

Approved by the Governor April 12, 1935.

PAYMENT OF SOLDIERS' ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATE

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a memorial from the State Legislature of the State of Florida.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, although the House has already passed the bonus bill at this session of the Congress, I am sure each of my colleagues will be interested in House Memorial No. 1 from the Florida Legislature, memorializing the Congress to promptly pass this legislation. It gave me pleasure to vote for payment of the bonus each time it has been before the Congress, and it is to be hoped that in the very near future the other branch of the legislature and also the Chief Executive may join with us in the final passage of this worthy legislation. The memorial follows:

A memorial to the Congress of the United States requesting the immediate passage of appropriate legislation for the payment and cancelation of interest charges upon United States veterans' service-adjusted certificates

Whereas it appears that the Government has proposed plans and programs of spending moneys and desires circulation; and

Whereas it appears that this would be a proper method of getting money into circulation and retiring a just obligation by the payment of what is known as "soldiers' bonus"; and

Whereas we deem it a just debt and liability of the United States of America to those who served their country in time of war: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Congress of the United States of America is hereby requested and petitioned for the immediate passage of appropriate legislation for the payment of what is known as the "bonus" or United States veterans' adjusted-compensation certificates, now held by ex-service men of the World War; be it further

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States in its wisdom for the immediate passage of appropriate legislation for the payment of what is known as the "bonus" or adjusted certificates that they do include therein such legislation provisions for the cancelation of interest charged and assessed against such adjusted certificate loans outstanding; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial, under the great seal of the State of Florida, be immediately forwarded by the Secretary of State to the President of the United States of America, to the President of the United States Senate, Hon. JOHN N. GARNER, a copy to Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS, Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress, and copies to be forwarded to the delegation representing the State of Florida in both the House and Senate of the United States Congress; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be spread upon the journal in both the house of representatives and State senate; be it further

Resolved, That sufficient copies of this resolution be furnished to the press.

Approved by the Governor on April 11, 1935.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following assembly concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Whereas, in 1921, the States of New York and New Jersey entered into a compact whereby they undertook the future planning and development of the port of New York and created the Port of New York Authority as their joint agent and trustee to provide adequate highway and railway communication within the port of New York district; and

Whereas, in 1922, with the approval of Congress, the two States adopted a comprehensive plan for the development of the port of New York, with particular regard to railroad facilities and improvements; and

Whereas, in 1931, by chapter 47, Laws of New York, 1931, and chapter 4, Laws of New Jersey, 1931, the two States declared and agreed that the vehicular traffic movement across the waters between the States of New York and New Jersey constituted a general movement of traffic and further agreed that the construction, maintenance, operation, and control of all such bridges and tunnels heretofore and hereafter authorized by the two States should be unified under the port authority; and

Whereas the Port Authority is now operating the George Washington Bridge and the Holland Tunnel, constructed at an aggregate cost of approximately $95,000,000, and is engaged in the construction of the Midtown Hudson Tunnel at a cost of approximately $38,000,000, which said facility was included in the comprehensive program of public works pursuant to the National Industrial Recovery Act, and is now in the course of construction; and

Whereas, in 1890, the North River Bridge Co. procured a corporate charter from Congress authorizing it to construct a railroad and vehicular bridge across the Hudson River between the State of New Jersey and the city of New York, and to build freight terminals in connection therewith; and

Whereas the said company originally planned to build such bridge in Hoboken, N. J., but has revised and altered its plans and now intends to build it in the vicinity of Fifty-seventh Street and to a corresponding point over the Hudson River in the State of New Jersey; and

Whereas, although 45 years have elapsed, such bridge has not been constructed and the plans therefor are still on paper and the two States have since developed and are effectuating a railroad and vehicular program in the port district; and

Whereas there is not, and will not for many years to come, be sufficient vehicular traffic across the Hudson River in the mid-Manhattan area to justify the construction of both the Midtown Hudson Tunnel and the proposed Fifty-seventh Street Bridge; and

Whereas the proposed bridge is in direct conflict with all elements of the carefully conceived plans of the two States for the solution of the railroad and vehicular communication problems in the port of New York district, and tends to place these plans and the interests of the two States in jeopardy, and is contrary to sound Federal and State policy: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved (if the senate concur), That the President and Congress of the United States are hereby memorialized and requested to repeal the charter of the North River Bridge Co. which was granted by act of Congress of the United States (ch. 669, 1889–90, 51st Cong., and Public Act No. 350, 67th Cong., 1922); and

That a copy of this resolution be transmitted by the secretary of state to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Member of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States from the State of New York.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Whereas a resolution providing for the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11 of each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski is now pending in the present session of the United States Congress; and

Whereas the 11th day of October 1779 is the date in American history of the heroic death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski, who died from wounds received on October 9, 1779, at the siege of Savannah, Ga.; and

Whereas the States of Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Nevada, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and other States of the Union, through legislative enactment, designated October 11 of each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day; and

Whereas it is fitting that the recurring anniversary of this day be commemorated with suitable patriotic and public exercises in observing and commemorating the heroic death of this great American hero of the Revolutionary War; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States of America has, by legislative enactment, designated October 11, 1929; October 11, 1931; October 11, 1932; and October 11, 1934, to be General Pulaski's Memorial Day in the United States of America: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved (if the senate concur), That the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania hereby memorialize and petition the Congress of the United States to pass, and the President of the United States to approve, if passed, the General Pulaski's Memorial Day resolution now pending in the United States Congress;

Resolved, That certified copies of this resolution, properly authenticated, be sent forthwith to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and each of the United States Senators and Representatives from Pennsylvania.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Florida, favoring the making of appropriations to be expended in the removing of all sand bars and other obstructions from the channels of the Steinhatchee River traversing the counties of Taylor, Lafayette, and Dixie, and also in addition thereto to maintain the channel in that river, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PREVENTION OF LYNCHING

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a resolution unanimously adopted by the Fifty-fourth Annual Convention of the American Federation of Labor, calling upon Congress to enact the so-called "Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill."

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the lynching of human beings and mob law are a shame and disgrace to our American civilization, holding our country up to ridicule and condemnation of the entire civilized world; and

Whereas nearly 5,000 lynchings have occurred in the United States of America in the last 50 years, over 1,000 of whom were white people; and

Whereas lynching and mobocratic germs, like disease germs, know no color, race, nationality, or religious lines, since history shows that wherever lynching becomes a custom that a black man may be a victim today but a white man will be the victim tomorrow; and

Whereas mob and lynch law are on the increase, striking here and there at the heart of the labor movement and our constitutional form of government, indicating the utter helplessness of individual States to cope with this crime against humanity: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Fifty-fourth Annual Convention of the American Federation of Labor, assembled in San Francisco, herewith proclaim to the world its absolute and unequivocal condemnation of lynch and mob law, and call upon Congress and President Roosevelt to enact and execute the Costigan-Wagner Federal antilynching bill, with a view to wiping out this shameful blot of barbarism from American soil; be it further

NATURAL RESOURCES OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, we are about to take a step that will have a far-reaching effect on our relations in the Orient.

We propose, under the Tydings-McDuffie Act, to set up a commonwealth and to take successive steps that will insure the independence of the Philippine Islands in 10 years.

It will be advantageous at the outset to have before us information as to the natural resources of the islands. I propose, from time to time, to call attention to important facts as to this rich dependency so far as these natural resources are concerned. Today I will refer to the production of gold.

The islands have become in recent years an extensive producer. At the present rate of production the 1935 output will surpass that of Alaska and will soon make the Philippines one of the greatest gold production areas of the world.

I ask unanimous consent that a portion of a very interesting article, which appeared in a recent issue of the New York Times, be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the information of the Members of the Congress.

There being no objection, the extract was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Mar. 31, 1935]

By Robert Aura Smith

At the present rate of production gold mining in the Philippines in 1935 will reach by far its highest level and will surpass the Alaskan output.

In 1934 Philippine mines produced gold in excess of ₱22,000,000 (about $11,000,000 at the present exchange). The first 2 months of 1935 showed a production of about ₱6,000,000, and with more mines coming into production the total for the year will probably exceed ₱36,000,000.

The Philippines at present are living in what is actually a gold rush. It is, however, vastly different from the early days of the Klondike or the California fields and, indeed, greatly different from the hectic gold-stock boom days of 1933 in the Philippines.

BOOM FOLLOWS GOLD-PRICE RISE

The increased price of gold in the United States has made it feasible to work some ores of lower grade than were previously mined and to bring into production properties whose commercial exploitation had been problematical. As a consequence there is a steady increase going on in all mining activities. The stock market for mining shares is active, but it is based more on investment than on speculative values.

Mining purchases are being increased both here and in the United States. New mills are being put up. Engineers are being brought out to the islands and pay rolls enlarged. The city of Baguio, around which most of the producing mines are located, is thriving. There is no shack building, but there is a steady increase of good homes, business houses, and general commercial enterprises.

At present there are 11 mines in the Philippines actually producing gold. Of these, five have completely repaid their original investment and are now paying dividends. The oldest of the companies is Benguet Consolidated. Its property lies about 10 miles outside the city of Baguio and has been under steady operation for more than 25 years. It has been producing gold for the last 10 years of that period and has paid large dividends. Its production during 1934 was ₱8,488,959.

A number of other mines will go into production very soon. Efficient small mills have been set up in numerous operations and profitable ore bodies are reported at various points throughout the district. Six of these companies are expected to start production within the next 3 months. Extensive developments are also going on in 14 other large mines and most of these developments have passed the experimental stage.

Mining in the Philippines is marked by very definite assets and liabilities. One of the largest assets is the high degree of accessibility. Beguio is only 125 miles from Manila by air line, has excellent roads and good railway service, and excellent airplane communications are available.

NOTICE OF SPEECH BY SENATOR LONG

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I have been requested by the senior Senator from the State of Louisiana [Mr.

LONG] to announce that if he can obtain the floor on Monday, April 22, he will reply to the statements of the Secretary of the Interior.

COMPROMISE BONUS PLAN—ADDRESS BY SENATOR HARRISON

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] over the Columbia Broadcasting System on Thursday, April 18, 1935, on the subject "The Compromise Bonus Plan."

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It has been my experience that most controversies are occasioned because the separate opinions are constructed upon different foundations and that persons on opposite sides of issues could most times reconcile their opinions were the basic facts carefully ascertained, studied and evaluated.

In a letter addressed to Commander Farmer of the American Legion Post, Henderson, Tex., President Roosevelt stated:

"I appreciate your letter of recent date, and it is particularly interesting in that it confirms an impression that I have had for some time; that is, that the bonus question is not well understood even among the veterans themselves."

Few questions in recent months have held the attention of so large a group of our citizens as has the immediate payment of the so-called "bonus."

It was no easy task in 1924 to pass the Adjusted-Service Certificate Act. It was only accomplished after a bitter legislative struggle, and over a Presidential veto. This act gave to the veteran of the World War an adjusted-service certificate, providing for an endowment-insurance plan in the amount of $1,000, due in 20 years, thereby protecting his dependents, in case of his death.

Those who advocated this plan at that time argued that it was so much better for the veteran to be assured of a nest egg in 1945, when the veteran's age would average 53 years, than to have a bonus given him then, when his age was, on the average, only 33 years. And so that plan was embodied in the present law.

What was that plan? It sought to give the veteran of the World War an extra dollar a day for service at home and $1.25 a day for service abroad, which, on the average, amounted to about $400. The Government said: "We will go further and boost it 25 percent, and we are going to use that amount as a lump-sum payment on a 20-year endowment insurance policy."

The average amount of each policy that the veteran received was $1,000, and the amount, as well as the date of maturity, was written on the face of the adjusted-service certificate. This $1,000 is accounted for by the interest the Government was to allow, at 4-percent interest, compounded through the years, on the amount figured at $1 and $1.25 a day for the number of days each veteran served in the war.

It can be readily seen that under the 1924 act the full value of these certificates will not be due for some 10 years. The policies having run for only 10 years, their present value is, therefore, a little more than half of what it would be when these certificates become due. By no stretch of the imagination and no standard of sound reasoning can the claim be justified that these certificates are now payable in full. But the Congress is confronted with the issue. It constantly bobs up, and will continue to be pressed upon the Congress by organizations composed of men of the highest impulses and the finest motives, whose records upon the battlefields and in defense of the country naturally make their influence felt, and who are entitled to receive the sympathetic consideration of those who direct the national machinery.

A few weeks ago the House of Representatives passed the so-called "Patman bill", which seeks to make these certificates immediately payable and authorizes the Government to issue the money with which to pay them. It will cost the Government in cash, and immediately, $2,300,000,000.

On yesterday I introduced a bill in the Senate, one which represents no extreme viewpoint but which will, if passed, enable the country to be rid of this vexatious and constantly recurring question and at the same time will cause no great shock to the Government's fiscal program. Succinctly stated, the plan embodied in the bill declares a policy of the Government that, in view of the generous benefits accorded by the Government to veterans of the World War in the form of insurance, compensation, disability allowances, hospitalization, vocational rehabilitation, adjusted compensation (as liberalized by this act), preference of various kinds under legislation of general application, and other benefits and allowances, many of which have not been granted to veterans of prior wars, there should not be any general pension laws enacted for veterans of the World War or their dependents.

Of course, one Congress cannot bind another Congress, but such a declared policy by this Congress will announce to the veterans, as well as the country, that they must not in the future look to the Government for general pension legislation. The paramount reason against general pensions to the World War veterans is because of the prompt and generous attitude of the Government toward the World War veteran in the many directions heretofore stated and the tremendous amount that would have to be paid.

While a large majority of the present service certificates date from January 1, 1925, and interest is only calculated from that date, the bill I introduced proposes to pay interest from the signing of the armistice, November 11, 1918. In other words, under this plan the Government will pay the 4-percent compound interest on the certificate from November 11, 1918, and the date that the face value of the certificate will be reached will be greatly accelerated. Every service certificate will be increased in a value due to the amount of the 4-percent compound interest from November 11, 1918.

The bill makes no drain upon the Treasury and calls for no immediate additional taxes. It is true that this proposal will cost approximately $500,000,000 more than under the present law; yet it will cost the Government a billion dollars less than the Patman bill recently passed by the House. My bill proposes to permit those veterans who so desire to immediately convert their certificates into Government negotiable 3-percent bonds. Of course, they cannot be converted to the full amount of the face value of the certificates, but to the amount of the present surrender value of the certificates. As an illustration: If the veteran desires to convert his certificates into a negotiable Government bond, and owes nothing on it, he would receive $750 in bonds and $25 in cash. If the veteran had borrowed against the certificate, the amount of the lien would be deducted from the $775, and the balance would be paid in a bond and cash to the amount further due. If the veteran had secured a loan upon his certificate to the highest possible amount that he would be entitled to borrow, which was still unpaid, he could obtain bonds for $150 and about $25 in cash. Those veterans who do not want to convert their certificates into bonds and who prefer to carry on their insurance for the protection of their families or for their own benefit, are granted this option. They are given the same privileges as are in the present law, as well as the benefits of increased value, because of the interest running from November 11, 1918, instead of January 1, 1925, or some later date.

Under the present law the certificates dated approximately January 1, 1925, will normally mature in 1945, while under the bill I have introduced this issue of certificates will have a surrender value as great as their face value in 1942, and depending upon the age of the veteran, the face value in some instances might be reached immediately. A veteran desiring to immediately convert his certificate into negotiable bonds will be assured of 100-percent return on his bonds. Government 3-percent bonds today in the open market are being quoted between 103 and 104. The bill guarantees 100-percent return, because it provides a heavy penalty against anyone purchasing any of these bonds from a veteran below par. Indeed, the figures I have quoted heretofore as to the amount each veteran will receive by immediately converting his certificate into negotiable bonds will be increased if the present value of these bonds is maintained.

The bill will permit those veterans who desire to retain their certificates after they have reached their full value and the insurance features have been eliminated to carry on their certificate as an investment up until 1945, and during that time receive from the Government 4 percent compound interest on the certificate. In other words, the veteran who desires to ride with the Government until 1945 can draw down on his certificate not the $1,000 as in the present law, but approximately $1,115.

I have proposed the bill in no controversial mood, with no desire to antagonize the viewpoint of others. I concede to everyone the right to his opinion. Only in the spirit of making an honest and sincere effort to compose differences that should not exist have I ventured, as Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, as a friend of the ex-service man, and as a believer in sound finance, to introduce my bill. I hope it will be accepted by the Congress and the President, so that we may get this troublesome question behind us. In my opinion, it is not only a fair and equitable, but a very practical way of handling this problem. None of the plans calling for immediate full cash payment can be enacted into law at this time. Any further attempt to do so is merely shadow boxing. There are not sufficient votes in one branch of the Congress to override a presidential veto carrying forth any such policy. The proposal I have introduced, if passed by Congress, will, in my opinion, be accepted by the President of the United States and be enacted into law.

FARMERS' HOME CORPORATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2367) to create the Farmers' Home Corporation, to promote more secure occupancy of farms and farm homes, to correct the economic instability resulting from some present forms of farm tenancy, to engage in rural rehabilitation, and for other purposes.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I do not believe that the Senate ought to pass the pending bill. I think there are many reasons why a bill of this type should not be passed. In the first place, if we are going to pass this bill, we ought to make the personnel provided to administer it subject to the civil-service requirements under the general civil-service law. In the second place, this bill, in its present form, has no limitation, and under it the Government could sell to any individual any acreage of land for any amount of money; the individual could borrow the full amount of the money necessary to purchase the land, and then take his time to repay it, if he ever should repay it. Thirdly, I believe that, if this bill is to pass, we ought to strike from it the guaranty by the Government of the payment of the principal and interest of the bonds proposed to be issued.

I wish to take a little time to give to the Senate information as to what we have done with reference to committing the Government to the guaranty of the payment of principal and interest on obligations issued by governmental corporations.

According to the Treasury statement on April 16, which I happened to pick up on my desk, the public debt is now $28,794,000,000 plus. But that does not tell the whole story. If we turn over to the back page of this statement, we find that the obligations of the emergency organizations and the authorizations for expenditure by those various organizations amount to $17,724,000,000 plus. Of that amount, $8,839,000,000 has not been expended. In other words, when that money shall be spent, we are going to have to obligate the Treasury for that additional $8,000,000,000, and that will have to be added to the amount which we already have as the existing public debt. We will then have a public debt of between $35,000,000,000 and $36,000,000,000.

However, that does not tell the whole story. We have recently passed laws authorizing the Government to guarantee different types of bonds and the interest on such bonds. I wish to give the Senate a short summary of what we have done with reference to that particular phase of financing. A great many men who have become financially distressed were not ruined by obligations created by themselves but by endorsing as security the notes of others. I desire every Member of the Senate to understand, and to remember, that every citizen of the United States is a guarantor and an endorser of every bond, and of the interest thereon, to which I am going to refer.

Under the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, we authorized, first, an issuance of bonds, guaranteed by the Government, both as to principal and interest, of $2,000,000,000. We have recently passed a measure providing an additional authorization of $1,750,000,000. We have, therefore, in the case of that one organization alone, notes aggregating $3,750,000,000, guaranteed by every individual citizen of the United States.

Under the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation there was an original authorization of $2,000,000,000. Under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation authority has been given to issue $5,550,000,000 in bonds, every one of them guaranteed by the taxpayers of the United States. We have also the Tennessee Valley Authority with a $50,000,000 authorization, making a total authorization of $11,350,000,000. We are invited here today to put the Government into the real-estate business and add another $1,000,000,000 to be guaranteed, both principal and interest, by the taxpayers of the Government.

Oh, it is said, that authority has not been used. It has been used to the extent that out of the $11,350,000,000 authorization $7,506,000,000 have already been used, and issues in that amount are now outstanding, guaranteed as I have indicated.

The Home Owners' Loan Corporation up to April 16, 1935, have already issued bonds, guaranteed principal and interest, in the sum of $2,560,842,525.

The Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation up to April 10, 1935, have already issued bonds in the sum of $1,139,928,900.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation have already issued bonds in the sum of $3,805,499,166.

The Tennessee Valley Authority have to date not issued any bonds. Why? Because they had an allotment under the P. W. A. which gives them working funds, and they have not to date been required to issue any bonds whatsoever. But the three organizations which I have named have issued bonds, guaranteed by the taxpayers of the United States, over and above the national debt, over and above the obligations which have been created in the emergency relief items to which I have heretofore referred, in the sum of $7,506,324,591.

We are now asked to go into the real-estate business and add to this amount another $1,000,000,000. I have never thought the Federal Government was authorized to go into the real-estate business. The only place where I can find there is any authorization or any control over territory is in article 4, section 3, of the Constitution, which reads as follows:

> The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States, or of any particular State.

That was the original grant of power with reference to territory. We also find in the United States Code, Annotated, article 4, section 3, at page 416, this statement:

> The term "territory" as here used is merely descriptive of one kind of property and is equivalent to the word "lands."

Citing the case of U. S. v. Gratiot (Illinois, 1840; 14 Pet. 537).

I read now from page 411, where I find this statement:

> The right of the United States to public lands originated in voluntary surrenders made by several of the old States of their waste and unappropriated lands to the United States under a resolution of the old Congress, recommending such surrender and cession to aid in paying the public debt incurred by the War of the Revolution. The object of all the parties to these contracts of cession was to convert the land into money for the payment of the debt and to erect new States over the territory thus ceded, and as soon as these purposes could be accomplished the power of the United States over these lands as property was to cease.

Citing the case of Pollard v. Hagan (Alabama, 1845; 3 Howard, 224).

Yet here we find that the United States is going into the land business. Under the terms of the bill the Government is authorized to buy land—for what purpose? For the purpose of dividing it up and then reselling it to what are known as "worthy farmers."

I do not believe the Government has any authority to buy land. I do not believe the Government under the Constitution was ever expected to go into the land business. I believe that what the Government cannot do directly it cannot possibly do by the agency of setting up a corporation. Under the "new deal" legislation there are numerous instances where an effort has been made on the part of those in charge to escape the responsibility of having a thing done directly by the Government by resorting to the device of having it done by a corporation as an agency of the Government. In my judgment, that is not a proper thing to do, it is not a thing that can be done properly under the Constitution, and it is a thing that should not be done.

As to the purposes of the bill, I believe it should be entitled not for the relief of the tenant farmers, not for the relief of the crop farmers, but for the relief of the landowners. They are the ones who will be benefited by the enactment of the bill, because we are going to find all over the United States an effort on the part of those now owning land to turn it over to the Federal Government, to turn it over to the corporation representing the Government. They will thus get away from the payment of taxes. It has not been a profitable investment for them. Therefore, in my opinion, the bill should be designated "A bill further to relieve the speculator and the present landowner."

Let me read a brief statement from page 37 of the hearings on this bill:

> Mr. RANKIN. It is the most valuable thing that can be taught to people. As I said a while ago, I don't see where opposition to this measure would come from, because, by the very nature of it, it will create a market for land, which is now a drug all over this country, and particularly in the Southern States. Some of our very best people, some of our very best citizens, are land poor. They have got more land than they can operate comfortably, and those places can be cut up into smaller places.

In other words, we find that the one thing which is to be done by the bill is to relieve of his land ownership the man who now has more land than he can profitably operate.

I think another suggestion should be made. It has been the record in my section of the country that if a man had money he could always buy land; and if he was making money he could buy land on credit. I believe if there is one thing that should be said in reference to the land situation it is that there has been too much credit, not too little. The farmers borrowed more money than they should have borrowed. They have heavier encumbrances on their land than they should have. Many times they increased the encumbrances against their farms in order to buy additional land. As a matter of fact, we should not cater to that sort of operation. What I consider to be the most wholesome feature of the present situation is that the people are gradually realizing that the solution of the depression is going to be accomplished through the effort of our people to get back to the land.

Citing further with reference to the intent of this bill, I desire to read a statement made by Mr. Westbrook, who is the Assistant Administrator of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, in charge of rural rehabilitation. This statement is found on page 41 of the hearings:

> To begin with, we have about 800,000 farmers who are now on relief. Roughly, those farmers are divided in this way: 300,000 in the South, 300,000 in the drought area, and 200,000 scattered generally throughout the country. In these problem areas, where we have made detailed studies, we have the percentages of people who are in relief and their classification.

Then he goes on and testifies about this situation. What do we have in this bill? At one time we had before the Senate a bill to curtail the production of cotton, and it is my understanding that that bill has put the cropping farmer of the South off his land. Now, on the one hand, we are going to say, "Your allotment is so much; you cannot raise any more cotton; if you try to raise more cotton than that, you will be prosecuted; therefore, the only thing for you to do is to get off your land and go on relief." On the other hand, we are going to say to the cropping farmer, "We are going to furnish you money, we are going to furnish you land, we are going to buy machinery for you, we are going to buy stock for you, we are going to buy seed for you, we are going to furnish you all the necessary equipment, and we are going to put you into the business of producing cotton."

In other words, one hand is working against the other. Perhaps we ought to designate this measure as a bill for the relief of the farmers who have been put on the relief rolls by the famous A. A. A. and its various efforts to bring about farm relief.

I heard the other day with a great deal of interest and read with a great deal of interest the statement of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] with reference to the experiment which has been conducted in California on projects very similar to the one we have before us today. I think I can say that I have made a reasonable effort to secure the facts in regard to those two projects. I desire now to say that if the State of Alabama or the State of California or any other State in the Union wishes to go into an experimental program for the socialization of land, such as is provided by the pending bill, I should not have any objection. I think, however, I should seriously consider getting rid of my property in that State, if I happened to have any, and getting out of the State, because I do not believe that type of socialization will ever work.

What do we find with reference to those projects in California? It is my understanding that two projects were attempted. The first one was partially successful. It was located, as I remember, at Durham. In that instance, as I understand, the State sought to do exactly what this bill attempts to do. For a while the farmers were able to carry on. In the end it was found that they were not able to make their payments, with the result that the whole project more or less went into a state of collapse.

I also find that an effort was made to establish a colony of this kind at Delhi. There, on account of the condition of the land, and on account of the various elements the settlers were compelled to face and the low prices accompanying the depression, the entire project more or less collapsed.

I am sorry that I could not obtain detailed information as to these two projects, but I desired to make that statement to show what I thought the Senate should know with reference to the projects by reason of the reference heretofore made to them.

I am one of those who believe that there are signs of hope in existing conditions; and those signs are on account of the fact that every farm census report from the Department of Commerce—the last one I have is no. 10—shows that on the average there is an increase in the number of farmers returning to the farm in practically all sections of the country and in practically every county in every State in the Union.

I have made an analysis of one of these reports, and find that in each of 18 counties reporting in Iowa there has been an average increase of 73 farmers going back on the farm.

Coming a little farther east, in Indiana, I find that in each of 10 counties there has been an average increase of 329 farmers going back on the land.

Going a little farther South, in the State of Tennessee, in each of 49 counties there has been an average increase of 378 farmers going back on the land.

In the State of Virginia, in each of 43 counties there has been an average increase of 410 farmers going back on the land.

In the State of Vermont, in each of nine counties there has been an average increase of 228 families going back on the land. In Vermont the counties are extremely large.

In the State of Connecticut, each of 10 counties shows an average increase of 1,487 families going back on the farm.

In Montana each of 16 counties shows an average increase of 104 families going back on the land.

In Wyoming each of 11 counties shows an average increase of 109 families going back on the land.

In my judgment today the only encouraging sign we find today to indicate that we are going to overcome the depression is the desire on the part of the people to go back to the land. The land is where all wealth is produced. If we have any progress it will be based on the land. It is the land and the wealth produced of the land that will bring us back to normal times. Therefore, I contend that one of the encouraging signs of the times is the fact that our people have a desire to return to the land.

In almost every State in the Union a man who wishes to engage in farming has plenty of opportunity to do so. There is land for sale, and there is land for rent. It is only on account of the fact that a stringency has been existing for several years that many farmers have been compelled to give up; but that does not mean that there is a desire on their part to leave the land. From the plat which was placed on our desks here yesterday we find that in the six New England States less than 10 percent of the people occupying farms are tenants; and I desire to say that it is the desire to own land which has encouraged many people to go out on the land and occupy it. Therefore, I repeat the thing which I think is encouraging in this whole program is the fact that a desire is shown on the part of the people to get back to the land.

Reports by the Department of Commerce, Bureau of Census, as to various additional counties show even a larger number going back on the land.

In the State of Illinois, Alexander County shows 299 families going back on the land; Bond County, 199 families; Bureau County, 115 families; Christian County, 323 families; Cook County, 684 families; Tazewell County, 346 families; and so on.

In my own State I find that the increase is not so large. Why? Because our farms are larger. Buena Vista County in Iowa shows 108 additional farmers going back to the land; Emmet County, 37; Hamilton County, 63; Lyon County, 65; Mahaska County, 94; Plymouth County, 106; Sac County, 134; Sioux County, 105.

I find that only in a limited number of areas is there a decrease. I find that there has been a decrease in certain parishes in the State of Louisiana, and a certain decrease is reported in a number of counties in the State of Mississippi. I am not sufficiently well acquainted with conditions there to know why there is a decrease, but I will say that the general trend all over the United States is for an increase in the number of families living on the farm.

The next matter to which I wish to call attention is the fact that this bill may become a land-speculation bill. There is no limitation in it. The corporation to be created could sell to one man all the land he might wish to buy. There are no restrictions whatsoever. The passage of the bill would set up a policy of socialization of land in this country. I contend that this is a trend in the wrong direction. I contend that it is not the province of the Government. I contend that it is one of the fields into which the Government should not enter at the present time. We now have available all the facilities necessary to enable anyone who desires to occupy a farm to do so; and the bill shows a tendency in a direction to which I am very much opposed.

I read now from a certain article as follows:

The total quantity of cotton to be delivered to the State procuring organizations by collective farms and individual peasant households in 1935 has been set at 1,404,910 tons, according to a recent Government decree.

I quote further:

Flax and hemp deliveries have been set at 360,000 tons of flax fiber, 250,000 tons of flaxseed, 75,000 tons of hemp fiber, and 70,000 tons of hemp seed. Special tax exemptions are established to stimulate the cultivation of these crops.

A listener would think, Mr. President, that I had been reading from the requirements of the Cotton Act as to the allocation and the number of bales of cotton that could be produced in the United States. As a matter of fact, I have been reading from the Economic Review of Soviet Russia, of the Soviet Union; and it sets forth exactly what we are doing here. Yet in this morning's press I read that George Burns and Gracie Allen have just returned from Soviet Russia. They went on a pleasure trip, and they say they are glad to get back home. Then Burns says:

We went to Russia as sightseers and returned as avowed anti-Communists. After a view of that country we realize that the lowliest figure in this country has more life than the average Russian.

However, we seem to be headed in the direction in which Russia is going.

Mr. President, the pending bill should not pass. It should not pass because of the fact that it would not bring about the results claimed for it. It is not difficult for anyone seeking a farm in any section of the country, if he has the ability and facilities, to acquire land at the present time. The average farmer in Iowa and the average farmer in the Mississippi Valley were formerly landowners. They started in and accumulated their stock, they accumulated their machinery, they accumulated their equipment, and in the end, when they had saved sufficiently, they bought farms. That tendency will continue. A tendency along that line is shown by the census reports. It is one of the movements which, in my judgment, we will discourage when we put the Government into the land business purely for the purpose of helping out the landowner.

It was shown here yesterday by the distinguished Senator from Michigan that the farmer has plenty of facilities for credit at the present time. He has at least eight or nine options. Yet I find that there is now an attempt to give him additional financial assistance through the pending bill.

In an address at Springfield, Ill., on October 21, 1932, President Roosevelt said:

At the present time we have at least seven agencies concerned with farm mortgages. * * * I advocate the coordination of such agencies to the end that the Federal agricultural policy in regard to farm mortgages may be guided by a single purpose.

I think we would do well to remember that suggestion. We already have various lending agencies set up. We already have too many of them. We find that the farmer is able to borrow money from half a dozen different sources.

I do not see how we can expect the farmers of this country to have confidence in the future unless we permit them to work out their own salvation, rather than try to regiment them, not only as to the crops they may produce but the money they shall borrow and the land they shall own, and give them no choice of their own.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is calling attention, first, to the multiplicity of guaranteed bonds already issued, and, second, to the multiplicity of lending agencies available to farmers. I think he should emphasize the fact that in spite of this formidable and complex system, and the generosity inherent in it, this is the first time, either in respect to guaranteed bonds or in respect to any Government loan, it has ever been proposed to lend 100 percent of the value of the collateral.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is absolutely true. In other words, this measure in effect provides that the Government is to own the land. We are going to convey it either by contract or by deed to a prospective landowner. In order to accomplish that objective, the landowner must be in a position to pay interest on 100 percent of the entire purchase price.

The principal trouble we have, and the reason why we have had such numerous foreclosures, is that many of the landowners have had too large loans on their farms and were not able to pay interest and taxes. That was what created a crucial situation in most of the farming areas, and now we are asked to have the Government lend the full 100 percent of the purchase price.

I know of a great many interests in the Middle West who want someone who will take hold of a piece of land and let them give a note or a mortgage on it, with the hope that they may work it out in the future, and be able to pay the interest and taxes as time goes on.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator has referred to the fact that the proposed legislation might be chiefly of benefit to the landowner rather than to the tenant who is a prospective proprietor. I call his attention to the address yesterday of the able Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I read from page 5925 of the RECORD.

There are many large plantations in the United States, some of them in my own State, held by what may be termed "absentee owners." For the most part, during recent years, such plantations have proved unprofitable; many of them are mortgaged, and, with some others, they might be cut up into small areas, with the approval of the owners, and sold for homes to those who are at present tenants and share-croppers.

In other words, as I read the Senator's statement, he is referring to plantations which, during recent years, have been unprofitable, and which are now to be sold to the tenants. I am unable to discover for myself how that could be considered beneficial to a tenant, when he becomes a copartner in the purchase.

Mr. DICKINSON. In other words, if a landlord cannot operate the land as it is at a profit, then how can we expect a tenant to operate it at a profit? I think it was explained yesterday by the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] that the tenant, or the "cropper", as he is called in the cotton States, is getting on better than the landlord. We found that condition to exist in practically all of the agricultural sections of the country. It is the man without the responsibility of paying taxes and of paying interest and paying for overhead and for repairs who is getting along all right, but the man who has the obligation of carrying all those expenses is the one who is in trouble. That will be true so long as prices are low, and so long as farming is more or less unprofitable. But the tenant is the man without the responsibility, and many tenants, rather than buy farms, even though they have enough money, will say, "I will wait and see how conditions work out. I will keep my money where it will be available for some other purpose. I do not want to run the risk of having my investment absorbed by taxes and interest until I know the conditions are to be more nearly normal."

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. GORE. I think the Senator from Iowa overlooks one point. Under the present system, where there are both a landlord and a tenant, the payments for not cultivating land are split between the landlord and the tenant, and the tenant ofttimes get the worst of the deal. Under the proposed system, where the tenant is to be converted into a landlord and where he will have no tenant, the new landlord, made out of the tenant, would get all these payments. Does not the Senator think that would inure to his benefit?

Mr. DICKINSON. Does the Senator have reference to what are called "allotment benefit payments" under the A. A. A.?

Mr. GORE. Various and sundry payments; payments not to cultivate the land. Suppose a tenant acquires 160 acres of land and cultivates 10 or 15 acres, and contracts not to cultivate 60 or 80 acres. Does not the Senator see how that would inure to the benefit of the tenant? As Will Rogers says, "If you know what I mean." [Laughter.]

Mr. DICKINSON. I have been under the impression that the A. A. A. payments were to be made out of what is known as the "processing tax." Those interested in cotton seem to know more about that than anybody else at the present time.

Mr. GORE. I think I can elucidate that point, too. Under the processing tax the Government of the United States compels the consumer to pay a tax to pay the producer not to produce in order to raise the price of what he produces to the consumer who pays the tax and the price. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH. Outside of that, it is all right?

Mr. GORE. Yes. As "Andy" would say, "It is scientifical." [Laughter.]

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I think that, with that explanation, I shall pass on, so far as the processing tax is concerned.

I think there is a choice of three things which might be done with reference to the pending bill: First, it ought to be recommitted to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. If that cannot be done, then it ought to be rejected. If it cannot be defeated on a roll call, then it ought to be amended; and I desire to suggest three or four amendments.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me again?

Mr. DICKINSON. With pleasure.

Mr. GORE. In connection with the suggestion as to the recommitment of the bill, I am inclined to agree with the Senator, and I should like to know of the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry whether it would not be possible, if this measure were recommitted, to have hearings and adduce further facts and data with respect not only to its probable consequences but with respect to some of the subsistence homestead projects which have already been embarked upon. If they have succeeded, it would constitute encouragement, I think, for this legislation, assuming it to be constitutional.

Mr. DICKINSON. Let me suggest to the Senator from Oklahoma that one of the things we ought to do is to find out what the experience of the various States of the Union has been with reference to projects of this kind. I have already referred to the California experiment. I tried the best I could to get the data with reference to those two experiences.

I might refer to land financing in the State of South Dakota. It is my understanding that under its farm-credit system the State of South Dakota already has acquired title to more than 22,000,000 acres of land. Of course, it would be a wonderful thing for the State of South Dakota if under this bill it could sell to the Federal Corporation those 22,000,000 acres of land and get the State's money out of it and then have the Government resell it to some tenant on a 100-percent loan, with the chances that the Government would be able to get back its money in time.

The Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has just appeared, and I should be glad to submit to him the request of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], which is that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SMITH. Or to the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency. Which does the Senator suggest?

Mr. DICKINSON. I am perfectly willing to see it recommitted to the janitor, if that is preferable.

Mr. SMITH. I suggest that the Senator take his choice.

Mr. DICKINSON. I wish to suggest that no one was called before the committee holding hearings on this bill and asked a single question as to the financing required under the provisions of the bill; as to whether or not we ought to issue a billion dollars in bonds of this kind; as to whether or not it was advisable to give a new corporation or a new board authority to issue another billion dollars in bonds of which every single, solitary taxpayer in America is a guarantor. Let us get this thing down to actualities.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Neither was any information adduced in the hearings, nor adduced by previous testimony, with respect to the contemplated uses of the $500,000,000 already earmarked for rural rehabilitation and the $5,000,000,000 "pot-luck" appropriation measure already passed.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is true. I presume the only reply that could be made to that suggestion is that we have put in the hands of the Chief Executive power to do anything he pleases with $4,880,000,000, which includes the $500,000,000 to which the Senator from Michigan refers.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Occasionally, when there has been before Congress a bill appropriating as much as a billion dollars it has been said that the appropriation of so much money might undermine the credit of the United States. Was any such observation made in connection with this billion-dollar bill?

Mr. DICKINSON. I recall that when the President vetoed the independent offices appropriation bill of last year, which involved an increase, as I understand, of about $200,000,000, it was said that if the bill were passed in that form it would unbalance the Budget and disorganize the finances of the country. It seems that now—without any thought, without any suggestion as to whether or not the Treasury should assume the responsibility—a bill is reported and we are asked to vote on it proposing to provide another billion dollars.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask the Senator to yield so that I may ask a question of the Senator from South Carolina, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the Senator from Virginia for that purpose.

Mr. BYRD. I ask the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] whether hearings were held on this bill before his committee?

Mr. SMITH. A subcommittee was appointed, and the subcommittee, of which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] was chairman, made a report. The Senator from Alabama can advise the Senator from Virginia as to what the subcommittee did. When the subcommittee submitted its report a viva voce vote was taken on the bill.

Mr. BYRD. Has that report been printed, and also the hearings?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; the hearings have been printed and the report has been printed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes, Mr. President, they have been printed.

Mr. SMITH. There were hearings before the subcommittee and the hearings were printed.

Mr. DICKINSON. I think the first thing which should be done, if this bill is to pass, is to provide in connection with the board to be created, which is to be composed of three members to be appointed by the President, that at least one of its members shall be of another political party. No suggestion of that kind is found in this measure.

The second thing which I think should be done is to strike out the provision in the bill which exempts the personnel from the Civil Service. If we are to have legislation of this kind, the personnel should be under the Civil Service.

After an emergency has lasted for so long a time it gets to be an actual condition. It can no longer be said that there is any emergency by reason of which this organization ought to be set up quickly. Therefore there is no reason why the personnel of the proposed corporation should not come within the classified service. It ought not to be the purpose of those seeking to pass the pending legislation to want the appointments to be purely political. Therefore an amendment providing for personnel to be appointed under the civil-service law should be adopted.

The first thing we should do is to strike out the provision on page 4, line 16:

> Such bonds shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed both as to interest and principal by the United States, and such guaranty shall be expressed on the face thereof, and such bonds shall be lawful investments, and may be accepted as security for all fiduciary, trust, and public funds, the investment or deposit of which shall be under the authority or control of the United States or any officer or officers thereof.

The sponsor of this bill said the other day that this was a self-liquidating proposition. Very well; if it is self-liquidating, let it stand on its own feet. If it is self-liquidating, let it go out and sell its securities in the markets of the world on its own responsibility. It is not only proposed that every taxpayer shall become a guarantor of all these bonds and the interest on them but it is proposed that the guaranty be written on the face of the bonds.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. How was the sum of $1,000,000,000 arrived at? Why was it not $100,000,000 or $300,000,000? Why is it necessary to have a $1,000,000,000 appropriation? Is it thought that all of $1,000,000,000 can be used immediately to put people on the land?

Mr. DICKINSON. I have been advised so little about this measure that I really do not know how the conclusion concerning a billion dollars was reached, or whether it was considered to be either too much or too little.

Mr. TYDINGS. What would be the average estimated cost per agricultural unit?

Mr. DICKINSON. I should say that in certain areas of the United States it would be from $4,000 to $6,000. In other areas it would be from $10,000 to $20,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. How many farms at $5,000 could be bought for a billion dollars?

Mr. DICKINSON. A good many more than there are in the United States at the present time. I would have to use my pencil.

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly; whoever wrote the bill did not fix the sum of a billion dollars without some estimate of how many people could be put on the land, and the per unit cost. I should be delighted if someone would explain how the figure of a billion dollars was arrived at. It strikes me that we might begin in milder fashion, and if the plan is successful, build up to the billion dollars. But why take a billion dollars and embark on a program with no per unit estimate and with no survey as to the number of people who might adhere to this plan? Why not cut it to $100,000,000?

Mr. DICKINSON. Without any attempt at criticism of those supporting the measure, I think they wanted the ante high enough so that if there should be any trouble in coming back for more they would not have to come back. In other words, there is a great deal in "getting while the getting is good."

Mr. TYDINGS. With a billion dollars there could be bought 200,000 farms at $5,000 a farm.

Mr. DICKINSON. And there are only 6,000,000 farmers in the United States.

Mr. TYDINGS. With four persons to the farm, that would, roughly, make about a million people who might be transported from the cities, I suppose, to the farms. And as I understand, the tenant farmer who is already on the farm is to become a property owner.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. So that we do not really cure the maladjustment between an overindustrialized situation and an agricultural situation.

Mr. DICKINSON. What is going to be done is to take the cotton farmer, who has been driven off the farm by the restriction of the production of cotton and into the relief line, and buy a farm for him and see if he can make a living on it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will he not have to curtail his acreage when he gets hold of one of these farms?

Mr. DICKINSON. That is the way he will make his money.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I further call the Senator's attention, on the question of recommital, to the report which was handed to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] when he asked for information. I call his attention to the testimony of the Secretary of Agriculture on page 5, who specifically points out that nobody has taken the trouble to inquire how this program fits into the Budget program, or what it does to the financial program of the President. The Secretary specifically withholds even his limited approval until he can obtain this additional information. And we have no knowledge as to whether there is any additional information.

Mr. DICKINSON. I desire to conclude. I do not know anything about a billion dollars. A billion dollars is beyond my comprehension. I do know something about how much effort it takes to raise $100,000,000. I know that the committees of the Congress, of both Houses, will sit around the table for days and weeks and months trying to figure out some additional taxes which will raise $100,000,000, and have the people enjoy paying them. Then we turn around and impose on the people the obligation which I have suggested here today, whereby every citizen of the United States will be an endorser of these notes, which will amount to nearly $11,500,000,000. Some seem to think that they are doing a public service by permitting this type of legislation to pass without having it properly explained to the people of the country.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. I desire to call the attention of the Senator that the bill likewise provides that this Corporation may buy land and lease it to the farmers. In other words, it can do the same thing that is now being done in Russia, to carry out the idea of collective ownership or operation which Dr. Tugwell has advocated in his speeches.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from Virginia was not in regular attendance during the discussion of the bill. For his information I will say that the word "lease" was stricken out of the bill by amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. BYRD. If the word "lease" has been taken out of the bill, I am glad to know that it has been slightly improved.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, does the Senator from Oklahoma desire to ask another question? If so, I yield to him.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I believe the Senator indicated that this bill might provide relief for the owners of large tracts of land in the South. I think it would provide relief for them, and it would provide relief, perhaps, for mortgage companies holding mortgages on those lands, and would help to bale out those liabilities. Does not the Senator think that every safeguard ought to be erected to protect the Government and to protect the purchaser in respect to these large tracts of land?

This is what I have in mind: A Government official advised me a few days ago that the Government had been purchasing mules or supervising the purchasing of mules in the program of rural rehabilitation, and it was developed in a public hearing that veterinarians (mule dentists) had been called in to operate on the lower teeth of the mules in order to make the mules appear to be young, to restore them, by a sort of "fountain of youth" process, to make young mules out of old mules. [Laughter.] As I understand, that was developed in a public hearing. If peculations of that sort are to be resorted to, it seems to me that every rational safeguard ought to be erected to protect the Treasury, to protect the public, and to protect the reputation of the Congress, where we are opening the door so wide to such possibilities.

Mr. DICKINSON. Let me read to the Senator subsection 3, which appears on page 8, and which gives the scope of this proposed legislation:

(3) To establish, make loans for, and to assist in the establishment of small individual farms and farm homes, together with the necessary buildings and other structures, livestock, equipment, implements and machinery, furnishings, supplies, and facilities.

Under that provision the Government could provide the house; it could supply a washboard; it could supply a cultivator; it could supply a planter; it could supply a seeder; it could build the farm buildings. I think it could even drain the land under the powers conferred by this bill and pay the drainage assessment, and it could clear it of timber, and kill the grasshoppers. In other words, there is absolutely no limitation to the operations of the Government in this respect. So I think there is every reason why this bill should be recommitted to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and be given at least some serious consideration.

RISING IMPORTS MADE IN JAPAN

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, imports of foreign goods into the markets of the United States, under the artificial price control of the N. R. A. and the A. A. A., have increased by something like one-third since 1932.

Imports into the United States for the calendar year rose from $1,300,000,000 in 1932 to around $1,650,000,000 in 1934, thereby taking away from American farms and mills $350,000,000 of sales of American products made by American labor.

At the same time, American production, if we consider the joint product of farms, mills, mine, and forests, has been reduced in the aggregate by something like one-third.

Moreover, the cost of living in the homes of the wage earners, the farmers, and the unemployed has been increased by something like one-third.

Furthermore, both the public debt and the cost of government have been boosted by over one-third, and national recovery is further off today than ever before, as shown by the $5,000,000,000 demand of the White House, as well as by the army of 11,000,000 unemployed and by the still larger army of 22,000,000 on Federal doles.

In other words, under a new deal which destroys the national wealth and income under the pretext of increasing wealth, we are rapidly stimulating foreign industries and imports from foreign lands, while cutting down the productive resources of the United States and plunging the country into a quagmire of public debt from which it may never rise clean.

We have destroyed the great American cotton industry by plowing under the crop and cutting down the textile product, while building up the cotton-growing industry of Brazil, Egypt, India, Russia, and Asia, and the cotton mills of Japan and Europe.

We have slaughtered our pigs until, instead of being the leading pork-exporting country, we are actually importing pork products to meet the shortage of meat supply.

We have slaughtered our dairy cows and are now importing butter from Australia, Denmark, New Zealand, and Canada.

We have destroyed, by A. A. A. and N. R. A. doles and domination, by Government subsidy, and by corn-hog checks, 40 percent of our corn crop and one-third of our entire food production, until last year total imports of food products reached $500,000,000, and imports of all agricultural productions, both edible and inedible, rose to the ominous total of $840,000,000.

Most of the agricultural commodities represented by this vast importation of $840,000,000 could have been produced on American farms and processed in American mills, thereby affording an honest income to American farmers and employment to our mill hands, except for Federal interference and domination of the laws of industry and trade under the A. A. A. and the N. R. A.

The figures of the Commerce Department likewise show imports of $240,000,000 of textile fibers and manufactures, $180,000,000 of wood and paper products, $140,000,000 of metal and machinery products, and $136,000,000 of chemical and miscellaneous, making a total of $1,634,000,000 of imports for consumption and a grand total of all imports $1,650,000,000.

This is in a country where production has been knocked down through the operation of Federal subsidy, and where 11,000,000 industrial workers are unemployed, not to mention an almost equal number of agricultural laborers and white-collar workers unemployed, with a grand total of 22,000,000 on public pay rolls as public charges.

Under the destructive policies of the new deal, the rising imports, the falling production, the increase of beggared population on public doles, the increased Treasury deficit, and the increased public debt are marching through the land hand in hand.

Hand in hand imports have risen $300,000,000, while production has declined.

Hand in hand the public paupers have increased by 5,000,000 in 2 years, while the public debt has grown by $10,000,000,000.

Hand in hand, though in reverse order, the cotton industry of the world has gone up, while the cotton industry of the South has gone down.

Hand in hand, though in reverse order, agricultural imports have grown to $500,000,000, while farm production has fallen off by still greater hundreds of millions.

Hand in hand, in reverse order, United States Treasury deficits have piled up to an accumulation of $10,000,000,000, including the present fiscal year, while Government credit has gone down until the Treasury is now trying to peddle a "baby bond" of $25 for $18.75, or 30 percent below par.

Cotton affords the crowning example of the disasters of the A. A. A. and N. R. A., because cotton was the first horrible example of the fallacy of the new deal by plowing up 12,000,000 acres of cotton as a pretended aid to recovery and also because cotton was the victim of the first N. R. A. code in July 1933.

From Atlanta, Ga., comes a dispatch of the United Press to the Washington Times of April 11 showing the benefits of the new deal to Japan, and how even an American flag used in this American textile-mill city by a Georgia patriotic organization on tag day bears the printed words "Made in Japan."

Mr. President, I desire to have this interesting article of the United Press read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in connection with my remarks. It will be instructive to the Senators of the majority—the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], our chief contact men with the White House and the efficient statesmen to whose generalship we are so generously indebted for the A. A. A. and the N. R. A., together with the destruction of the great cotton industry of the South.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the article will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

"MADE IN JAPAN" IS TRADE MARK ON UNITED STATES FLAGS

ATLANTA, GA., April 11.—Several weeks ago a tag day was held in Atlanta for the benefit of a patriotic organization.

Small American flags were sold and worn as a symbol of faith in America and things American.

It was discovered that on one of these tiny flags were the printed words "Made in Japan."

This incident served to center attention upon an alarming situation facing Georgia's major manufacturing industry—textiles.

TEXTILE MILLS HIT

Today Japanese textiles, manufactured by cheap labor, are being dumped in this country at such a rate that Georgia textile mills have been forced to reduce operations by 25 percent, a survey today indicated.

Japanese imports of textiles have increased from 30,378 square yards in January 1934, to 24,000,000 square yards in January and February of this year.

T. M. Forbes, secretary of the Georgia Cotton Manufacturers Association, revealed that a large Georgia textile manufacturer received a letter a few days ago from one of his biggest customers in the Middle West. It said:

"The New York representative of a Japanese company has offered us goods 4 cents a pound cheaper than your price. What are you going to do about it?"

FIGURES ON IMPORTS

Some idea of the amazing spurt in the amount of Japanese textiles imported into America is given by these figures from Mr. Forbes' files:

January 1934, 30,378 square yards.
April, 537,000 square yards.
November, 927,000 square yards.
December, 2,210,000 square yards.
January and February 1935, 12,000,000 square yards.

Georgia ranks fourth in the United States as a textile State. The latest check shows that 3,395,420 spindles were in operation when mills were running to capacity.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, under the operations of the A. A. A., the N. R. A., and the new reduction of tariff duties by treaties based on the favored-nation clause, monthly imports of Japanese textiles have grown over one hundredfold within the past 16 months, until the great patriotic State of Georgia, the fourth largest cotton textile State in the Union, holds patriotic parades under banners that bear the tag: "Made in Japan."

Hand in hand, in reverse order, the cotton industry of Georgia and the Carolinas, Alabama and Mississippi, Texas, and Arkansas, is going down, while that of Japan is going up. Are the statesmen of the cotton South, who sit in control of this Congress, going to extend this policy of building up Japan at the expense of their own country?

Do they propose to add 2 years more of this chaos to the A. A. A. and the N. R. A.—2 years more of destroying the South and destroying America, while building up the prosperity of every nation on the globe, except only the United States?

The N. R. A. attempts to substitute the "blue eagle" for the American flag of the fathers. But it seems that patriotic citizens, as in Georgia, are permitted to wave the flag, provided it bears the printed label, "Made in Japan."

A cotton goods mercantile establishment in the Middle West telegraphs New York that the Japs will furnish cotton goods at 4 cents a yard under the American code price, and wants to know:

What are you going to do about it?

That is what the American people are now asking a rubber-stamp majority that wears a tag that resembles a "blue eagle" or other alphabetical design, but being translated reads "Made in Japan."

The "brain trust" which foisted this disastrous nonsense upon the Government, and obtained a rubber-stamp mortgage upon it, seems to have disappeared in a dust cloud of resignations. Perhaps it has flown to Japan. They did to Washington what drought and dust are now doing to the West. Many have wondered where they came from and where they went to. All they left behind was chaos and the dust clouds.

It was presumed that many of them came from the new deals of Mussolini and Hitler or from Soviet Russia. But their baggage bears the mark, "Made in Japan." Japan appears to be the one outstanding beneficiary of the new deal in Washington.

Imports from Japan exceed the total from the United Kingdom, exceed the combined total of United States imports from France and Germany, and exceed those from any foreign country, except only our next neighbor, Canada.

The new deal has cut down our corn crop 50 percent, reduced our national food supply one-third, struck down the industries that paid the taxes and the wages—but it has given Japan the biggest industrial expansion and prosperity of that country's history. So, our new deal, like our flag, may now consistently wear the tag, "Made in Japan."

At the coming Democratic primaries the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], who hold the key positions in directing the legislation of the Senate, and also are the mainstay of the administration in the program to extend the A. A. A. and the N. R. A., will be coming up, I assume, for reelection in 1936. They will need slogans for their campaigns. And banners for their parades. Though I am not in their political confidence, it is not difficult to determine the slogans they will employ and the banners their followers may use.

Down the street and over the platform will hang a Blue Eagle banner, and the bunting will carry the tag "Made in Japan."

That "brain trust", if it has not gone to Russia, may now be retired to Tokyo, receiving medals made in Japan, and even the rubber stamp that is the token of our subservience will soon wear the tag "Made in Japan."

The record of the new deal might well read: "Moley planted, Tugwell watered, but Japan showed the increase."

THE COTTON TEXTILE INDUSTRY

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, I have received some petitions signed by some 2,600 persons in my State. These are signed by the workers and former workers in the cotton mills. They present an earnest prayer from these people to the President and the Congress of the United States to take immediate action to save the textile industry of the country. The petitioners are pleading for their jobs. I hope this very important evidence of the feeling in New England and the South will meet with the sympathy of this body.

The petitions are variously worded, but here is one which is typical:

To the President and the Congress of the United States:

Whereas the right of petition is our only means of impressing our Government with matters of vital importance; and

Whereas the cotton-textile mills are placed in jeopardy by the policies of the national administration; and

Whereas the closing of many mills in Rhode Island has caused unemployment and misery for thousands in this State; and

Whereas the large importations of cheap cotton cloth and the cotton processing tax have made profitable manufacture of cotton cloth almost impossible: Therefore

We, the employees and former employees in the textile mills of Rhode Island, do petition the President and the Congress to take immediate steps to save the cotton-textile industry by protecting American workers against the low wages in foreign countries and by repealing the cotton processing tax.

That and somewhat similar petitions have been signed by 2,622 people of Rhode Island.

I have also received many letters from various sections of the country. I am going to read one or two of them from individuals who are either out of work or afraid they are going to be thrown out of work. Here is a typical letter:

We must awaken to the fact that the textile industry is now facing a crisis. Mills are closing and hundreds are being thrown out of work. We must do something at once. I think it is about time our people began buying the products which keep American labor employed.

Unless something is done about the processing tax and the Japanese imports, I am afraid the production in cotton shall be curtailed.

If the processing tax were eliminated, and some limit of Japanese imports made, I think the cotton manufacturers could plan to add to their force instead of curtailment, as at present.

I am sure you will give this appeal your utmost consideration.

Here is another one:

ESMOND, R. I., April 16, 1935.

Senator JESSE H. METCALF,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As voters we have a constitutional right to demand that our means of livelihood be protected.

Our jobs are in jeopardy if the processing tax on cotton is continued. I am writing you today requesting that you exert your influence to have this cotton processing tax removed.

I am an employee of the Esmond Mills, and I want my job protected.

Here is a letter from a man who furnished supplies to cotton mills. What has happened to his business? Listen:

EAST PROVIDENCE, R. I., April 16, 1935.

Senator JESSE H. METCALF,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR METCALF: I am writing you in regards to the present textile situation in New England.

Because of the present condition I have been forced into bankruptcy. While, however, I didn't employ only nine, none as yet have been able to find employment.

My company was the oldest of its kind in America, established in 1868; and, I might add, I was the fourth generation in the same line. Perhaps you knew of my concern—the John McCausland Paper Tube Co., 86 Valley Street, East Providence, R. I.

Trusting that you will see that we get relief as soon as possible. I beg to remain.

What are we going to do about it? It is time something should be done to keep these poor people employed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have sought recognition for the purpose of calling attention of the Senate to a motion which I interposed a day or two ago concerning House bill 7054, an act to provide for the protection of land resources against soil erosion, and for other purposes. I interposed the motion largely because of the absence of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], who desired to make some observations concerning the measure, and also for the purpose of calling attention to one of the provisions of the bill which did not meet my approval. It was not my intention to object to the passage of the bill, though if I believed I could have secured an amendment to the bill in harmony with my views, I should have offered the same. I shall call attention to the matter in a few moments, after I have very briefly replied to the able Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], who has just addressed the Senate with respect to a matter quite different from that involved in the soil-erosion bill referred to.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], if I understood him correctly, and I came into the Senate from a committee meeting after he had been speaking for a few moments, was indulging in rather solemn lamentations because of the existence of trade between the United States and other nations.

I know that for many years leaders of the Republican Party and some Democrats supported the thesis that trade had only one lane and that was a one-way lane through which American surplus commodities might pass out to other nations, but there was no returning lane through which commodities from other nations might pass to the United States. In other words, their view was that trade was unilateral, and that the United States was to be the only beneficiary of foreign trade, and that under that unilateral theory the United States could export—but under no circumstance import products from other lands.

Recently we have had a number of so-called "economists" who have aggressively advocated what amounted to an embargo upon trade with other nations. Indeed they were contending for what they denominated a self-contained nation, and were satisfied to neither export commodities nor import the products of other nations, but that America should be satisfied with producing all that it consumed and of consuming all that it produced. Under the philosophy of such experts and economists it mattered not that America produced surplus raw materials, some of which were not found in other nations, and produced and had capacity to produce commodities greatly in excess of domestic demands. Neither did it matter to them that other nations produced commodities important and valuable to us and to our well-being which were not indigenous to our land, nor could we produce unless perhaps at excessive cost.

Senators will not forget that when the Tariff Act of 1930 was under consideration it was blithely—indeed, seriously—suggested by an able Senator schooled in the philosophy to which I have referred, that we should exclude by tariff wall bananas grown in other lands and thus compel Americans to eat more apples.

Many of the troubles through which we have passed during the so-called "depression" find their origin in the extortionate rates imposed by monopolies and trusts and tariff barons who exercised dominating influences over the Republican Party. It is one of the anomalies of our economic and political life that the agriculturalists of our country for years were ardent supporters of the tariff cult of the Republican apostles of extreme protection. They knew, or should have known, that their prosperity was largely due to the fact that their surplus agricultural products found a ready market beyond the seas. They were anxious for foreign markets because they knew the domestic market would not consume all their products. And so they shipped abroad wheat and flour and corn and barley and hay and various agricultural commodities, as well as meat products, the aggregate of which was hundreds of millions of dollars, and, indeed, in some years several billions of dollars worth of their surplus commodities. This foreign market tended to stabilize the domestic market and to enable the farmers to realize reasonable profits upon the products which they sold for domestic consumption, as well as satisfactory profits upon their exportable products. As a result of this international trade and commerce in which agriculture played a most important part, the farmers of the United States enjoyed a reasonable degree of prosperity.

Witness the farms of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Indiana, Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri, and many other States. Witness the millions of fine homes and farm equipment and all of the improvements that were placed upon these farms and which added to the comfort, happiness, and well-being of the owners of the same. The value of farm lands increased, and in small communities and towns of 1,000 to 2,000 and 3,000 inhabitants there were found business houses, banks, and in many places industrial units and a prosperous and happy and progressive people.

This favorable condition of agriculture was due very largely to the markets for surplus commodities which the farmers found beyond the seas. The balance of trade increased from year to year and was due in part, indeed in a very great part, to the foreign markets which the agriculturists of the United States were able to enjoy.

I recall a day or two ago listening to a speech of the able Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] in which, as I recall, he stated that during a certain period of time the balance of trade in favor of the United States was $34,000,000,000, being almost the entire value of American cotton sold in foreign markets. For years our exports have exceeded our imports, and it is as certain as the night follows the day that our exportable products have resulted in increased employment to millions of American people and added greatly to the profits enjoyed by the American people.

Indeed, our foreign trade has been a most important factor in the development of our industrial and economic life. The factories, plants, mills, fabricating plants—all of these owe, in part, their development to our foreign trade and commerce. It is difficult to estimate the number of persons who have obtained employment by reason of our foreign trade, but the figures would run into the millions. My recollection is that President Hoover in one of his addresses during the campaign when he was a candidate for the Presidency in 1932 referred to the importance of our foreign trade and stated in substance that several million—my recollection is it was between four and five million—Americans derived employment by reason of our foreign trade.

The War of 1812 was, in part, due to the interference by Great Britain with our foreign trade, and our Revolutionary fathers regarded it as one of the justifications for independence that our commerce with foreign nations had been cut off by Great Britain.

The figures, which I happen to have upon my desk, as shown in the Statistical Abstract of the United States for 1931 show that in 1916 our exports were approximately five and one-half billion dollars; in 1917 they were considerably in excess of $6,000,000,000; in 1918 they exceeded $6,000,000,000; in 1919 they approached $8,000,000,000; and in 1920 they exceeded $8,000,000,000. There was a material reduction in our exports during the years from 1921 to 1927, inclusive, though in the latter year they were $4,758,000,000, and in 1928 and 1929 for each year our exports exceeded $5,000,000,000.

Our imports in 1916 were only $2,391,000,000. The following year they increased to $2,952,000,000; in 1919 they were $2,904,000,000; in 1920, $5,278,000,000; in 1922 they dropped down to $2,500,000,000; and for the next 3 years they were from $3,112,000,000 to $3,609,000,000. During 1926, 1927, 1928, and 1929 they ranged between $4,184,000,000 and $4,399,000,000. In 1930 they were $3,000,000,000. An examination of the records of the Commerce Department—and I am now speaking largely from memory—during the years 1931, 1932, and 1933, show a marked decline in exports and imports. In 1933 our total exports, if my memory serves me correctly, were approximately $1,800,000,000 to foreign countries and approximately $200,000,000 to United States Territories and possessions. During the same year imports from foreign countries were approximately $1,300,000,000. Our exports to Japan in 1933 were $143,000,000 and our imports $128,000,000. I have not seen the latest figures from the Department of Commerce showing exports and imports for 1934, but I am advised that our exports were $2,133,414,000 and our total imports $1,655,000,049. This would show a balance of trade in favor of the United States of $478,365,000.

Senators have read criticisms upon the part of nationals of other countries because of the large imports, as they contended, from the United States; larger, indeed, as the claims were, than the exports to this country. The fact is, Mr. President, that United States has found markets for tens of billions of dollars of American products, and it is a fact which cannot be gainsaid that our exports have been greatly in excess of our imports. For years we manufactured commodities and sold them in foreign lands cheaper than they were manufactured and sold in those countries in which we found markets and cheaper than they were sold in the United States. Our technical development, our superior machinery, and the superior skill of American workmen enabled the United States to produce many commodities cheaper than they could be manufactured or produced in other countries.

What I am saying is not intended as a reply to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] in his contention that Japanese textiles are finding a market in the United States to the disadvantage of American products. I am only attempting to indicate that the United States and the manufacturers and employees in the United States have profited greatly by our foreign trade and commerce. As Senators know, for years Great Britain purchased commodities from the United States of between $400,000,000 and $500,000,000 annually in excess of the value of those we purchased from her; and Canada has been one of our best markets, buying products of the value of $900,000,000 in some years, while her exports to the United States were between $400,000,000 and $500,000,000.

This world cannot exist without trade and commerce. Isolation means stagnation, with all of the evils that follow—mental, economic, and industrial stagnation.

I have sometimes thought that we have listened too much to the appeals of reactionaries and selfish and greedy industrial interests who have exercised too much influence in formulating tariff legislation. Some of the troubles from which we have suffered are the results of monopolies, trusts, and agreements in restraint of trade and which grew out of unjust tariff laws behind which monopolies fortified themselves to raid the public and to increase their swollen fortunes.

Mr. President, I sympathize with the criticism offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] concerning the processing tax upon cotton goods. I was opposed to that policy adopted by the A. A. A. and believe that some of its activities have been injurious to the farmers and also to the American people. The sooner it abandons some of its archaic, unwise, unsound, and oppressive policies, the better it will be for the American people.

PREVENTION OF SOIL EROSION

But, Mr. President, I intended to say only a word in reply to the Senator from Rhode Island, but took the floor for the purpose of bringing to the attention of the Senate a motion which I submitted a day or two ago with respect to House bill 7054. That bill was taken up during the morning hour and under the 5-minute rule where it was impossible to discuss it or to analyze its provisions, and I asked to reconsider the vote by which it was passed, doing so in part at the request of several who desired to submit a few remarks before final action was taken. I stated then in substance that the bill was meritorious, but I regretted that its administration was not placed in the hands of the Interior Department where soil erosion work for several months has been carried forward. I stated then that I had great confidence in Mr. Ickes, in his executive ability, and for myself I believed that the administration of the provisions of the measure could be more efficiently carried forward and the results would be much more satisfactory, than if any other branch of the Government were charged with the responsibility of formulating comprehensive plans to deal with this important problem and of carrying the same into execution.

I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate take up for consideration the motion for reconsideration, and unless others send in desires to speak I shall withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, of course if that shall be done—and I have agreed that it may be done because I understand that the time consumed will be very brief—I wish to have a clear understanding that the matter is not to displace the pending business. The unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside, and will be promptly taken up immediately after the Senator's motion shall have been acted upon.

Mr. KING. That is my understanding. I would not displace the unfinished business.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator did not so state.

Mr. KING. Action taken by unanimous consent would not mean a displacement of the unfinished business, and I did not so intend it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the request of the Senator from Utah should prevail, the business now before the Senate would not be permanently displaced.

Mr. BANKHEAD. As soon as the motion to reconsider shall be disposed of, I understand the consideration of the unfinished business will be resumed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will return to the consideration of the so-called "Bankhead" bill. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in view of the statement made by the Senator from Utah that later in the day he will withdraw the motion to reconsider, I shall not take the time of the Senate in making any extended observations on the bill.

However, I do wish to say that at the time the bill was before the Senate on the call of the calendar I mentioned several bills which had been introduced in the House and in the Senate for the same general purposes as House bill 7054. At that time I neglected to state that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] had introduced two bills covering the same subject. In addition to that, the Senator from Oklahoma attended our committee meetings, was present at the time of the hearings, and rendered very valuable services to the committee at those hearings. He also made suggestions concerning amendments which were adopted by the committee and are now in the bill.

I have in mind the particular amendment which designates the agency to be established as the Soil Conservation Service. Heretofore that service has been designated as the Soil Erosion Control Service. It was on the suggestion of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] that we adopted the new name, "Soil Conservation Service", which, to my mind, is much more fitting and much more descriptive of the work to be done under the bill.

I desire at this time to ask the Senator from Oklahoma to make some observations concerning this work, which is of so much importance.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I am obliged to the Senator from New Mexico for bearing witness in this place to my interest in the subject of the prevention of soil erosion. Erosion is the evil, and soil conservation is the remedy.

As suggested by him, I introduced a bill upon this subject, Senate bill 2418. The bill was introduced, I believe, on March 27. I may say that on that day Chairman JONES, of the House Committee on Agriculture, introduced House bill 7055. On the same day Representative DEMPSEY, from New Mexico, introduced in the House an identical bill, House bill 7054. The bill which I introduced in the Senate on that day was identical with those two measures.

I have been collaborating with those and other Representatives, with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] in furtherance of this proposed legislation. I wish now to say a few words upon the subject of soil erosion and soil conservation, because soil erosion is not a local question; it is a question of national scope and of national concern.

I may say that this menace or this evil is omnipresent. It is everywhere. This evil is active in every section, in every State, in every county, and in every community, and I might say that it is active or threatening to become active on every farm throughout the entire country. It is, therefore, a matter of vital concern not only to individual farmers but to our entire citizenship, because the existence as well as the prosperity of town and city alike in the last analysis is dependent upon the prosperity of the farm. I think recent tragic history bears witness to the truth of that statement.

Mr. President, as I have just observed, this question not only concerns the individual farmer; it concerns the general welfare. The solution of this problem is indispensable to the prosperity and the well-being of the farmer. It is indispensable to the preservation of our entire economic structure. The soil is the source of wealth. I might say that the soil is the source of life.

Soil lies at the basis of the farm and the home, the basis of organized society. It is the basis of our civilization itself.

Mr. President, our soil, the source of our wealth, is running down to the sea. It is estimated that 3,000,000,000 tons of soil are eroded and destroyed year after year in this country. It is estimated that as much soil fertility, as much plant food, is destroyed every year by erosion as is absorbed by all our agricultural products taken together.

It is estimated that our losses by soil erosion in terms of money amount to $400,000,000 year after year. In every period of 5 years that is 1 percent of our entire national wealth. Our wealth is wasted to that extent.

There are two kinds of soil erosion, one due to wind and one due to water. Of course, erosion by water is general throughout the entire country; that is a permanent menace or evil. It is persistent, and it must be attacked in every community throughout the entire country. It calls for long-term treatment.

Wind erosion is also permanent and persistent. It is not so general throughout the country. Its worst ravages are limited to the section in which I happen to reside, in a vast area on the great plains stretching from Canada almost to the Mexican border.

On the 11th day of last May this country witnessed something new under the sun. It witnessed a dust cloud originating in the Northwest, a dust cloud which darkened the sun. A dust storm originating in the Northwest brought the proof of its ravages as far east as this Capital, as far east as the metropolis of this country, and went far out to sea. Dust from the farms in the section of the country to which I have referred drifted down on vessels 300 miles out in the Atlantic Ocean.

That storm is estimated to have removed 300,000,000 tons of fertile soil. That amounts to stripping 200,000 acres of soil to a depth of 6 inches.

The more recent storms of this kind have originated in my immediate section, have originated for the most part between the thirty-fourth and fortieth parallels, the ninety-ninth and one hundred and fifth meridians. The storm center has been near the point where Oklahoma, Texas, New Mexico, Colorado, and Kansas come together. Cimarron, the most westerly county in Oklahoma, joins Texas, New Mexico, Colorado, and corners with Kansas. I have here a picture from which one can gather some conception of these devastating storms.

Mr. President, the recent dust storms originating in my State have sifted dust down upon the dome of this Capitol. To me these dust storms have been the most tragic, the most impressive lobbyist, that have ever come to this Capital. Like death, they hold every man by the ear; they challenge attention, they demand action, they demand action now, and they give proof positive that there is no economy in delay.

If our own experience were not sufficient warning, we might find sufficient warning in the experience of other countries. Their experience tells the tale, and teaches a lesson which we ought to learn. The fate of other countries in other climes and in other times constitutes a tragic warning. Their ruins stare at us like a death's head. Their soil and their splendor departed together.

Large areas have been destroyed in Italy, vast areas in northwestern China. Erosion has laid vast regions waste and made them desolate.

Fortunately this problem can be solved. The problem has been solved. This evil can be arrested and prevented. Italy has worked out a scientific system of soil conservation not only arresting erosion, not only conserving her soil, but actually reclaiming regions which were lost and condemned to death.

Japan has worked out a scientific system; she has arrested erosion and is doing much to redeem and to reclaim what was lost. Experiments carried on under the auspices of our own Government have demonstrated that much can be done to arrest erosion and to promote conservation.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Does the eloquent Senator from Oklahoma agree with me that the evidence taken before the committee which considered the pending bill discloses the qualifications of the Soil Erosion Service to deal promptly and scientifically with this grave crisis both by long-time and short-time methods?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I think the experience of the Soil Erosion Service has demonstrated that means and methods of a practical kind have been worked out which will greatly reduce, if they do not entirely correct, the dangers and the evil of which I now speak. I will not discuss the details. At any rate, the necessity is so great, it is so overpowering, that, in my judgment, all doubts should be resolved in favor of action. It is certain that inaction will not avail, and this is an evil which will not cure itself. It grows worse with time.

Mr. President, it is estimated that dust from the western counties of Oklahoma amounting to 5,000 tons was deposited in Tulsa County, one of our smallest counties during only one of these recent dust tempests, if I may so term it.

We can, fortunately, solve two problems at once by promoting soil conservation. The Mississippi River drains two-thirds of this country. The Mississippi drains, in whole or in part, 32 different States in the Union. The Mississippi River disgorges into the Gulf of Mexico 400,000,000 tons of soil each and every year. It robs, it impoverishes, the land without enriching the sea. The Mississippi River periodically breaks out of its bounds, it overflows and ravages the Delta. Many times in the past it has occasioned losses in a single season sufficient in value to confine or control its run-away waters to hold in leash its devastating floods.

I do not think we can ever explain to posterity our criminal negligence with reference to the Mississippi River. The control of the Mississippi River is a national problem. It is a national project. It cannot be cared for by any one State. It cannot be cared for by any voluntary association of different States. It must be supervised, conducted, and financed by the National Government.

The Mississippi is a great national highway. It is a navigable stream. The Mississippi cuts across this country, and it may be likened to a mammoth tree, the main stream the trunk of the tree; its various tributaries on either side may be likened to the limbs and the branches of the tree.

The smaller tributaries and creeks may be likened to the smaller branches and twigs and the farms may be likened to the leaves of the tree. I believe the Mississippi can be curbed and its lawless waters held in leash. I think that ought to be done.

How is the best way to do it? Mr. President, the best way is to stop the water where it falls, to stop every drop of water that you can where it strikes the earth. That serves a double purpose. It diminishes the floods of the Mississippi and it conserves the moisture and the soil where the water falls. By dams and reservoirs along the tributaries—pools and ponds and lakes—along the creeks and the smaller streams, with terracing and conservation on the farm, we can hold back much of these waters and prevent these destructive rampages which return year after year.

I pivot my support of this measure in the main on controlling the flood waters of this navigable stream, controlling the tributaries of the Mississippi, and controlling the watersheds which contribute to the floods and which are accomplices in the disasters which they work.

This is a proper governmental function, because there are some problems in connection with soil erosion and soil conservation which the individual farmer cannot solve for himself—engineering problems. There are situations where one farmer might correct his own trouble and yet destroy the land of his neighbor. There are other places where soil conservation districts can be formed and financed in order to control these outbursts and to insure the permanence of the soil-conservation projects themselves.

Several such districts have already been formed in Oklahoma. The farmers feel and manifest the keenest interest in soil conservation. Not only the farmers but the people in the towns share this interest and support this movement.

Mr. President, we have been spending from time to time—and I do not complain—millions and hundreds of millions of dollars upon the construction of highways. To construct highways by eroded, denuded, and desolated farms is of no particular public service. Highways which render no other service than to enable the impoverished people to make their escape from desolated farms are of no general public concern.

I desire to see adopted and pursued a policy as a long-term policy wherever required, both as to wind and as to water erosion, to enable the individual farmer to help himself, to protect his own farm against this menace and this evil. I would not have the Government drain or protect any farmer's farm at Government expense alone further than to provide demonstrations, and, where necessary, to straighten channels and construct dams. So far as practical let every individual farmer do his own work on his own farm. I believe he will do it, and then he will appreciate it. Every time he stops a drop of water where it fell he helps to conserve the moisture on his own farm and to control the flood waters of the Mississippi, both a private and a public service. The spirit already manifested in Oklahoma in support of this movement confirms my faith in this undertaking.

Mr. President, I desire to say that Oklahoma is the most recent type of our original colonies and our original States. Oklahoma was the last frontier. The people of Oklahoma are the last pioneers. They assembled in that section from every other State in the Union—I might almost say from every quarter of the globe. There they encountered the hardships of the border. They conquered the obstacles of the frontier. Brave men and brave women underwent all the privations of a new country, inspired by the sacred desire to acquire a home. They developed there the virtues of the pioneer, fortitude, self-denial, self-reliance, self-respect—virtues which have made this country great in the past, virtues which alone can keep us great in the years to come.

In our country the pioneers lived in sod houses. They lived in dugouts. They ate kafircorn bread and molasses, and they did so without complaining, inspired by the hope of a home. That country was settled by brave men, by men who dallied with danger as the she tiger fondles her young. They made Oklahoma in their own image. They asked only a chance. Give them a chance and they will rebuild their fallen fortunes. Give them a chance and they will conquer their own destiny. That is my faith. That is my hope.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD immediately following my remarks the song entitled "My Oklahoma Home", written by an Oklahoma woman, a friend of mine, Mrs. George A. Bottom.

There being no objection, the song was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Respectfully dedicated to Hon. THOMAS P. GORE

MY OKLAHOMA HOME

(Words by Mrs. George A. Bottom, music by Jack Stanley)

Just a picture of my Oklahoma homestead,
Comes to mem'ry as I dream of it tonight.
'Tis a little old brown cabin on the prairie,
Where the western sun shines o'er it clear and bright.
There I took my sweetheart wife one golden summer,
When all the world with Nature seemed at play.
And in our love were happy there together,
In my Oklahoma home so far away.

Chorus

From the mountain tops the purple haze is falling,
While the prairie's breeze I miss where'er I roam;
And old mem'ries come to me like voices calling;
For I'm dreaming of my Oklahoma home.

How I long to see again that old brown cabin,
Though now its roof is falling to decay.
And my sweetheart wife has gone from me forever,
But her mem'ry still grows dearer day by day.
In a grave she sleeps beneath the waving prairie,
As o'er it gently falls the summer rain,
The birds are ever singing songs of sorrow,
'Round my Oklahoma home out on the plain.

Mr. GORE. It is also my desire to have printed in the RECORD at this point a statistical statement showing the extent of soil erosion in the States situated in the great plains country.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a public document 10,000 copies of hearings on the subject of soil and water conservation, held in 1914 under my direction when I was Chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] being chairman of the subcommittee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request of the Senator from Oklahoma will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

FLIGHT OF THE "PAN AMERICAN CLIPPER" TO HONOLULU

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I desire briefly to submit a few observations relative to a great feat which has just been performed by American airmen. Those who are in the Chamber at this time doubtless read with unusual interest a few days ago that one of the master clipper ships of the Pan American Air Lines, flying from California to Honolulu over one of the largest stretches of open waters of the world, approximately 2,400 miles, made the trip in something like 17 hours and 45 minutes, thus lowering the record, which had been made in January of 1934 by an American air squadron, by something like 8 hours. The whole world looked to that flight, and I am confident that the nations of continental Europe, particularly France and Germany, were envious of this record trial trip by American-developed aircraft, because it is generally known that both Germany and France, as well as other countries across the seas, are vying with one another to establish air trade routes to every single section of the world, and particularly from the Continent of Europe to South America.

In that connection I desire to read a press report, dated April 8, Paris, France, as follows:

GRAF AND PLANE RACING ATLANTIC—BOTH LEFT EUROPE SATURDAY; NOW ARE NEARING OR OVER BRAZIL

PARIS, April 8.—Racing Germany's Graf Zeppelin across the South Atlantic, the French mail plane Santos Dumont left Dakar, West Africa, at 4 o'clock this morning with a load of Paris mail for South America.

The Graf Zeppelin, which left Friedrichshafen Saturday evening, was somewhere in vicinity of the Canary Islands, proceeding to Rio de Janeiro, where it was scheduled to arrive Tuesday evening.

The Santos Dumont, big French flying boat, picked up mail which left Paris shortly after midnight Saturday and arrived at Dakar at 1:45 a. m. this morning, taking off soon afterward for Natal, Brazil, en route to Rio. She was scheduled to reach Natal tonight.

Intense rivalry between Germany and France for air service supremacy on the South Atlantic was symbolized by the speeding craft.

The German Luft Hansa Line is planning a new service, beginning Saturday, by which it is hoped to connect Berlin and Rio de Janeiro in 72 hours.

The French also are testing a new metal giant passenger machine designed for the South American and later for a trans-Atlantic-North American service. This plane, capable of carrying 76 passengers, would take 30 on transoceanic flights.

This machine, weighing from 32 to 37 tons, is 104 feet long, has a wing spread of 162 feet, and stands 30 feet high. Housed in its metal fuselage are 12 de luxe cabins as large as those on trans-Atlantic liners, each with two beds and a private bath. Three years in building, it cost 25,000,000 francs (currently about $1,650,000). Its cruising speed is 145 miles an hour.

I understand that the clipper which made the record flight, with Americans at the controls, weighed something like 17 tons, and that it is capable of carrying a large number of passengers and a great quantity of mail. Of course, the trip which was made was an initial one, for the purpose of gathering actual experience and information of benefit to those who will pilot the ships in the future not only from the shores of America to Honolulu but to Midway, thence to the Philippines, and from there to Hong Kong and Canton.

In this connection I desire to read a statement which was made before a subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs day before yesterday by one whose name is familiar to all Members of the Senate. I refer to Gen. William Mitchell, formerly of the Air Corps of the United States Army. In that statement he said that America should give encouragement to the air lines of this country which were attempting to establish airplane connection with all parts of the world.

The first forward step in this direction was made by Pan American Airways when they established lines from American shores to Cuba, Nassau, Haiti, San Domingo, the Virgin Islands, Trinidad, Venezuela, Colombia, Panama, Spanish Honduras, British Honduras, Salvador, Costa Rico, Guatemala, Yucatan, Veracruz, and Mexico City.

The Pan American Line is now expanding into the Orient, and when it shall be completed we can well congratulate ourselves upon the fact that our American lines, from a commercial standpoint, are vying successfully with those of all the other countries of the world, and that, as a matter of fact, we have succeeded in the effort that the foresighted people of this country have made. General Mitchell, in his testimony before the subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs, observed:

> We know that with aircraft we can go anywhere. There is no question about it whatever, and we have never tackled a thing yet that we have not gone through with it, because we had a group of men at one time that knew this game and they could devise things to meet it. We had civilians working with us, and we had a great hook-up in this country, but that has all been scattered to the four winds, and I do not know that you can pick it up again in years, and the longer you put it off the worse you will be. The only ray of hope here now is to extend these commercial lines everywhere. They ought to be pushed just as hard as we can push them * * * to all parts of the world. The competition now is to get air lines all over the world, just the same as it was by the steamship lines in the middle of the last century. It is very important * * * because the trade always follows your means of transportation, and that is the way you have got to have foreign trade, and that is the way you transport your goods and your people that sell them and your materials, etc.
> We were blocked off the sea after the War between the States by Great Britain, that could construct ships of her own better than we could. Now we have this priceless asset in this country: We can construct aircraft better than anybody if they let us; we have got better means of doing it; we have got all the raw materials and we should dominate the world in the air. * * * Our interests in this country and our means of doing business, the extension of these civil air lines has been very good.

In connection with the flight of the large 17-ton clipper of the Pan American Line, which lessened the time between San Francisco and Honolulu by 8 hours by plane and approximately 4 days by boat, I desire at this time to bring to the attention of the Senate a clipping which I cut from the New York Times of Thursday, April 18, relative to statements made in the form of praise and congratulations by the Honorable James A. Farley, Postmaster General of the United States, and others, reading as follows:

[From the New York Times]

FARLEY PRAISES FLIGHT

WASHINGTON, April 17.—Praising the successful flight of the Pan American Airways clipper ship to Hawaii, Postmaster General Farley sent messages of congratulation today to the operators and to the commander of the flying boat.

To Juan T. Trippe, president of Pan American Airways, New York City, he telegraphed as follows:

"I wish to most heartily congratulate you on the successful flight of your large clipper ship from Alameda, Calif., to Honolulu, Hawaii, which is the initial flight in your proposed trans-Pacific service. I feel sure that Americans generally are thrilled with pride at this accomplishment of an American air transport company and that it is but the forerunner of successful operations on a complete trans-Pacific service."

The Postmaster General sent this message to Capt. Edwin C. Musick at Honolulu:

"Congratulations to you and your crew on behalf of myself and the Post Office Department."

Representative BRUNNER, of New York, sent the following telegram to Mr. Trippe:

"Congratulations on the splendid flight of your clipper and the manner of making it. It indicates that the problem of navigation of the Pacific by air has been scientifically conquered."

SAMUEL W. KING, Delegate to Congress from Hawaii, said in a message:

"For over 100 years Hawaii and California have been joined by a bridge—first of sailing vessels, then steamers, and now by clipper ships of the air. All credit to Pan American for bringing Hawaii as near to California as is New York. We of the islands look forward to the closer linking of our Territory to the mainland."

Senator WILLIAM G. MCADOO, president of the National Aeronautic Association, an outstanding figure in the world of aviation, who has flown in his own plane across the continent from his home in California to Washington and return many times, who has traveled by commercial air lines wherever they have been established in many parts of the world, who realizes and appreciates the immense commercial value to the United States of such a network of airways, and who has contributed generously of his time and thought to the development and expansion of commercial airways on account of his patriotic interest in American commerce and national defense, sent a telegram to the commander of the Pan American clipper when it was about to take off from the Alameda Airport, Calif., for Hawaii reading:

EDWIN C. MUSICK,
Commander Pan American Clipper,
Alameda Airport, Alameda, Calif.:

On your take-off for the most notable attempts yet made in the history of aviation to conquer the vast Pacific and to demonstrate the feasibility of establishing regular air service between the United States and China I send greetings and warm wishes for success. I am confident that you will carry the American flag triumphantly in this great adventure and demonstrate anew the invincibility of genius, skill, and courage. Your success means a new advance in the unlimited field of commercial aviation with its certain complement of international good will.

W. G. MCADOO,
President National Aeronautic Association.

And after the ship had been smoothly and safely set down upon the blue waters of the harbor at Honolulu he dispatched to the commander a cable extending congratulations.

As good roads in this country, the arteries of modern civilization, have brought closer to the people school houses, libraries, churches, and markets, so have the air lines, now cobwebbing the hemisphere, brought closer together the peoples of the various nations of the world. I know of no other medium by which friendly relations may better be created with the peoples of other countries than by linking up the world by means of air lines. Let us hope that this linking up will be brought about and successfully accomplished by American lines in order that America may profit thereby.

As we know, the first international air line of any great mileage established was that to South America, which now reaches down the eastern coast to Argentina, then across to the western coast of South America, and northward to Mexico City and California. I have heard it stated on innumerable occasions by those residing in countries to the south of us, not only in Mexico and Central America but also in South American countries, that that line has been of great service toward promoting friendly relations and trade between the people of our great Republic and those residing to the south of us.

In conclusion, regarding the air mail transportation, which provides the merchants and the manufacturers and the distributors of our country advantages over those of some other countries which have not established similar lines, I should like to provide some simple and comprehensive information regarding what we may expect in the proposed air mail and passenger service soon to be provided by the Pan American Line from America to China respecting cost:

BREAK-DOWN OF AMOUNT REQUIRED FOR, AND ESTIMATE OF MAIL REVENUE FROM, PROPOSED CALIFORNIA-CHINA AIR MAIL SERVICE

MILEAGE INVOLVED

The direct air-line mileages, point to point, on the route from San Francisco to Canton, China, as furnished by the United States Naval Hydrographic Office on March 25, 1935, are as follows:

San Francisco to Honolulu	2,408.0
Honolulu to Midway	1,306.0
Midway to Wake	1,183.5
Wake to Guam	1,511.0
Guam to Manila	1,593.5
Manila to Canton	778.5
	8,780.5

COST

Based on the maximum mileage payment provided under the Foreign Air Mail Act, of $2 per mile, the maximum cost to the Government per round trip would be $35,122.

If once-a-week service were provided, this would involve a maximum cost for 12 months of $1,826,344.

If the low bid accepted on the advertisement for the service should be less than $2 a mile, or if the mail service for the fiscal year 1936 should not be commenced until after July 1, 1935, the amount required would be proportionately reduced, and such reduction would be turned back into the Treasury as an unexpended appropriation.

ESTIMATED MAIL REVENUE

According to figures given out by the Post Office Department on March 25, 1935, 7.76 percent of all the first-class mail transported to Latin America is transported by air at the fixed air-mail surcharge rates. This excepts Cuba and Mexico, of which no record is available, but, because of the fact that these countries carry lower air-mail rates than any other countries, the percentage figure of 7.76 percent would be higher if these countries were included.

The total annual first-class mail from the United States to the area to be served by the California-China route, averaged over the last 5-year period, is as shown in the table to follow. If the same percentage of these first-class mails across the Pacific should be carried by air as is carried in Latin America, approximately 59,000 pounds would be available outbound and, upon the basis of an air mail rate per half-ounce letter to the public of, say, 25 cents to the Hawaiian Islands, 50 cents to the Philippines, and 60 cents to China (which would yield approximately $10, $20, and $24 per pound of mail, respectively), this volume of air mail would yield the United States Government an annual revenue of approximately $1,156,000 on the outbound mail. Approximately the same revenue could be expected on the inbound air mail. The computation from which these conclusions are derived is shown in the table heretofore referred to.

I ask that the remainder of the memorandum, the table, be printed in the RECORD at this the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be inserted in the RECORD, as follows:

	Annual first-class mail outbound, 5-year average [1]	Percent first-class mail carried by air in Latin America [1]	Resultant pounds of air mail	Rate per pound	Estimated annual air mail revenue
Hawaii	[2] 193,740	7.76	15,034	$10	$150,340
Philippines	135,813	7.76	10,539	20	210,780
Guam	3,498	7.76	271	16	4,336
China and beyond	424,533	7.76	32,943	24	790,632
Total					1,156,088
Add estimated inbound air-mail revenue—approximated same as outbound					1,156,088
Total					2,312,176
Deduct maximum annual cost of service					1,826,344
Net profit to U. S. Government on above hypotheses					485,832

[1] Official figures of Post Office Department.
[2] 1934 figure—5-year average not available—would be higher.

Of course, it would not be expected that at the outset the people would be educated up to the use of the service to the point where the South American percentage would be reached. However, due to the fact that the percentage of business correspondence is higher in the Pacific mails than in the Latin American mails, and to the further fact that the proportionate time saving is greater, the ultimate percentage of first-class mail which would be carried by air on the Pacific route would be higher than on the Latin American routes. If such percentage should reach 10 percent, the Government's annual profit would be approximately $640,000, and if it went up to 12½ percent, the annual profit would be approximately $800,000.

PREVENTION OF SOIL EROSION

Mr. KING. Mr. President, Senators who had the privilege of listening to the impressive and eloquent address of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] must have been impressed with the importance of the question to which he addresses himself. The facts which he has presented conclusively demonstrate the importance of cooperation between the States and the National Government for the purpose of dealing with a problem Nation-wide in its effects. There are questions that are to be dealt with by the States alone, and there are matters which are interstate and, indeed, national in their scope which require cooperation between the sovereign States and the Federal Government. One of those questions relates to harbors and our inland waterways, and it is obvious that in dealing with the waterways of our country the States through which the streams and the rivers flow and the States which they drain are mutually interested in dealing with the problems which they develop.

As has been so well stated by the Senator, large areas of our country are annually being denuded of hundreds of millions of tons of soil, the greater portion of which ultimately finds its way into the rivers and streams, thus resulting in further problems connected with flood control. The winds which sweep over the land rob it of minerals which are essential to the healthy growth of agricultural crops. Little by little the soil is impoverished and the resultant crops materially diminished in quantity and affected in quality. Because of these enormous losses to the soil, the necessity for fertilizers is increasing, and no little part of the costs of farming today arises from the imperative need for fertilizers, the cost of which is a heavy tax upon the farmers.

It is evident that something must be done to protect the soil from wind and storm. The recent dust storms not only seriously endanger agricultural lands but they have impaired the health of hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of people who have lived within the areas which have been affected. Indeed it has been said that in nearly every part of this broad land the atmosphere has been impregnated with the infinitesimally small particles of earth which have been carried, in many instances, thousands of miles.

Intimately associated with the question of protecting the lands against soil erosion is the question of reforestation and afforestation and the revegetation of vast areas in many parts of our country. I think that we must confess to a serious dereliction in failing to protect our forests and preserve our timber supplies and to provide for reforesting particularly in those sections where the hand of man has wrought such devastation.

We often read of ghost cities found in mining States where, after the mines are exhausted, thousands of people silently departed seeking homes and fortune in other parts of the land. If one travels through the mining regions of the West, he will see some of these ghost cities—places where a few years ago there were thousands of people, hundreds of homes, business houses, and great activity in business, trade, and commerce. In other parts of the United States there are ghost cities and the ruins and the remains of prosperous and progressive communities, the inhabitants of which depended upon the timber and the lumber business. With the destruction of the great forests which furnished employment to hundreds of thousands of people, homes were abandoned and cities and towns fell into ruin and decay. The destruction of timber brought about also, in many places, the destruction of the underbrush and grasses and vegetation—scant though it was, that found refuge and protection under the foliage of the trees.

There has been a lack of appreciation upon the part of the people of the disastrous effects that follow the destruction of forests and the removal of trees. It is time that we were aroused to the evils following the unrestricted destruction of the timber resources of our country. I repeat there should be cooperation between the Federal Government and the States for the protection of our timber supplies and for the adoption of a consistent and comprehensive policy that will result in reforestation in all that that term implies.

There has been too much breaking of the soil in the so-called "prairie and Western States", and too little concern for the consequences that would result from the unwise and unsound use of the great plains and valleys in the central and western part of the United States.

Large areas of our country were peculiarly adapted for wild grasses and grazing purposes, but millions of acres were plowed under. The texture of the soil was broken up and by reason of the work done upon the same by the agriculturists, it was flung to the winds that swept over the land and millions of tons were carried over the land and deposited in distant parts of our country. With the destruction of the trees and the plowing under of large areas of territory, the problem of soil erosion became more acute and of vital importance. We are now reaping the fruits of mistake, if not follies, and must adopt measures that will retrieve, as far as it is possible, the mistakes of the past.

May I refer to a number of trips which I made (a few years ago) through southeastern Europe and particularly through Asia Minor, Syria, and Palestine. A few centuries before the Christian Era and indeed for several centuries thereafter there were millions of people inhabiting what we call Asia Minor, Syria, and Palestine. My recollection is that Josephus, the historian, stated that the inhabitants of Palestine in his day numbered approximately five or six millions of people. We read of the forests of Palestine, the Cedars of Lebanon, of fertile fields and of the rich products of the soil. When I was there a few years ago the situation was vastly different from that of which history gives us record during the period to which I have just referred.

There were not more than six or seven hundred thousand inhabitants of Palestine, most of the lands were barren, the hills and mountains had been largely denuded of their vegetation, and their glistening rocks reflected the burning rays of the sun. That was true likewise of Syria. In Asia Minor in the days when Paul lifted his voice in proclaiming the faith which he espoused, there were perhaps fifteen or twenty millions of people. Large cities were founded with great temples and evidences of a high degree of culture and civilization. The valleys were productive and yielded abundantly in response to the efforts of the husbandman. In 1926 I traveled over a large part of Asia Minor. I visited sections where there had been cities and millions of inhabitants. A great change had taken place. Many of the valleys were barren and devoid of vegetation.

The hills and the mountains had been stripped of their trees and vegetation, and wandering shepherds, rather limited in number, sought as they wandered over arid lands, food for their diminished herds. When the trees and vegetation were destroyed and the rains fell, the soil was stripped from the mountains and the hills and carried into the lower regions where fetid swamps were developed. Perhaps not more than five or six million people occupied a territory which formerly supplied homes to fifteen or twenty millions of inhabitants.

Timbers, trees, and forests are needed not only for utilitarian purposes but they are vital in their effects upon climatic conditions. It is common now to speak of becoming "air-minded" or of "peace-minded." May I say that it is important that we become "forest minded" and "timber minded" in the sense that we must be aroused to the importance of protecting the limited timber supply which we have and giving attention to denuded lands which call for reforestation.

In 1916 and 1917 Senator Newlands occupied a seat in this Chamber. He was one of the ablest statesmen of his time, and he gave a great deal of attention to the question of protecting and preserving the public domain, protecting flood control, developing our inland waterways as well as our harbors. Perhaps no one in the United States was as familiar with these problems as he. May I add that it was he that took the leadership in giving to our country the Reclamation Act, which is called by many, and should be by all, the Newlands Act. I had the pleasure and the privilege of conferring with him frequently when he was preparing a measure which called for the creation of a commission to have charge of waterways, rivers, harbors, protection of flood control, and generally the protection of the timber supplies of the United States.

President Wilson was profoundly interested in the plan and intended to carry it forward to a successful conclusion. Unfortunately the World War frustrated the plan and shortly thereafter the great Senator from Nevada passed from our midst. It was a great plan which he and President Wilson conceived. I am not sure that it should not be revived. At any rate, and I repeat, the problems of reforestation, flood control, and soil erosion are so intimately associated, that they should be dealt with in a constructive, and, if I may use the expression, "coordinate and composite way." I believe that a conference between the States and the Federal Government could devise a program that could deal with these vital questions in a manner that would be satisfactory and would assure the highest and most beneficial results. However, that question is not before us. Today we are dealing with but a segment of the circle, a part of a great problem which sooner or later must command our attention and be worked out in all its details and consistent with the best interests of our country and the welfare of its people.

I am glad that the question of soil erosion has recently been again brought to the attention of the Government and the people. The Secretary of the Interior, notwithstanding the important duties resting upon him, found time to devote to this problem; and more than a year ago laid the foundation of a plan which if carried into effect would undoubtedly bring most important reslults. As Senators know, the Department of the Interior has charge of all public lands. There are tens of millions of acres, mineral and agricultural, that constitute a part of the public domain. Large areas of the public lands have been set apart as national parks, and still larger areas hve been carved out of the public lands and placed within forest reserves. It is true the forest reserves were placed years ago under the control of the Department of Agriculture. I might add in passing that this policy has some irreconcilabilities, if I may use that expression, and certainly some incongruities. Titles to public lands must come from the Department of the Interior.

Surveys of the public domain are made under the direction of the Department of the Interior; the mineral lands are controlled by the Department of the Interior, and, as stated, the tens of millions of acres of public domain are under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior. From many of these public lands streams flow carrying annually millions of tons of soil. The Colorado River lies in the public-land States and it carries annually enormous quantities of soil down to the Gulf of Mexico. The Government is spending tens of millions of dollars for the construction of Boulder Dam. The streams that flow into and through the Boulder Dam rise in the States of New Mexico, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, and Nevada. They carry millions of tons of soil annually. It is important that soil erosion be prevented lest the capacity of the Boulder Dam be somewhat reduced.

The Missouri River and other great streams that flow into the Mississippi River arise within and are fed by waters flowing from public-land States. The Senator from Oklahoma has referred to these rivers that carry enormous quantities of soil from the land out into the sea. It has seemed to me that the soil-erosion agency should be under the control of the Department of the Interior. However, a different plan seems to have been agreed upon, although I may say that there are many who take the view which I have expressed. The able Congressman from New Mexico, Mr. DEMPSEY, entertained this view and offered a bill in the House of Representatives which emphasized this position, and if it were the law would give jurisdiction of this important matter to the Department of the Interior.

Many of us have learned of the executive ability, the integrity, and the high sense of justice which have characterized the administration of Secretary Ickes. Without derogating in any degree from the ability of the officials in other departments, it may be said that the administration of the Soil Erosion Act by the Department of the Interior would inspire confidence and would meet the approval of many who are most familiar with this subject.

Mr. President, I appreciate how important it is to secure legislation dealing with soil erosion. There are persons who have been engaged in working out plans under the Secretary of the Interior, and I am advised that some at least will be permitted to carry forward the present plans, doubtless with some expansion, even though jurisdiction of this matter is transferred to another department of the Government. Notwithstanding this fact, I cannot help but believe that it is a mistake to place this matter in the hands of another department.

Mr. President, I have said all that I care to say. I now withdraw the motion heretofore submitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the motion is withdrawn.

FARMERS' HOME CORPORATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2367) to create the Farmers' Home Corporation, to promote more secure occupancy of farms and farm homes, to correct the economic instability resulting from some present forms of farm tenancy, to engage in rural rehabilitation, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, there are about 12 Senators absent who, I am advised, would like to be recorded on this bill. If an agreement limiting debate may be entered into, I know of no reason why the Senate should not take a recess until Monday. I am about to submit a request for unanimous consent.

I ask unanimous consent that after today, should the consideration of the present bill be not concluded, debate be limited so that no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon any amendment that may be pending or that may be offered.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I apprehend there is nothing in the proposed agreement which would interfere with a motion to recommit.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; I do not so understand.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not, either.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I desire to serve notice that on Monday I shall make a motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency. I make no objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas, provided the same restrictions which apply to the bill itself shall apply to debate on the recommittal of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; I think that is a proper suggestion. I modify the request so that the debate shall be limited to 15 minutes on the bill and 10 minutes on any amendment or motion that may be offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I desire to say that there are Senators who are not present at this time who are interested in such an agreement.

Mr. McNARY entered the Chamber.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from Oregon having entered the Chamber, I shall not proceed further.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I will state for the benefit of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], who has just come into the Chamber and with whom I had not the opportunity of conferring heretofore, that there are a number of Senators absent, perhaps 12, who would like to be recorded on this bill. I have asked unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its labors today it take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday, and that thereafter no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes on the bill, or more than once or longer than 10 minutes on any amendment or motion that may be pending or that may be offered.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have not had an opportunity to confer with the Members on this side of the aisle, but I am sure the limitation on general debate should be extended to 30 minutes. I know of one or two Senators who desire to speak, and I think they could not conclude their remarks within 15 minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I may suggest to the Senator from Oregon that the entire remainder of today is open for debate. The debate on the bill has proceeded in a somewhat leisurely fashion for several days. I do not feel like moving a recess until Monday if debate on the bill can now proceed, and if Senators desire to prolong the debate.

It seems to me the request I have made is a reasonable one. The entire remainder of today is open to debate if Senators wish to avail themselves of it; but I do not think Senators should absent themselves indefinitely from the Senate and then insist upon a prolongation of debate on a measure which has been pending as long as this one has.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the proposal of the Senator from Arkansas is reasonable, and yet it is susceptible of modification. If we are to recess, I think some consideration should be given to recessing early today.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is my intention to move a recess as soon as Senators indicate they have concluded the debate for the day. I do not wish to preclude any Senator from going on with the debate today if he wishes so to do, and I have been advised that one Senator would like to speak for a few minutes.

Mr. McNARY. I do not see anything unreasonable in extending the limit upon debate from 15 minutes to 30 minutes. No Senator is going to take advantage of an opportunity to extend the debate beyond the time actually necessary.

Mr. ROBINSON. But the point is, if the Senator pleases, that we are proposing to recess early on Friday over Saturday, and the debate may very well proceed if there is a necessity for lengthy debate. I do not wish to shut off debate. My object is to serve the convenience of Senators who have found it necessary to go away.

I submit the request, Mr. President.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have indicated in the best of good faith, and for substantial reasons, that I think the limitation should be 30 minutes. I am willing to agree that after 3 o'clock debate shall be limited to 15 minutes, but from 12 to 3 I think the limit should be 30 minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the measure shall not be sooner disposed of?

Mr. McNARY. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; I will modify my request to that effect.

I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its labors today it take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next; that after the meeting of the Senate at noon on Monday, and until the hour of 3 o'clock, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 30 minutes on the bill, or more than once or longer than 10 minutes on any amendment or any motion that may be pending or that may be offered; and that after the hour of 3 o'clock no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes on the bill, or more than once or longer than 10 minutes on any amendment or motion that may be pending or that may be offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, what would be the parliamentary status if the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] should make a motion to recommit and the motion should prevail?

Mr. ROBINSON. If the motion to recommit should prevail it would end the matter.

Mr. GORE. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that I desired to have the statement in the RECORD so that there would not be any doubt about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Oklahoma that the motion to recommit is embraced within the request of the Senator from Arkansas; and that motion would be subject to debate under the restriction proposed in the request of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. GORE. My assumption was that a motion to recommit, being a privileged motion, would prevail over any other order, even a unanimous-consent agreement; but I desired to get that statement in the RECORD.

Mr. ROBINSON. No, Mr. President; any motion that may be pending or that may be offered will be subject to a limitation of debate to 10 minutes. If the motion to recommit should be made at once, and should prevail, of course that would end the consideration of the bill for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the pending bill which I ask to have printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I offer four amendments to the pending bill, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the National Committee on Small-Farm Ownership is meeting in Washington today, and I have just been furnished with copy of a resolution adopted by the committee. I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD the names of the members of the committee, together with the resolution which they have adopted.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NATIONAL COMMITTEE ON SMALL-FARM OWNERSHIP

Mr. George Foster Peabody, chairman; Dr. W. W. Alexander, director, Commission on Interracial Cooperation; Rev. W. Howard Bishop, past president the National Catholic Rural Life Conference; Dr. Edwin R. Embree, president Julius Rosenwald Fund, Dr. Ivan Lee Holt, Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America; Mr. William Green, American Federation of Labor; Dr. Charles S. Johnson, director department of social science, Fisk University; Mr. F. E. STATEMENT ON THE BANKHEAD FARM-TENANCY BILL BY THE NATIONAL COMMITTEE ON SMALL-FARM OWNERSHIP

No greater problem confronts our rural community than the persistent growth of farm tenancy. Nearly one-half of all our farmers are now tilling land owned by others, and if the present tendency toward converting the independent farmer into a dependent and propertyless tenant continues, then we must abandon hope of achieving a stable and progressive rural civilization. No satisfactory rural community can be either developed or maintained on a tenancy basis. In eight of our States farm tenants represent more than 60 percent of all farm operators. Nor is the problem a sectional one. Ten of the Wheat and Corn Belt States show from one-third to one-half of the farms operated by tenants, and even in such Western States as Montana and Idaho one-fourth of the farm operators are tenants. Nor is the problem a racial one. There are three times as many white as Negro tenants in the United States, and even in the South there are twice as many white as colored farm tenants.

In view of all of these facts we consider the proposed bill for the gradual conversion of the tenant into a landowner as one of the most important and constructive pieces of legislation ever voted upon by the Congress of the United States, and the National Committee on Small-Farm Ownership takes this formal occasion to comend Senator BANKHEAD for bringing the problem of farm tenancy in the United States before the American Congress and expresses the hope that the bill which is now before the Senate will be adopted. If passed, it will make possible the growth of a secure and prosperous rural community that owns the land it tills and that can develop to the fullest its share of the great American heritage.

LIQUIDATION OF CLOSED BANKS

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed to me by Representative McLEOD, of Michigan, in reply to a letter from the Comptroller of the Currency, which was printed in the RECORD some days ago.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., April 15, 1935.

Hon. JAMES F. BYRNES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR BYRNES: My attention has been called to certain statements by Mr. J. F. T. O'Connor, Comptroller of the Currency, which, together with an article appearing in a Detroit newspaper, were inserted by you in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 9.

In his statement Mr. O'Connor charges me with grossly misrepresenting facts in a statement to the press. This attack was inspired by a resolution of inquiry I introduced in the House calling for certain information which has been withheld concerning liquidation of closed banks.

Such attacks can be answered by Members of Congress in many ways and I have considered the methods which would appeal to the fair play and sense of justice for which you are noted. For that reason I am writing you this letter in answer to that which you placed in the RECORD, and I am asking that you give it the same treatment which you accorded Mr. O'Connor's, thus showing that your part in this controversy is entirely unprejudiced and unswayed by political motives.

In his letter Mr. O'Connor makes the first of 18 assaults upon my character by referring to an article in a Detroit newspaper with the remark that I "so misrepresented and misstated facts and figures that the article cannot go unanswered." It is, of course, unnecessary for me to say that this is absolutely false. Proof is contained in the facts I shall cite in reply to the 17 remaining baseless allegations.

Second, Mr. O'Connor states that I led a newspaper correspondent into an article which does not contain one correct paragraph, and then goes on to say that "the subheading 'McLEOD wants choice of receivers explained' is information which is available to everyone." Here the Comptroller again resorts to his favorite device of quibbling, as anyone who has every endeavored to obtain information from the office of the Comptroller of the Currency will know.

Third. Mr. O'Connor makes the statement that "evidently Congressman McLEOD seeks to condemn the Comptroller of the Currency because he retained in office two receivers who had been appointed by Republican Comptrollers." This remark has reference to the receivers of the closed banks in Detroit. Mr. O'Connor knows quite well that I have never directed any personal criticism against either of the receivers concerned with the two large Detroit banks, and that my objections to receiverships have been leveled entirely and consistently at the system itself and as a whole.

Fourth. Mr. O'Connor charges me with having deceived the newspaper correspondent by introducing an entirely different resolution from the one described in the newspaper article. A glance at the resolution as introduced will show conclusively that the information called for is the same as reported in the press. The resolution as introduced provided for furnishing the same information without the expense of an investigation, and it will easily be seen that certain unnecessary words were eliminated for the sake of brevity and to insure the resolution coming within the requirements of the House rules pertaining to privileged resolutions of inquiry.

Fifth. Mr. O'Connor states: "Much of this information Congressman McLEOD has already received, and he has never been denied any information that he has requested from the office of the Comptroller of the Currency." It is somewhat mild to term this statement merely untrue. His office refused, only a few weeks ago, to let me have information concerning liquidation expenses of closed national banks. During my efforts in the last Congress to secure the enactment of my bank depositors' pay-off bill, the Comptroller refused even to let me have the names of the national banks which were in the hands of receivers. He did finally let me know the numbers, by States, of the national banks which had closed.

Sixth. Mr. O'Connor goes on to state that I would require him to add a score or more employees to be paid out of depositors' funds in order to furnish detailed information in all of the more than 1,500 closed national banks. Still the House Banking and Currency Committee, in its Report No. 630, states that the Comptroller agreed to supply this information, and same will be available in the annual report of the Comptroller, which is now said to be in the Government Printing Office. If this is true, Mr. O'Connor must now have the information and must already have spent enough of the depositors' funds to obtain it. It would appear that Mr. O'Connor either misled the Banking and Currency Committee or is not aware of what is being done in his office.

Seventh. Mr. O'Connor mentions that if I would take the trouble to look in his annual report, I would find a long list of data pertaining to closed banks. I am perfectly familiar with the type of information which satisfies a "banking expert" such as Mr. O'Connor. My resolution of inquiry, however, calls for information which would tell the bank depositors what is being done with their money.

Eighth. Mr. O'Connor states that "each receiver makes a quarterly report showing receipts and disbursements in his particular trust, and this report is posted in his bank and is available to every one of the depositors." What Mr. O'Connor neglects to say is that this information has been refused me on more than one occasion by his office and that, furthermore, his office has declined to give me even the names of the closed national banks still in the hands of receivers.

Ninth. The Comptroller charges that the facts concerning receivership costs were twisted in order to color the statement. I only wish it were possible to paint the costs of receiverships in bright hues, but the truth is, that with some few exceptions, these costs are an ever darkening cloud upon the horizon of the victimized bank depositors. The fact cannot be overlooked that the mere expenses incurred by the receivers do not comprise the total loss to depositors because of present liquidation methods. Only abolition of the existing receivership system and its replacement by the R. F. C. as a long-term liquidating agency can cut liquidating costs to the minimum depositors have every right to expect.

Tenth. He criticizes and distorts the data relating to the Bain banks, a group of State banks in the State of Illinois, whose liquidation costs have been unreasonably excessive. Mr. O'Connor objects to the mention of these banks on the ground that such data are irrelevant, and intimates that banks of this type could not come under the provisions of my bill to abolish receiverships, H. R. 2847. Evidently he has never read my bill, for if he had done so, he would know that the bill calls for abolition of receiverships by having the R. F. C. purchase all their remaining assets which have a value. Of course, he may be laboring under the misapprehension that a receiver could still operate without a bank or without any assets to liquidate.

Eleventh. He asserts "Not satisfied with giving misinformation, Congressman McLEOD then resorts to rumors" concerning legal fees paid attorneys for the receivers of banks in Detroit. He further states "the positively false rumor was never inquired into by Congressman McLEOD, but was given free circulation." This is a malicious distortion of the facts. Mr. O'Connor cannot help knowing that the very rumors of this which appeared in the daily papers, formed one of the reasons for the introduction of my resolution. This rumor owed its origin in large part to the cloak of secrecy imposed by Mr. O'Connor which my resolution was aimed to dispel, and on April 12 Mr. O'Connor was forced to admit publicly, in a letter to a member of the House Banking and Currency Committee, that the rumors were to a large extent true, when he disclosed that one partial and incomplete bill submitted by the attorney for the receiver of a closed bank in Detroit amounted to $165,000 for just 10 of the more than 24 months in which he has represented the receivership.

Twelfth. Mr. O'Connor goes on to say, "Congressman McLEOD is quoted as saying that receivers are public servants paid from funds of the depositors. This is as nearly accurate a statement as anyone who knows the Congressman would expect him to make." This statement is, of course, merely another expression of personal vindictiveness on his part. Following this, he intimates that the more than 10,000,000 depositors whose funds are still tied up in closed banks are too few in number to be classed as a part of the public.

Thirteenth. Mr. O'Connor states that "The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is a large creditor in most of the receivership banks and Congressman McLEOD would place the Corporation in the embarrassing position of being a trustee for the other creditors, and in some instances the Corporation might be compelled to bring action against itself." Apparently the difficulties which Mr. O'Connor conjures up have not occurred to the experts of the R. F. C., who have assured me that they are in a proper position to liquidate these banks.

In his next three statements Mr. O'Connor exercises his remarkable legerdemain by attributing to me expressions which, it is apparent to any intelligent person reading the article in question, were not made by me. Mr. O'Connor obviously is not contented with distorting what I have said, but is so determined to defend himself that he imagines other attacks in order to arise to his own defense.

In the seventeenth instance Mr. O'Connor endeavors to place me in the false light of one who uses his official position to seek private gain by stating that the law firm with which I am associated received $11,924 as attorney's fees for receiverships of three closed banks. Commenting editorially on Mr. O'Connor's criticism, the Detroit News summed up the issues in two questions: 1. Did Mr. McLEOD use his influence to get employment for his law firm? and 2. Did he profit by his law firm having the employment? My reply, which was carried in a following Detroit News editorial, is as follows:

1. "I recommended to the Comptroller of the Currency, as highly qualified, the law firm which includes my name, due primarily to the fact that Arthur Fixel and Rowland Fixel over a long period of years have had experience in bankruptcy proceedings. This is and has been their specialty. I qualify this by stating that I have been informed by Mr. Rowland Fixel, of this firm, that legal opinions drafted by him, at the request of the Comptroller's representative, Mr. Hatch, have been sent throughout the country by the Comptroller's office for the guidance of receivers in national banks.

2. "The articles of partnership of this law firm will disclose that I could not in anywise participate in any fees whatsoever which might come to this law firm because of their handling of any legal matters pertaining to the Federal Government or its affairs, and the books of the law firm will show that I have not participated in any such fees."

Mr. O'Connor has been in direct charge of liquidation of closed national banks for the past 2 years. He is, and has been, in a position to know that the services rendered by this particular firm have been entirely satisfactory. In these three small banks, which are grouped together under but one receiver, the attorney's fees paid since the original assignment back in 1931 would average only $1,050 yearly per bank, and the total amount of fees is $9,800 instead of $11,924, as asserted by Mr. O'Connor. This firm is proud of the fact that they were able to save the depositors of these banks so much money by handling the legal affairs of the receiverships so economically.

Mr. O'Connor's hysteria, always apparent when he is questioned, rises to a crescendo toward the conclusion of his statement, which includes this choice bit: "If the article was intended by Mr. McLEOD to further unrest and to give encouragement to those who would destroy all forms of representative government, it will in a measure serve that purpose."

Mr. O'Connor is, to my mind, an expert on the destruction of "all forms of representative government." Citizens of a republic become readily disgusted when officials refuse to, or are unable to, answer with sanity to the public for their public acts. Until Mr. O'Connor realizes that he is occupying a public office and that he is answerable to the public for his conduct of that office, he will continue to foment the discontent which he already sees arising.

While this last effort on the part of Mr. O'Connor is a resort to calumniation of the worst sort, it is quite in keeping with the tenor of the other groundless and perfidious statements which have emanated from Mr. O'Connor concerning my efforts to obtain the enactment of legislation that would provide the maximum possible amount of relief for depositors of receivership banks.

I repeat to you, Senator, the assurances of my regard and my confidence that you will give this regrettably long letter the same treatment which you accorded that of Mr. O'Connor.

Very sincerely yours,

CLARENCE J. MCLEOD,
Member of Congress.

UNEMPLOYMENT CENSUS

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the injection into today's discussion of other subjects than the pending bill leads me to refer to certain reports in the press of yesterday and today to the effect that the President, acting on the advice of the Secretary of Commerce, expects to utilize part of the funds appropriated in the relief and work-relief joint resolution for an unemployment census. If so, it should be said that the President of the United States, the Secretary of Commerce, and the country are alike to be congratulated.

On February 28, after conference with the Secretary of Commerce and representatives of the Census Bureau, I introduced a bill (S. 2104) particularly intended to hasten such an unemployment census, as part of a population census, to be taken during the present calendar year.

An unemployment census is needed. Generally, but without sufficient proof, it has been assumed that the figures on unemployment now frequently used in public discussions and the press are reasonably accurate. It has been popularly taken for granted that one of the early measures introduced by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] calling for information on unemployment, which became law under President Hoover, meets the demand for precise information. This has not been the case, because that law calls mainly for deductions by the Labor Department from certain basic facts, and those basic facts have themselves undergone a great change since the last census. The results have been surprising. We have seen variations in unemployment figures for the United States running from one to two millions or more, offered for the same period by governmental and nongovernmental agencies, alike supposed to be reasonably dependable.

Now that the Federal Government has enacted the largest peace-time appropriation in history for combined relief and work relief, and is considering social-security legislation, there can no longer be any question of the value of more dependable Nation-wide information about the extent and nature of employment and unemployment, changes in population from State to State and from city to city, and resulting human need. Indeed, the importance of a new census has been such that high officials in Washington early in the session urged the Director of the Bureau of the Budget to approve it.

Few citizens realize how defective is much of our present knowledge of fundamental facts about population and unemployment. As already suggested, our present conclusions are based on inferences from old figures. Yet since 1930 there have been great and unrecorded shifts in population from city to city, State to State, and city to country. Birth rates, taking the country as a whole, have been declining rapidly. Large numbers of people have joined the ranks of transients, moving from place to place in search of work and new homes. Immigration has largely ceased. Such claims as declining death rates in large cities like New York are perhaps exaggerated because they are based on the assumption that the population in such cities since 1930 has remained the same, whereas most indications are that the numbers of people in such cities have become substantially less.

Under such circumstances, it is difficult to know or foresee as accurately as formerly the best locations for new business undertakings in relation to consumers markets and in the field of Government activities, the needs for new municipal conveniences and necessities, school facilities, and aids to large groups of distressed citizens in cities and country whose plight cannot be ignored. In a word, national planning either for individual welfare or industrial or agricultural policy is seriously handicapped by the lack of such information as can only be secured through a new census. If it be said that changes in employment are very rapid, and that any new census will soon be out of date, the answer is that it is no longer safe to base calculations on 1930 figures, and that for several years hereafter reasonable inferences may be drawn by the Labor Department and the public from the facts tabulated in 1935. This, however, as shown is only one of many reasons for such a census in the fifth year after the former census.

The reported action of the President will serve the useful purpose of directing public attention to this important subject. The hour has arrived for ceasing to found our inferences on underlying facts which everyone knows have suffered unprecedented changes.

Mr. President, concluding these remarks, I request that the bill heretofore introduced by me may be incorporated in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill to provide for a census of unemployment, occupations, and population

Be it enacted, etc., That to provide information concerning the numbers, classes, and geographical distributions of persons unemployed and part-time employed and their dependents, and concerning employment and occupations, to aid in determining the formulation of a program of the nature and extent of needed legislation for unemployment relief, the Director of the Census shall take within 8 months from the passage of this act a census of unemployment, employment, and occupations in the 48 States and the District of Columbia: Provided, That such census may include such enumerations of population as the Director of the Census may deem appropriate and necessary for the purpose of this section.

SEC. 2. All of the provisions in the act providing for the fifteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, approved June 18, 1929 (46 Stat. 21; U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 13, ch. 4), shall, so far as not inapplicable, apply to the taking of the census provided for in section 1 of this act. In applying such provisions the period from the date of enactment of this act until the completion of such census, and all reports and publications relating thereto, shall be deemed to be a decennial census period. Temporary personnel in the District of Columbia, employed to carry out the provisions of this act, may be allowed leave of absence with pay at a rate of 1¼ days per month.

SEC. 3. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act during the decennial census period provided in section 2 of this act, there is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $13,250,000. Amounts so made available shall remain available until expended.

PREVENTION OF LYNCHING

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, a few moments ago the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] submitted for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a resolution of the American Federation of Labor, adopted at a recent convention, approving the antilynching bill, to which the Senator from New York and I have given particular attention. Two or three days ago there was some preliminary discussion in the Senate of this measure, which we hope to have made during the coming week, the next order of business of the Senate.

No one, I trust, cherishes more devotedly than myself the noblest traditions of the South and the right of the South to be heard upon questions it considers of special concern to the South is fully acknowledged.

As stated by me the other day, it is my personal judgment that the antilynching bill deals with a national evil, and is in no controlling sense local or sectional. Whatever view is correct, I ask leave to incorporate in the RECORD, following these remarks, certain telegrams received by me within the last 2 or 3 days from representative citizens, both men and women, of Southern States; also certain editorials favorable to the proposed antilynching legislation and published in well-known newspapers within recent months in many leading Southern States of the Union.

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FLORENCE, S. C., April 19, 1935.

Senator COSTIGAN:

Two hundred delegates in session at missionary conference in Bishopville voted unanimously on the following declaration: We declare lynching is an indefensible crime, destructive of all principles of government, hateful and hostile to every ideal of religion and humanity. We want this crime outlawed.

[From the Chattanooga (Tenn.) News of Apr. 5, 1935]

LYNCHING MUST STOP

For quite a number of years a large section of southern leadership has been viewing with increasing concern the tragedy of lynching in these Southern States. A number of earnest efforts have been made to arouse sober southern concern about this evil and to cause the States themselves to instrument in an effective fashion the machinery both for preventing mob violence and, when it occurs, for insuring the punishment of those guilty of this heinous crime against an ordered society.

Progress along these lines, however, remains fearfully slow and disappointing. Commissions study the background of the situation, remedial State statutes are suggested and urged, but the inertia of legislative indifference all too often prevents anything being done. Thus, year after year the South has repetitions of lynching terrors. There was the outbreak at Sherman, Tex., which ended with men burned to death and courthouse destroyed. Ocilla, Cartersville, and Ailey, in Georgia, added to the shameful record. A lynch-bent mob at Shelbyville, Tenn., destroyed a courthouse. A gruesome scene at Marianna, Fla., lingers in the memory as an exhibition of the sadistic depths to which bloodthirsty mobs will sink.

With such a record, and with the tardiness of successful implementation of local legal machinery for its correction, it is little wonder that for some years important groups all over the Nation have been urging Federal antilynching legislation. In the present Congress, Senator WAGNER and Senator COSTIGAN, both stanch Democrats of excellent record, have sponsored a bill which would permit the Federal Government, when local government does not act, to take a hand in the apprehension of the wreakers of lynch law.

The South has been opposed traditionally to Federal interposition in any type of racial relationship. The historical background behind this feeling makes it altogether understandable. Southern suspicion of Federal legislation is a legacy of the age of hate succeeding the Civil War. Its direct progenitors were the clamant radicals of Reconstruction. These men's experience had been one of inflammatory agitation; their war cries were of destruction. They were sophomoric in any technique of evolutionary social readjustment; had no conception of the need for cushioning the dislocations of social change.

At any event, they assumed that, by legislation passed in Washington, millions of ignorant freedmen could be made the rulers of the great white majority of the Southern States. Due to them, the fifteenth amendment was added to the Federal Constitution, the so-called "civil rights amendment", and efforts were made by the Congress to implement it so as to set up not a workable relation in the post-Appomatox South but a hierarchy of carpetbag scalawag control. When such measures were brought before the Supreme Court of the United States, they were not sustained. In the nineties similar efforts were made, largely under the leadership of Henry Cabot Lodge, of Massachusetts. These were bitterly resented by the southern leadership and were defeated by filibuster.

These particular animosities, however, have happily disappeared. No longer is the North represented in the Congress by a group of hate-filled radicals anxious to put the bottom rail on top. The North is now represented in the Congress by Members who are the grandsons and often great-grandsons of the generation which was represented by the bloody shirt of the Thaddeus Stevens-Charles Sumner-Zach Chandler-Ben Wade group. Certainly, no charge of animus or bitterness against the South can be brought against either Senator WAGNER or Senator COSTIGAN. The Federal antilynching machinery they have brought forward has no such animosity back of it as the Lodge force bills.

Changing, too, is the attitude of a large section of the South, as is shown by the offering of many leading southern newspapers. For example, the Macon Telegraph, one of the most forceful journals of the cotton South, in a recent discussion of the Wagner-Costigan bill, indicated that in its opinion "public sentiment in the South has about crystallized into the feeling that only by Federal intervention can we ever hope to wipe out lynching." To this it added:

"There will be a certain amount of opposition to this bill here in the South, but it is a fair question to ask: What else are we to do? Lynching goes on year after year, and punishment for the crime is practically unknown. One of the most revolting of these crimes was the latest to gain general attention, when a Florida mob near Marianna, after bringing the victim from an Alabama jail, where he had been taken for safe-keeping, sent out invitations in the morning to attend the lynching, which resolved itself into slow torture, with gruesome details hardly fit to be printed."

Members of that mob were well known to the officers of the law, who, indeed, might have prevented the lynching in the first place if they had cared to do so, and yet no one was ever punished, as no one in that State has ever been punished for such a crime, although, as the women of the State themselves point out, there have been 30 lynchings.

This brutality simply cannot go on. The States have had ample opportunity through the years to do something to prevent this barbaric crime. The time has come when something must be done, and the Federal antilynching bill appears to be the answer.

There is considerable merit to the statement of our Macon contemporary. Anyone studying the lynching record will agree that his brutality simply cannot go on. We ourselves have hoped for the instrumentation by the States themselves of legal machinery to put an end to the tragedy of lynching. But if the States themselves will not do it, and the Federal Government can fill this vacuum of efficient law enforcement, it would seem to us that there is no recourse but for a Federal agency to do so.

It is all important, of course, that the Federal legislation to be enacted will be of a character which can be expected to work. There would be no use whatever merely putting another unenforcible law upon the statute books. But if the States themselves will not act, and intelligent and effective Federal legislation can be provided, the evils involved are certainly grave enough to warrant the introduction of the Federal corrective.

EXCUSELESS SAVAGERY

A Mississippi mob lynches a Negro for killing a highway worker. It was no crime of lust or hate. The killer was simply drunk and having himself a time with a pistol, firing it promiscuously. The victim demanded that he stop firing, lest he hurt someone. So the Negro shot him.

In this unhappy event the apologist for lynch law will seek in vain for any element that might pardonably stir a community to a frenzy of vengeful indignation. Even the brother of the dead man counseled that the law take its course, and sent out messengers to intercept the mob. Mobs must act swiftly, else reviving sanity or decency will disintegrate them. This one lynched its victim in a school yard.

A few public lectures in that schoolyard would be timely. The teacher should trace for the audience the connection between a drunken Negro, careering about with a pistol, and white man's laws which permit anybody, criminal, moron, or lunatic, to buy and carry firearms. He might also be able to convince them that they have made themselves in some degree responsible for the present campaign to take the disciplining of lynchers away from States and give it to the Federal Government.

[From the El Paso (Tex.) Herald Post of Mar. 14, 1935]

DISEASE AND REMEDY

On Tuesday a Mississippi mob crossed the Tennessee line, captured Ab Young, a Negro, accused of fatally shooting a white laborer, placed him in a truck, and drove into a school yard. There they tied a rope around his neck, fastened the rope to a tree, and drove the truck from under the praying victim.

This was the third lynching since January 1, the other two being in Louisiana, a State that Senator LONG says knows how to prevent such crimes without help from the Federal Government. It is the second interstate lynching within a year, the other being the unspeakably savage killing of Claude Neal, in Florida, last October. It is the ninety-sixth lynching in the past 5 years.

The lynch evil is a cankerous social disease. Congress has a remedy, if not a cure. It is the antilynching bill, making such mob murders Federal offenses and holding counties financially liable for them.

On Tuesday the Senate Judiciary Committee put this measure squarely up to the Senate membership by voting unanimously to report it. Its authors, Senators COSTIGAN, of Colorado, and WAGNER, of New York, are determined to reach a vote early in the sessions to prevent a filibuster. Obstructive tactics by Southern Senators last session killed this same measure. By the same method the Dyer antilynching bill was killed in the Senate in 1920, after it had passed the House by a 2-to-1 vote.

The Costigan-Wagner bill is backed by organizations with membership of more than 40,000,000 citizens. President Roosevelt supported it by inference when he said in his message to Congress: "Crimes of organized banditry, cold-blooded shooting, lynching, and kidnaping have threatened our security."

The humble graves of more than 5,000 lynch-mob victims, killed in the past 50 years, testify that local communities are not coping with this evil. A Federal law will not cure the disease outright, but it will remedy it. Southern Senators will have much to answer for if they kill this measure again.

[From the Norfolk (Va.) Pilot of Feb. 16, 1935]

PASS THE ANTILYNCHING BILL

The country made no real headway against the scourge of kidnaping and high-pressure gangsterism that descended on it in recent years, until the Federal Government took a hand in the war. Logically, the punishment of these crimes was the exclusive business of the States. One after another the States failed to deal with these crimes effectively. Public opinion in all the afflicted States has approved the Federal intervention. Chiefly to this intervention we owe the fact that Al Capone is in jail instead of in business, that the Dillinger gang is extinct instead of a going concern, and that kidnapings and other atrocious crimes in great number have been punished instead of left unwhipped of justice.

The analogy between the racketeering that proved to be beyond the exterminating power of the States and the lynchings which equally defy State suppression, is not complete, for the two kinds of impotence derive from different causes. But it is close enough to warrant the belief that the same Federal intervention will produce measurably the same results.

To the Virginian-Pilot, which has in the past feared that the difficulties that would flow from a Federal antilynching law might outweigh its benefits, it no longer seems reasonable to entertain that view. It has become wholly illogical, it seems to us, to applaud the Federal Department of Justice for its effective pursuit of bank robbers, and at the same time to distrust a proposed Department of Justice pursuit of persons who, as members of orgiastic mobs, hang men to trees or burn them at the stake, without benefit of judge or jury.

No prompt eradication of the lynching infamy is to be expected from the enactment of the Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill, for the Federal law, like the present State laws against this crime, must depend for its effectiveness on the action of grand juries and the judgment of petit juries drawn from the environment of the crime and therefore reflecting its prevailing attitude. But one thing the Federal law may accomplish which seems beyond the power of the State laws—the termination of the attitude of indifference which immobilizes the law enforcement agencies in the presence of a typical lynching, and prevents them from making more than a cursory effort to track down and arraign the lynchers.

On the question of the constitutionality of the Wagner-Costigan bill we offer no opinion. That may be left to the courts. Its invasion of States rights should cause no southern heartburnings. There is no such thing, morally speaking, as a reserved right to deal in our own way with a form of collective murder which our own way has uniformly failed to punish.

[From the Houston (Tex.) Post, Feb. 16, 1935]

ANTILYNCHING LEGISLATION

The Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill, which is due to receive the approval of the Senate Judiciary Committee, is a measure with several strict provisions. Some of them are likely to meet with severe objection, but if the proposed law should be really put into operation it is safe to predict that lynchings would soon become few and far between.

The first objection to be raised to the bill, of course, is that it authorizes an invasion of the right of the State. A Federal antilynching law will be another step in Federal usurpation of State authority. Formerly, when such legislation was proposed, the South assumed that it was intended as a slap at this section. There is no warrant for such an assumption today. Lynching occurs at times in nearly all the States. It is not now a sectional evil.

Whatever protest the South raises against the Costigan-Wagner bill should be on the ground that it invades State's rights and that penalizing counties in which lynchings occur is an unsound provision, and not upon the ground that it is aimed particularly at the South.

Suppression of lynching is primarily a State function. The data on lynchings in the last few years reveal that far more lynchings have been prevented than occurred. That shows that local, and sometimes State officers, have done much to suppress lynching. The number of lynchings that were not allowed by officers to happen should be taken into consideration when discussion of State failure to eradicate lynching comes up.

Still, it is a fact that the States have not eradicated the evil of mob action. They have been particularly derelict in their duty of bringing lynchers to justice. In many cases officers foil mobs intent on seizing prisoners, but rarely, after a victim is done to death, are the perpetrators of the mob murder apprehended and punished.

The proposed Federal legislation would not only apply stiff penalties to officers who did not use due diligence in preventing lynchings but it would levy an indemnity on the county in which the lynching occurred. Whether the prospect that the county would have to pay off in case of a lynching would deter mobs in some cases is questionable.

This much is true: If this Congress enacts an antilynching statute, it will be because the States invited such action by their negligence in not stamping out mob outrages. Had the States made a practice of "cracking down" on mob murders after each lynching, there would have been no occasion for action at Washington.

[From the Roanoke (Va.) World of Feb. 16, 1935]

THE ANTILYNCHING BILL

The Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill, now being considered by the Senate Judiciary Committee, seems to be much less objectionable than the Dyer antilynching bill that passed the House of Representatives in 1922, but which did not come to a vote in the Senate. The subject has been before Congress in one form or another for the past 15 years, most of the bills having been offered for political effect, and having met vigorous opposition from advocates of State rights, who hold that it is no part of the duty of the Federal Government to interfere with the police administration of the States.

The bill offered by Senators COSTIGAN and WAGNER was reported favorably by the Judiciary Committee last year, but did not come to a vote in either branch of Congress. Following passage of the so-called "Lindbergh Act", which makes kidnaping a Federal offense if either the kidnaped person is carried across State lines or the ransom negotiations are carried on in another State, there has been a renewed demand for some act of Congress in regard to lynching. In his message to Congress, President Roosevelt said:

"Crimes of organized banditry, cold-blooded shooting, lynching, and kidnaping have threatened our security."

The pending bill provides that Federal courts shall have jurisdiction to try any member of a lynching mob, but only if States are lax in prosecution, or if jurors obtainable for service in a State court are manifestly opposed to punishment for the lynching. These two prerequisites are held automatically to exist if within 30 days after a mob offense no effort has been made to apprehend, indict, or prosecute the guilty parties. States have the first chance to act. It is only when they fail to act that the Federal courts may step in and take charge.

Any county or city in which mob violence occurs is made subject to a fine of from $2,000 to $10,000, to be paid to the injured person or his estate. Action to recover these damages is to be brought by the Federal Government. If more than one county is involved in a lynching, each is liable for damages. And any State employee or official who neglects his duty of protecting an individual against mob violence or neglects to prosecute persons guilty of such violence is made guilty of a felony. On conviction he may be fined up to $5,000 or imprisoned up to 5 years, or both.

The question of a fine to be imposed on a county in which a lynching takes place has occasioned the warmest debate, for it is argued that the decent, property-owning, tax-paying element in a county, that has no part in the work of a lynching mob, should not be penalized for its acts. The answer has been that, while this decent, property-owning, tax-paying element has had no actual part in the lynching, it has not in a number of instances insisted that the members of the mob be brought into court and convicted. In a number of instances sheriffs and Commonwealth's attorneys who failed in their duty at the time of a lynching have been reelected by the voters of this "decent" element that had no part in the lynching itself, but which by its subsequent actions condoned it.

The Costigan-Wagner bill undertakes to avoid the question of constitutionality by declaring that if any State or political subdivision fails to protect a person against mob violence, or to punish his attackers, such person shall be held to have been denied due process of law and equal protection of the laws as guaranteed by the Federal Constitution.

The evil of lynching is in the lawlessness it provokes—in the effect on the mob as much as on its victim. It is an attack on the law itself, and is an evidence of gross cowardice when an armed mob takes vengeance on an unarmed and defenseless prisoner. Yet many people opposed to lynching doubt the effectiveness of any Federal statute, or the advisability of Federal interference in State legal processes.

Probably more could be done to put an end to lynching if proper attention were given to revision of the procedure of criminal courts, to disbarment of shyster criminal lawyers, and to the securing of speedy justice without interminable delays and endless appeals. If the lynching mob was sure that the courts would act with promptness, and that legal tricks would not intervene to defeat the ends of justice, the last shred of argument for taking the law into its own hands would have vanished. More effective than any antilynching statute, State or Federal, would be a procedure under which those who commit crimes of violence would be called upon promptly and surely to pay the penalty.

[From the Knoxville (Tenn.) Sentinel of Feb. 15, 1935]

JUNGLE JUSTICE

The Hauptmann trial was not a demonstration of civilization at its best. It was at times a disgracefully cheap performance. But it was a trial, conducted in the open, under the rules of law protecting the rights of the accused before a jury of his peers.

Contrast with the Hauptmann trial the thing which the Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill seeks to abolish.

Hearings on the bill were opened yesterday before a Senate committee. Last year the committee reported this measure unanimously, but it was not allowed to come to a vote on the floor. This year it should be passed.

"No government pretending to be civilized can go on condoning such atrocities", H. L. Mencken told the committee, "either it must make every possible effort to put them down or it must suffer the scorn and contempt of Christendom."

[From the Newport News (Va.) Press of Feb. 15, 1935]

ANTILYNCHING LAW

The Senate Judiciary Subcommittee has begun hearings on the Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill. The measure lays down severe penalties for lynchings, officers who fail to do their duty against them, and counties where mobs take the law into their own hands. The bill, of course, will be vigorously opposed by a number of Southern States. But the chances are that it will be enacted into law—and when it is another phase of State's rights will have passed into discard.

But the Southern States which will protest the loudest against passage of the bill have no one but themselves to blame. They have been given every opportunity to make an end of lynching—and have spurned it. Hence the Federal Government is virtually forced to step in to maintain law and order.

Lynchings can be prevented where the people want them prevented. Virginia's record is proof positive of this statement. But because the people of some other States close their eyes to lynch law Virginia and the other law-abiding States will be classed along with the lawless.

It may be, of course, that the antilynching bill will not be adopted by the Congress now in session. But if it is not, and lynchings do not stop, it will be adopted by some other Congress; in fact must be adopted if the machinery of justice is to function.

[From the Miami (Fla.) News of Feb. 13, 1935]

TO STOP LYNCHINGS

Since 1882 there have been 5,068 lynchings in the United States. The crime is no longer committed as frequently as it was a decade or two ago, but as long as it is permitted at all we do not escape the shameful blot. There were 28 lynchings in 1933; last year the number dropped to 16. There is more than a suspicion that the drop was occasioned by the threat of the antilynching bill then before Congress, for it would hold counties financially liable for mob violence within their own boundaries. While that measure was pending there were no lynchings. When it was evident that Congress was not inclined to act they began again.

A courageous Tennessee sheriff showed recently how lynchings could be stopped without the necessity of such a law. He held his prisoners even at the cost of the lives of several members of the mob who were shot down when they attempted to storm the jail. But such instances are rare. Usually the mob encounters little resistance to its lawless purpose. Nine of the victims last year were taken from peace officers. Once a lynching has been accomplished, rarely, if ever, are the perpetrators brought to judgment, let alone punished.

A Federal measure ending this virtual immunity to justice would put a powerful check on the mob spirit. Sociological studies have established a definite relation between ignorance and poverty and lynchings. The evil should be attacked at this source. Meanwhile, the antilynching bill, once more before Congress, should be enacted without further delay.

[From the Wheeling (W. Va.) Register of Feb. 13, 1935]

THE ANTILYNCHING BILL

There are many evils which not only cannot be cured by the simple process of passing a statute forbidding them, but which on the contrary may even be aggravated by such a statute if it undertakes to go too far, or does not deal with the matter in a practical way.

Drinking and gambling belong in that class, but lynching certainly does not. Everyone must agree that the severest possible laws against lynching would be entirely justified; and that the passage of severe laws against lynching could not possibly have the effect of encouraging the perpetration of such crimes.

Public sentiment against lynching should also be built up. But in this case the passing and enforcement of laws cannot in any way conflict with public sentiment. Severe laws should be passed and should be enforced. The Costigan-Wagner bill, which is now before Congress again, should be passed. It has been pointed out that there was a decrease in lynching when this bill was up for consideration before; and that the crime increased during the time when the bill was shelved. This may of course have been merely a coincidence. But the fact remains that in the interest of law and justice, the Costigan-Wagner bill should be passed and it would not be amiss to mention this fact to any of your Representatives in Washington with whom you may happen to be communicating.

[From the Birmingham (Ala.) Age-Herald of Dec. 6, 1934]

WARNING

"It is about time the Federal Government acted in the Marianna, Fla., lynching. For once, in the lynching of Claude Neal, the fourteenth amendment ought to be used for its intended purpose instead of for the protection of corporate privilege. Certainly in this well-planned and publicized lynching—a lynching that might easily have been prevented by Florida authorities—a man was deprived of his life 'without due process of law' and denied 'equal protection of the laws.' There are grounds aplenty under the fourteenth amendment and under the Federal antikidnaping law for Federal action."

Thus the New York Post opens its comment on the report given out by the N. A. A. C. P. on the origin and procedure of the Marianna affair. And the demand for enforcement of existing law is significant because its sequel is bound to be a demand for specific legislation directed at lynching. In other words, the movement to obtain the passage of the Wagner-Costigan bill to make lynching a Federal offense has now been given an immense impetus. It is hard to imagine a set of circumstances more definitely calculated to arouse the country and to force congressional action than this Marianna atrocity.

The worst of it, from the standpoint of Alabamians, is that their State is involved. If the authorities at Brewton had faced up to their responsibility, that Florida mob might have gone away empty-handed. And the failure of the Escambia County grand jury to take satisfactory action in the premises simply heightens the bad effect already made. One almost wishes that Governor Miller, after ordering the investigation, might have seen fit to express his opinion of the outcome. That, at any rate, would have served to put in the record an official condemnation of the incompetence which handed over Claude Neal to a crowd of outsiders avowedly intent upon lynching him.

What southerners ought to realize is that the continuance of lynching makes Federal legislation quite inevitable. If there is any validity in the contention that States can deal with mob violence, it is best attested to, not by claims, but by events. In view of the Marianna horror, it is perhaps too late to prevent the enactment of some such law as Senators WAGNER and COSTIGAN intend to introduce again. But there is surely no hope of preventing it, if sheriffs fail to do their duty boldly and if Governors, like the Florida executive, decline utterly to rise to the height of their clear obligation.

[From the Newport News (Va.) Press, Dec. 5, 1934]

MOB RULE

It begins to appear almost a certainty that Congress is going to enact an antilynching law at its next session. The Southern States which have opposed such a law will be responsible for it, in that they have failed to make an end of lynchings. As the Richmond News Leader says, "Lynchings can be controlled where there is the will to act. Once in 20 years, perhaps, a mob may get out of hand even in a well-ordered community; but if there is stiff State legislation, courageously enforced, the fear of the law will prevent the creation of 'the mob mind.' On the other hand, a perfunctory grand-jury investigation, leading to the usual report that the responsible persons 'cannot be identified', is a direct invitation to further crime.

"Proof of all this to be found in the operation of the North Carolina antilynching law and of the more recent Viriginia statute. In neither case has there been an absolute stoppage of lynchings since the passage of the law; but in both States public sentiment so thoroughly approves the acts that mob violence is very rare."

The people of the South have long been champions of State rights. Hence they have opposed a Federal lynching law. But lynching is not the right of any State, and by their failure to take adequate action to prevent lynchings the Southern States have brought so widespread a demand for Federal action that it appears Congress will be forced to act.

After all, the Government is merely being asked to assure a fair trial for the accused and to put an end to mob rule.

[From the Columbia (S. C.) Record of Dec. 4, 1934]

TOWARD THE INEVITABLE

Every lynching, as the Record has pointed out time after time, is an argument for the enactment of a Federal antilynching law.

The lynching of Claude Neal, a Florida Negro, was a better argument even than the average, for it involved what the Supreme Court might term "interstate commerce." Neal, moved to a small Alabama jail where he could be more easily reached than in one of the larger Florida cities, was taken from the Alabama officers by a Florida mob and brought back to Marianna, Fla., where after such tortures and mutilation as would shame the savage he was killed.

And already the lynching—the seventeenth lynching of the year—is being used as an argument for support of a Federal antilynching law.

"With legitimate pride", the Knoxville News-Sentinel declares, for example, "Attorney General Cummings points to his Department's record for catching and punishing kidnapers. His new division of investigation in 1 year has wiped out some of the Nation's most ruthless gangs, cleaned up 27 notorious kidnap cases, obtained 3,531 criminal convictions. * * *

"While the Federal Government is meeting the challenge of criminal gangs, it is silent on an equal menace to law, the lynch mob.

"On December 10 Attorney General Cummings is calling a national conference on crime. He has been asked whether he will put before this conference the lynching problem, whether he will ask support for the Costigan-Wagner Federal antilynching bill. He has not replied."

Nor is the News-Sentinel alone among southern newspapers in advocating Federal intervention to punish lynchers and to discourage lynching. There is, for example, the Atlanta Constitution, in Georgia, which found the thirteenth or fourteenth lynching of the year enough to persuade it that it was time for the South to turn over the job of enforcing its laws to Washington.

And unless the States themselves take action to uphold their own laws, unless they discourage lynching by apprehending and punishing lynchers there is no doubting the fact that eventually the Federal antilynching law will be passed. The only convincing argument against it is the demonstration that it isn't needed because the States are doing what a Federal law might not itself be able to accomplish, gangsters being one thing and getting enough evidence to convict the members of a lynching mob being another.

[From the Bristol (Va.) Herald-Courier of Nov. 27, 1934]

THE WAY TO STOP LYNCHING

The Nashville Banner recently carried on its editorial page a cartoon which we do not believe was intended to reflect that excellent paper's attitude regarding the evil of mob lawlessness. "How to stop lynching" was the caption of the cartoon, which pictured a man representing the South pointing to a placard reading, "Stop crimes against the womanhood of the South."

In the first place, to stop crimes against the womanhood of the South would not stop lynching, since mobs frequently put men, and even women, to death who are not guilty of a more serious offense against the law than a misdemeanor, if they are guilty of any offense. And, again, the law in Tennessee provides the death penalty for crimes against women and it is therefore not necessary for mobs to presume to punish such crimes.

To be sure, if no crimes were committed against women there would be no lynchings for such crimes. But, as already said, the lynching mob would continue to operate. It might be added that if no crimes or misdemeanors were committed there would be no need for laws and courts and officers, and the taxpaying public would be saved a great deal of expense. May we suggest that the way to stop this expense is to stop offenses against the law?

Crimes continue to be committed, and lynching is one of them. Lynching is mob murder and violates not only the law of the State but the Constitution of the United States, which provides that no person shall be deprived of life or liberty or property without due process of law. That is why there is an increasing demand for a Federal antilynching law and why such a law doubtless will be enacted in the near future.

The law should move swiftly and surely and relentlessly against men, white or black, who commit crimes against women. But it is equally the duty of the law to move swiftly and surely against the mob which defies it and denies its right to try an accused person by putting the person to death, thereby committing the crime of murder. Constituted authority, thus challenged, should determinedly assert itself by running mob murderers to earth and sending them to prison for long terms. That, we submit, is the way to stop lynching.

[From the Macon (Ga.) Telegraph of Nov. 7, 1934]

UNCLE SAM TO STOP LYNCHING

It was freely predicted when the latest lynching took place in Florida that it would almost inevitably bring nearer the enactment of a Federal antilynching law, and now it appears that such a bill will be introduced almost as soon as Congress assembles.

The President has been asked also to investigate the possibility of having the persons who abducted and killed the latest victim prosecuted for kidnaping under the Lindbergh law.

This law, passed in March 1932, makes the abduction of a person across State lines a capital offense if it involves extortion and personal injury. In the law as amended the interstate abduction is defined as an act undertaken for ransom or reward "or otherwise."

It is maintained by many investigators of the subject that the Federal law proposed a year ago by Senators ROBERT F. WAGNER, of New York, and EDWARD P. COSTIGAN, of Colorado, would prove effective in suppressing the acts of a mob.

Under the Wagner-Costigan bill a mob or riotous assemblage is defined as a group of three or more persons acting in concert and without authority of law to kill or injure any person in the custody of any peace officer with the purpose or consequence of depriving such person of due process of law or the equal protection of the laws.

The measure sets forth that any State or governmental subdivision which fails, neglects, or refuses to protect the life of a person against a mob shall have not only failed to guarantee constitutional rights under its own constitution but that of the United States. This condition, therefore, calls for Federal intervention.

Any peace officer having an accused person in charge, who fails or neglects to protect him from the mob or refuses to make all diligent efforts to do so, is held guilty of felony. He is likewise culpable if he fails or omits to try diligently to arrest all persons who have taken a part in a lynching. Upon conviction he may be punished by a fine not to exceed $5,000 or by not more than 5 years imprisonment, or by both penalties.

If it is true that an official is in collusion or conspiracy with a member or members of the mob to surrender his prisoner to vengeance, he and those plotting with him may be punished by a prison sentence of not less than 5 years nor more than 25 years.

Trials for violation of the proposed law would take place in the Federal district court. The National Government would be empowered to act if the State did not do so within 30 days after the commission of the crime.

In the opinion of many, the vital provision of the bill is that it punishes the community itself. Any county in which a lynching occurs is held liable to the injured person, or to his heirs or legal representatives in the event of his death.

The sum recovered may be not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000 as liquidated damages. It may be recovered in a civil action against the county brought in the United States district court having the proper geographical jurisdiction. If the amount of a judgment is not paid, the United States marshal can levy on the property of the county, and the sum recovered is exempt from all claims made by creditors of the deceased or injured person. If the mob victim is transported from one county to another, all the counties become jointly liable.

In spite of the drastic laws in many States in which a lyncher is subject to death or life imprisonment, no such sentence has ever been pronounced.

In 1920 there had been outbreaks of lynching, 65 in all, or twice as many as in the preceding year. A determined agitation was started for a Federal statute on the lines of the bill introduced by Representative L. C. Dyer, of Missouri. Then came a slight decline in the number of lynchings, and the Dyer bill, passed by the House, was defeated in the Senate. In 1924 and 1925 the number of lynchings was, respectively, 16 and 18, but in 1926 it jumped to 34; and Victor Berger, of Wisconsin, in that year introduced another Federal antilynching bill. It was defeated, but its mere introduction seemed to serve to decrease the number of lynchings again until 1930, when the number rose to 25; and in 1933, when the number went up to 28, the Costigan-Wagner bill was introduced.

Apparently the mere threat of the Federal antilynching bill has a wholesome effect, and the time has come when even the South would vote for such a bill.

[From the Cumberland (Md.) Times of Nov. 3, 1934]

ANTILYNCHING PROGRESS

Following the recent lynching in Florida, Senators WAGNER of New York and COSTIGAN of Colorado announced their intention of introducing again in Congress their antilynching bill, which was defeated in the last session.

More important, however, than laws providing for the punishment of lynchers will be public education on this subject and a stiffening of the public determination to stop it. There is evidence that this process is already well begun.

The Virginia Council of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching sent a telegram to the Attorney General of the United States affirming their opposition to lynching for any cause and urging him to investigate the Florida lynching and bring the guilty to justice. From the western North Carolina conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in its annual session, a telegram was sent to the President asking him to invoke the Lindbergh law against the lynchers who first kidnaped their victim and held him a day before completing their mob crime. Other groups show the same attitude.

It is no justification of any lynching to say that the victim deserved his fate. Even if that were true, the use of mob violence, the disregard of the legal channels of justice and the arousing of hideous mass emotions would remain wholly degrading to the participants and menacing to society.

[From the Winston-Salem (N. C.) Sentinel of Oct. 30, 1934]

"AS ADVERTISED"

A Florida mob takes a Negro from an Alabama jail, carries him to the woods, and lynches him, "as advertised."

The mob was from Florida. A Florida girl, according to the warrant duly drawn, had been criminally assaulted and killed by this Negro.

Under the law, the Negro, if convicted of a first-degree offense of this nature, would forfeit his life by due process.

But the Florida mob had no intention of letting this black man die by due process of law. It imagined it could make death more horrible for him.

The mob advertised to the world just what it intended to do. Then after the officers of the law had full warning, the mob proceeded to do what it had declared it would do.

We have a great many lynchings in the South. All we have are useless, cruel, disgraceful. But we seldom have an affair of this sort in which the law enforcement agencies of the community are warned well in advance. In this respect the Florida lynching is unique.

The atmosphere here doesn't look healthy. Maybe it was impossible for the officers of community and State to prevent the lynching, but the State had other resources with which to cope with organized defiance of the law. It had the National Guard. The guard wasn't used, although the Governor offered to call it out if local officers thought it necessary.

But the crowning insult to law and decency came after the actual lynching. Then the Negro was dragged to the courthouse square of the Florida county seat town of Marianna. There the dead body was stretched up to be the target of knives and bullets. Where the "law" was while this was going on is not clear. The press report says "no officers were identified in the crowd."

The warning of the lynchers was a challenge to authority. It was not accepted. What happened to the manhood of Florida in this case? Men who love law and order, justice and equity in the handling of grave interracial problems have a right to ask this question. This Florida mob has again blotched the fair name of the South. It has thus been stained many times with blood. But what has complacent, indifferent laxness or moral weakness in this case on the part of those sworn to uphold and defend the processes of law done to Florida and the South? Probably this question is the most important query which could be raised in connection with the instance of barbarism.

INTERSTATE LYNCHING

Concerning the carrying off of the Negro taken from the jail at Brewton, many Alabamians will be disposed to shrug off the incident as a Florida affair. Yet it was nothing of the kind. If custodial responsibility was accepted by an Alabama sheriff, and if he could not contrive to protect the prisoner from the mob which had been pursuing him for a week, this is our business, and a thoroughly bad business it is.

For what is to be borne in mind is that easy transportation has eliminated State lines to the extent of making the point of custody the all-important factor. Mississippians contributed to the so-called "Tuscaloosa lynchings", some investigators have concluded. In the case at hand, an Alabama sheriff was so naive and an Alabama jailor was so weak, that they permitted a vengeful band of Floridians to seize a prisoner who should have been saved from this fate at every cost.

If this is the way in which outsiders are dealt with, what is to be expected when home folks make the same demand? We have not yet managed to educate our officers to a sense of their obligation in such circumstances. Too many of them accept any pretext to rid themselves of a crucial test. The time cannot be far off when we shall have a law imposing on sheriffs and localities associated with lynchings a penalty for failing to do their full duty. That should have a deterrent effect.

[From the Miami (Fla.) News of Aug. 29, 1934]

SIGNIFICANT FIGURES

During the first 5 months of this year there were but two lynchings in the entire country. Throughout that period there was a possibility that Congress might pass the Federal antilynching bill, providing severe Federal penalties for lynchers and local officials failing to resist them and levying heavy fines on communities in which the crimes occur.

The bill was pigeonholed about June 1. Since that time there have been 12 lynchings, an average of more than one a week. None of the mob leaders has been punished. If the record of the past holds, none will be. Whether or not the surprising difference in the number of lynchings during the two periods is the result of the threat of Federal action in the one case and removal of the threat in the other, it would be worth passing the Wagner-Costigan bill to make sure. * * * The problem is one on which Congress should act in the next session.

[From the El Paso (Tex.) Herald-Post, Aug. 27, 1934]

A LYNCHING A WEEK

From January 1 to June 1 there were two lynchings in the United States. Since June 1 there have been 12 lynchings.

Prior to June 1 the Wagner-Costigan Federal antilynching bill was a live issue in Congress. It provided drastic Federal punishment of lynchers and local officers who fail to resist lynch mobs, and assessed heavy fines against the communities in which lynchings occur. Apparently this threat of Federal interference was a strong deterrent to lynching in the first 5 months of the year.

This threat was removed about June 1, when the Wagner-Costigan bill was pigeonholed. Since that date mob murders have proceeded at the rate of more than one a week. In none of the instances have lynchers been punished, nor is it likely that any will be punished.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has appealed to President Roosevelt to insist at the opening of the next congressional session upon passage of Federal antilynching legislation. "The parade of bold mob murders," says the association, is proof that "the States are unwilling or unable to check lynching, and that the only method left is the invocation of the power of the Federal Government."

At the next session of Congress, it seems to us, the President should give to the Wagner-Costigan bill more than his tacit approval.

SALE OF PROPERTY UNDER COURT ORDER

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the attention of Senators, particularly those on the other side of the aisle, and especially of the able leader on the other side, to a request I am about to prefer.

The Department of Justice sent to the Committee on the Judiciary a short time ago the draft of a bill relating to the sale of property under decree of court. The present law permits the sale of property, but it is not clear as to what steps should be taken in the event the appraisal is less than two-thirds of what the judge may deem to be proper.

The bill was introduced and is on the calendar, being the bill (S. 1572) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the manner in which property shall be sold under orders and decrees of any United States courts." The bill clarifies the question with respect to public sales, but does not deal with the matter of private sale.

The important change in the law is brought about by the fact that the Government has a number of oil properties situate in different States, which properties belong to one corporation which is in the hands of a receiver. The Government has this property on its hands and desires to effectuate sale of it. It has to sell the properties separately under the present law, though they are owned by the same corporation, and if the properties are sold separately, it would militate against obtaining a reasonable value for them.

The important amendment is that which provides that, if a court desires, it may order one advertisement and one sale, instead of having property sold in two or three States.

I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill, which was unanimously reported by the Committee on the Judiciary after full consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY rose.

Mr. KING. If there is any objection, I will withdraw the request.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, my objection goes more to the practice than to the merits of the bill.

Mr. KING. I understand. If I may make a further observation, the Department of Justice is holding up several matters awaiting the enactment of the bill, and it is resulting in great cost to the Government. The enactment of the measure will save several thousand dollars, and I am a little derelict in having failed to press the measure at an earlier date.

Mr. McNARY. I am sure the Senator cannot justly penalize himself.

I have not had time to look into the measure. The Senator from Utah has made a very pleasing statement, but it is the practice itself which offends me, the practice of taking up bills from the calendar late in the afternoon, without notice. My objection really goes to the practice rather than to the merits of the measure. I would have no objection to the consideration of the bill on Monday, but on Friday I must object.

Mr. KING. I withdraw the request.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEELY in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of several officers for appointment, by transfer, in the Regular Army, which were ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the first business in order on the calendar.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE IN ARMS TREATY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read Executive H (69th Cong., 1st sess.), a Convention for the Supervision of the International Trade in Arms and Ammunition and in Implements of War, signed at Geneva, Switzerland, on June 17, 1925.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I did not anticipate that this treaty would be taken up today. I thought we would be concerned during the entire day with the Farmers' Home Corporation measure, and I should be glad to have the treaty go over until Tuesday or Wednesday of next week, or whenever the Senator from Nevada may desire to have it called up.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, this is a very important treaty and should be given careful consideration. It is a treaty with regard to the export of arms and munitions of war. A similar treaty was ratified by the Senate on a prior occasion, containing a reservation offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. Since that time reasons have arisen which caused the Committee on Foreign Relations to deem the reservation of the Senator inadvisable, and the treaty has now been reported without the reservation of the Senator from Utah, and on that subject he desires to have discussion. I realize that the Senator is very busily engaged on an important committee and is occupied with other important legislative matters; and, while I regret to have this treaty go over, I feel that in justice to the Senator from Utah it should go over, but I desire to have it understood that if there shall be an executive session on Tuesday or Wednesday, or any time after Monday, I shall then feel it to be my duty to move the consideration of the treaty.

Mr. KING. I thank the Senator.

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT CONVENTION

Who, being thereunto duly authorized, have agreed upon the following:

ARTICLE 1

The Countries to which the present Convention applies shall be constituted into a Union for the protection of the rights of authors in their literary and artistic works.

ARTICLE 2

(1) The term "literary and artistic works" shall include all productions in the literary, scientific, and artistic domain, whatever the mode or form of expression, such as: books, pamphlets, and other writings; lectures, addresses, sermons and other works of like nature; dramatic or dramatico-musical works; choreographic works and pantomines, the staging (mise en scène) of which is fixed in writing or otherwise; musical compositions with or without words; drawings, paintings; works of architecture and sculpture; engravings and lithographs; illustrations; geographical charts; plans, sketches, and plastic works relating to geography, topography, architecture, or the sciences.

(2) Translations, adaptations, arrangements of music and other reproductions transformed from a literary or artistic work, as well as compilations from different works, shall be protected as original works without prejudice to the rights of the author of the original work.

(3) The countries of the Union shall be bound to secure protection in the case of the works mentioned above.

(4) Works of art applied to industry shall be protected so far as the domestic legislation of each country allows.

ARTICLE 2 BIS

(1) The authority is reserved to the domestic legislation of each country of the Union to exclude, partially or wholly, from the protection provided by the preceding Article political discourses or discourses pronounced in judicial debates.

(2) There is also reserved to the domestic legislation of each country of the Union authority to enact the conditions under which such lectures, addresses, sermons, and other works of like nature may be reproduced by the press. Nevertheless, the author alone shall have the right to bring such works together in a compilation.

ARTICLE 3

The present convention shall apply to photographic works and to works obtained by any process analogous to photography. The countries of the Union shall be bound to guarantee protection to such works.

ARTICLE 4

(1) Authors within the jurisdiction of one of the countries of the Union shall enjoy for their works, whether unpublished or published for the first time in one of the countries of the Union, such rights, in the countries other than the country of origin of the work, as the respective laws now accord or shall hereafter accord to nationals, as well as the rights specially accorded by the present convention.

(2) The enjoyment and the exercise of such rights shall not be subject to any formality; such enjoyment and such exercise are independent of the existence of protection in the country of origin of the work. Consequently, apart from the stipulations of the present Convention, the extent of the protection, as well as the means of redress guaranteed to the author to safeguard his rights, shall be regulated exclusively according to the legislation of the country where the protection is claimed.

(3) The following shall be considered as the country of origin of the work: for unpublished works, the country to which the author belongs; for published works, the country of first publication, and for works published simultaneously in several countries of the Union, the country among them whose legislation grants the shortest term of protection. For works published simultaneously in a country outside of the Union and in a country within the Union, it is the latter country which shall be exclusively considered as the country of origin.

(4) By "published works" ("oeuvres publiées") must be understood, according to the present Convention, works which have been issued ("oeuvres éditées"). The representation of a dramatic or dramatico-musical work, the performance of a musical work, the exhibition of a work of art and the construction of a work of architecture shall not constitute publication.

ARTICLE 5

Authors within the jurisdiction of one of the countries of the Union who publish their works for the first time in another country of the Union, shall have in this latter country the same rights as national authors.

ARTICLE 6

(1) Authors not within the jurisdiction of any one of the countries of the Union, who publish their works for the first time in one of the Union countries, shall enjoy in such Union country the same rights as national authors, and in the other countries of the Union the rights accorded by the present Convention.

(2) Nevertheless, when a country outside of the Union does not protect in an adequate manner the works of authors within the jurisdiction of one of the countries of the Union, this latter Union country may restrict the protection for the works of authors who are, at the time of the first publication of such works, within the jurisdiction of the non-union country and are not actually domiciled in one of the countries of the Union.

(3) Any restriction, established by virtue of the preceding paragraph, shall not prejudice the rights which an author may have acquired in a work published in one of the countries of the Union before the putting into effect of this restriction.

(4) The countries of the Union which, by virtue of the present article, restrict the protection of the rights of authors, shall notify the fact to the Government of the Swiss Confederation by a written declaration indicating the countries in whose case protection is restricted, and indicating also the restrictions to which the rights of authors within the jurisdiction of such country are subjected. The Government of the Swiss Confederation shall immediately communicate this fact to all the countries of the Union.

ARTICLE 6 BIS

(1) Independently of the author's copyright, and even after assignment of the said copyright, the author shall retain the right to claim authorship of the work, as well as the right to object to every deformation, mutilation or other modification of the said work, which may be prejudicial to his honor or to his reputation.

(2) It is left to the national legislation of each of the countries of the Union to establish the conditions for the exercise of these rights. The means for safeguarding them shall be regulated by the legislation of the country where protection is claimed.

ARTICLE 7

(1) The duration of the protection granted by the present convention shall comprise the life of the author and fifty years after his death.

(2) In case this period of protection, however, should not be adopted uniformly by all the countries of the Union, its duration shall be regulated by the law of the country where protection is claimed, and it cannot exceed the term fixed in the country of origin of the work. The countries of the Union will consequently not be required to apply the provision of the preceding paragraph beyond the extent to which it agrees with their domestic law.

(3) For photographic works and works obtained by a process analogous to photography; for posthumous works; for anonymous or pseudonymous works, the term of protection shall be regulated by the law of the country where protection is claimed, but this term shall not exceed the term fixed in the country of origin of the work.

ARTICLE 7 BIS

(1) The term of copyright protection belonging in common to collaborators in a work shall be calculated according to the date of the death of the last survivor of the collaborators.

(2) Persons within the jurisdiction of countries which grant a shorter period of protection than that provided in paragraph 1 cannot claim in the other countries of the Union a protection of longer duration.

(3) In any case the term of protection shall not expire before the death of the last survivor of the collaborators.

ARTICLE 8

Auhors of unpublished works within the jurisdiction of one of the countries of the Union, and authors of works published for the first time in one of these countries, shall enjoy in the other countries of the Union during the whole term of the right in the original work the exclusive right to make or to authorize the translation of their works.

ARTICLE 9

(1) Serial stories, tales and all other works, whether literary, scientific, or artistic, whatever may be their subject, published in newspapers or periodicals of one of the countries of the Union, may not be reproduced in the other countries without the consent of the authors.

(2) Articles of current economic, political, or religious discussion may be reproduced by the press if their reproduction is not expressly reserved. But the source must always be clearly indicated; the sanction of this obligation shall be determined by the legislation of the country where the protection is claimed.

(3) The protection of the present Convention shall not apply to news of the day or to miscellaneous news having the character merely of press information.

ARTICLE 10

As concerns the right of borrowing lawfully from literary or artistic works for use in publications intended for instruction or having a scientific character, or for chrestomathies, the provisions of the legislation of the countries of the Union and of the special treaties existing or to be concluded between them shall govern.

ARTICLE 11

(1) The stipulations of the present Convention shall apply to the public representation of dramatic or dramatico-musical works and to the public performance of musical works, whether these works are published or not.

(2) Authors of dramatic or dramatico-musical works shall be protected, during the term of their copyright in the original work, against the unauthorized public representation of a translation of their works.

(3) In order to enjoy the protection of this article, authors in publishing their works shall not be obliged to prohibit the public representation or public performance of them.

ARTICLE 11 BIS

(1) The authors of literary and artistic works shall enjoy the exclusive right to authorize the communication of their works to the public by broadcasting.

(2) It belongs to the national legislatures of the countries of the Union to regulate the conditions for the exercise of the right declared in the preceding paragraph, but such conditions shall have an effect strictly limited to the country which establishes them. They can not in any case adversely affect the moral right of the author, nor the right which belongs to the author of obtaining an equitable remuneration fixed, in default of an amicable agreement, by competent authority.

ARTICLE 12

Among the unlawful reproductions to which the present Convention applies shall be specially included indirect, unauthorized appropriations of a literary or artistic work, such as adaptations, arrangements of music, transformations of a romance or novel or of a poem into a theatrical piece and vice-versa, etc., when they are only the reproduction of such work in the same form or in another form with non-essential changes, additions or abridgments and without presenting the character of a new, original work.

ARTICLE 13

(1) Authors of musical works shall have the exclusive right to authorize: (1) the adaptation of these works to instruments serving to reproduce them mechanically; (2) the public performance of the same works by means of these instruments.

(2) The limitations and conditions relative to the application of this article shall be determined by the domestic legislation of each country in its own case; but all limitations and conditions of this nature shall have an effect strictly limited to the country which shall have adopted them.

(3) The provisions of paragraph 1 shall have no retroactive effect, and therefore shall not be applicable in a country of the Union to works which, in that country, shall have been lawfully adapted to mechanical instruments before the going into force of the Convention signed at Berlin, November 13, 1908; and, in the case of a country which has acceded to the Union since that date, or shall accede to it in the future, then when the works have been adapted to mechanical instruments before the date of its accession.

(4) Adaptations made by virtue of paragraphs 2 and 3 of this article and imported, without the authorization of the parties interested, into a country where they would not be lawful, shall be liable to seizure there.

ARTICLE 14

(1) Authors of literary, scientific or artistic works shall have the exclusive right to authorize the reproduction, adaptation, and public representation of their works by means of the cinematograph.

(2) Cinematographic productions shall be protected as literary or artistic works when the author shall have given to the work an original character. If this character is lacking, the cinematographic production shall enjoy the same protection as photographic works.

(3) Without prejudice to the rights of the author of the work reproduced or adapted, the cinematographic work shall be protected as an original work.

(4) The preceding provisions apply to the reproduction or production obtained by any other process analogous to cinematography.

ARTICLE 15

(1) In order that the authors of the works protected by the present Convention may be considered as such, until proof to the contrary, and be admitted consequently before the courts of the various countries of the Union to proceed against infringers, it shall suffice that the author's name be indicated upon the work in the usual manner.

(2) For anonymous or pseudonymous works, the publisher whose name is indicated upon the work shall be entitled to protect the rights of the author. He shall, without other proof, be considered the legal representative of the anonymous or pseudonymous author.

ARTICLE 16

(1) All infringing works may be seized by the competent authorities of the countries of the Union where the original work has a right to legal protection.

(2) Seizure may also be made in these countries of reproductions which come from a country where the copyright on the work has terminated, or where the work has not been protected.

(3) The seizure shall take place in conformity with the domestic legislation of each country.

ARTICLE 17

The provisions of the present Convention may not prejudice in any way the right which belongs to the Government of each of the countries of the Union to permit, to supervise, or to forbid, by means of legislation or of domestic police, the circulation, the representation or the exhibition of every work or production in regard to which competent authority may have to exercise this right.

ARTICLE 18

(1) The present Convention shall apply to all works which, at the time it goes into effect, have not fallen into the public domain of their country of origin because of the expiration of the term of protection.

(2) But if a work by reason of the expiration of the term of protection which was previously secured for it has fallen into the public domain of the country where protection is claimed, such work shall not be protected anew.

(3) This principle shall be applied in accordance with the stipulations to that effect contained in the special Conventions either existing or to be concluded between countries of the Union, and in default of such stipulations, its application shall be regulated by each country in its own case.

(4) The preceding provisions shall apply equally in the case of new accessions to the Union and where the protection would be extended by the application of Article 7 or by the abandonment of reservations.

ARTICLE 19

The provisions of the present Convention shall not prevent a claim for the application of more favorable provisions which may be enacted by the legislation of a country of the Union in favor of foreigners in general.

ARTICLE 20

The governments of the countries of the Union reserve the right to make between themselves special treaties, when these treaties would confer upon authors more extended rights than those accorded by the Union, or when they contain other stipulations not conflicting with the present Convention. The provisions of existing treaties which answer the aforesaid conditions shall remain in force.

ARTICLE 21

(1) The international office instituted under the name of "Bureau of the International Union for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works" ("Bureau de l'Union internationale pour la protection des oeuvres littéraires et artistiques") shall be maintained.

(2) This Bureau is placed under the high authority of the Government of the Swiss Confederation, which controls its organization and supervises its working.

(3) The official language of the Bureau shall be French.

ARTICLE 22

(1) The International Bureau shall bring together, arrange, and publish information of every kind relating to the protection of the rights of authors in their literary and artistic works. It shall study questions of mutual utility interesting to the Union, and edit, with the aid of documents placed at its disposal by the various administrations, a periodical in the French language, treating questions concerning the purpose of the Union. The governments of the countries of the Union reserve the right to authorize the Bureau by common accord to publish an edition in one or more other languages, in case experience demonstrates the need.

(2) The International Bureau must hold itself at all times at the disposal of members of the Union to furnish them, in relation to questions concerning the protection of literary and artistic works, the special information of which they have need.

(3) The Director of the International Bureau shall make an annual report on his administration, which shall be communicated to all the members of the Union.

ARTICLE 23

(1) The expenses of the Bureau of the International Union shall be shared in common by the countries of the Union. Until a new decision, they may not exceed one hundred and twenty thousand Swiss francs per year. This sum may be increased when needful by the unanimous decision of one of the Conferences provided for in Article 24.

(2) To determine the part of this sum total of expenses to be paid by each of the countries, the countries of the Union and those which later adhere to the Union shall be divided into six classes each contributing in proportion to a certain number of units to wit:

	Units
1st class	25
2nd class	20
3d class	15
4th class	10
5th class	5
6th class	3

(3) These coefficients are multiplied by the number of countries of each class, and the sum of the products thus obtained furnishes the number of units by which the total expense is to be divided. The quotient gives the amount of the unit of expense.

(4) Each country shall declare, at the time of its accession, in which of the above-mentioned classes it demands to be placed, but it may always ultimately declare that it intends to be placed in another class.

(5) The Swiss Administration shall prepare the budget of the Bureau and superintend its expenditures, make necessary advances and draw up the annual account, which shall be communicated to all the other administrations.

ARTICLE 24

(1) The present Convention may be subjected to revision with a view to the introduction of amendments calculated to perfect the system of the Union.

(2) Questions of this nature, as well as those which from other points of view pertain to the development of the Union, shall be considered in the Conferences which will take place successively in the countries of the Union between the delegates of the said countries. The administration of the country where a Conference is to be held shall, with the cooperation of the International Bureau, prepare the agenda of the same. The Director of the Bureau shall attend the meetings of the Conferences and take part in the discussions without a deliberative voice.

(3) No change in the present Convention shall be valid for the Union except by the unanimous consent of the countries which compose it.

ARTICLE 25

(1) The countries outside of the Union which assure legal protection of the rights which are the object of the present Convention, may accede to it upon their request.

(2) Such accession shall be communicated in writing to the Government of the Swiss Confederation and by the latter to all the others.

(3) The full right of adhesion to all the clauses and admission to all the advantages stipulated in the present Convention shall be implied by such accession and it shall go into effect one month after the sending of the notification by the Government of the Swiss Confederation to the other countries of the Union, unless a later date has been indicated by the adhering country. Nevertheless, such accession may contain an indication that the adhering country intends to substitute, provisionally at least, for Article 8 concerning translations, the provisions of Article 5 of the Convention of the Union of 1886, revised at Paris in 1896, it being of course understood that these provisions relate only to translations into the language or languages of the country.

ARTICLE 26

(1) Each of the countries of the Union may, at any time, notify in writing the Government of the Swiss Confederation that the present Convention shall be applicable to all or to part of its colonies, protectorates, territories under mandate or all other territories subject to its sovereignty or to its authority, or all territories under suzerainty, and the Convention shall then apply to all the territories designated in the notification. In default of such notification, the Convention shall not apply to such territories.

(2) Each of the countries of the Union may, at any time, notify in writing the Government of the Swiss Confederation that the present Convention shall cease to be applicable to all or to part of the territories which were the object of the notification provided for by the preceding paragraph, and the Convention shall cease to apply in the territories designated in such notification twelve months after receipt of the notification addressed to the Government of the Swiss Confederation.

(3) All the notifications made to the Government of the Swiss Confederation, under the provisions of paragraphs 1 and 2 of this article, shall be communicated by that Government to all the countries of the Union.

ARTICLE 27

(1) The present Convention shall replace in the relations between the countries of the Union the Convention of Berne of September 9, 1886 and the acts by which it has been successively revised. The acts previously in effect shall remain applicable in the relations with the countries which shall not have ratified the present Convention.

(2) The countries in whose name the present Convention is signed may still retain the benefit of the reservations which they have previously formulated on condition that they make such a declaration at the time of the deposit of the ratifications.

(3) Countries which are at present parties to the Union, but in whose name the present Convention has not been signed, may at any time adhere to it. They may in such case benefit by the provisions of the preceding paragraph.

ARTICLE 28

(1) The present Convention shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be deposited at Rome not later than July 1, 1931.

(2) It shall go into effect between the countries of the Union which have ratified it one month after that date. However, if, before that date, it has been ratified by at least six countries of the Union it shall go into effect as between those countries of the Union one month after the deposit of the sixth ratification has been notified to them by the Government of the Swiss Confederation and, for the countries of the Union which, shall later ratify, one month after the notification of each such ratification.

(3) Countries that are not within the Union may, until August 1, 1931, enter the Union, by means of adhesion, either to the Convention signed at Berlin November 13, 1908, or to the present Convention. After August 1, 1931, they can adhere only to the present Convention.

ARTICLE 29

(1) The present Convention shall remain in effect for an indeterminate time, until the expiration of one year from the day when denunciation of it shall have been made.

(2) This denunciation shall be addressed to the Government of the Swiss Confederation. It shall be effective only as regards the country which shall have made it, the Convention remaining in force for the other countries of the Union.

ARTICLE 30

(1) The countries which introduce into their legislation the term of protection of fifty years provided for by Article 7, paragraph 1, of the present Convention, shall make it known to the Government of the Swiss Confederation by a written notification which shall be communicated at once by that Government to all the other countries of the Union.

(2) It shall be the same for such countries as shall renounce any reservations made or maintained by them by virtue of Articles 25 and 27.

In faith whereof, the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the present Convention.

Done at Rome, the second of June, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-eight, in a single copy, which shall be deposited in the archives of the Royal Italian Government. One copy, properly certified, shall be sent through diplomatic channels to each of the countries of the Union.

For The Minister of Foreign Affairs of Italy

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, this convention was considered for a long time by a subcommittee, unanimously favorably reported by the subcommittee to the full committee, and unanimously favorably reported by the Foreign Relations Committee. I ask for action upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the convention will be reported to the Senate.

The convention was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the adherence by the United States to Executive E, Seventy-third Congress, second session, the International Convention of the Copyright Union as revised and signed at Rome on June 2, 1928.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution is agreed to, and the convention is ratified.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, Senators on this side of the aisle could hear nothing but a murmur, and we do not know what is the pending question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate was whether the Senate would advise and consent to adherence to the International Convention of the Copyright Union as revised and signed at Rome on June 2, 1928.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is my understanding that the Chair ruled that, in his opinion, two-thirds of the Senators had voted to advise and consent to adherence to the convention. It is necessary, of course, to announce it.

Mr. AUSTIN. I was just considering the question whether I would move for reconsideration, because what was done was done so quietly that it was not heard over here.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Vermont that I stated that this copyright convention had been before the Senate for many years; and finally, after exhaustive hearings on the subject by the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and by the committee itself, at the request of the State Department, the convention was unanimously favorably reported by the subcommittee, and also unanimously favorably reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I appreciate that explanation. I have no objection.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Samuel M. Glading to be postmaster at Wenonah, N. J.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of J. Pierrepont Moffat, of New Hampshire, to be consul general.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

That completes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, pursuant to the unanimous-consent agreement, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously entered, took a recess until Monday, April 22, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, APRIL 19, 1935

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, when we consider the works of Thy hand, the moon and the stars which Thou hast ordained, we are touched to wonder and awe; but when we unveil the cross and behold infinite love struggling for expression, when we see Thy heartache revealed on Calvary's brow we are moved to supplication, humility, and penitence. O, darkness that tells of the light that will never fade away; we turn our faces toward the earth. Compassionate Father, have mercy, forgive us our sins; separate them from us, for the remembrance of them is grievous unto us. Mercifully grant that we, walking in the way of the cross, may find it none other than the way of life and peace. O hide the gloom through the everlasting promise: "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." Quicken our memories today as never before and take our places with Him in the world's redemption. Clothe us with courage to befriend, with sincerity to shield, and with charity to be merciful to all. Let the shadow of the cross be our watchword. In His holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles:

On April 15, 1935:

H. R. 5576. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 5577. An act to provide for aviation cadets in the Naval Reserve and Marine Corps Reserve.

On April 17, 1935:

H. R. 2881. An act authorizing the adjustment of contracts for the sale of timber on the national forests, and for other purposes.

On April 18, 1935:

H. R. 6290. An act to authorize acquisition of land to provide appropriate means of access to the post-office building at Jonesboro, Ark.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Friday, April 26, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes after the reading of the Journal and conclusion of business on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes the gentleman will withhold his request in view of the announcement the Chair made some time ago that the Chair would not recognize a Member to submit a request to speak until the day before the speech was to be made, and the Chair is sure the gentleman appreciates the reason for this policy.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request.

SOCIAL-SECURITY BILL

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7260) to provide for the general welfare by establishing a system of Federal old-age benefits, and by enabling the several States to make more adequate provision for aged persons, dependent and crippled children, maternal and child welfare, public health, and the administration of their unemployment compensation laws; to establish a Social Security Board; to raise revenue; and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7260, with Mr. McREYNOLDS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE III. GRANTS TO STATES FOR UNEMPLOYMENT-COMPENSATION ADMINISTRATION

APPROPRIATION

SECTION 301. For the purpose of assisting the States in the administration of their unemployment-compensation laws, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $4,000,000, and for each fiscal year thereafter the sum of $49,000,000, to be used as hereinafter provided.

PAYMENTS TO STATES

SEC. 302. (a) The board shall from time to time certify to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment to each State which has an unemployment-compensation law approved by the board under title IX such amounts as the board determines to be necessary for the proper administration of such law during the fiscal year in which such payment is to be made. The board's determination shall be based on (1) the population of the State; (2) an estimate of the number of persons covered by the State law and of the cost of proper administration of such law; and (3) such other factors as the board finds relevant. The board shall not certify for payment under this section in any fiscal year a total amount in excess of the amount appropriated therefor for such fiscal year.

(b) Out of the sums appropriated therefor the Secretary of the Treasury shall, upon receiving a certification under subsection (a), pay, through the Division of Disbursement of the Treasury Department and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, to the State agency charged with the administration of such law the amount so certified.

PROVISIONS OF STATE LAWS

SEC. 303. (a) The board shall make no certification for payment to any State unless it finds that the law of such State, approved by the board under title IX, includes provisions for—

(1) Such methods of administration (other than those relating to selection, tenure of office, and compensation of personnel) as are found by the board to be reasonably calculated to insure full payment of unemployment compensation when due; and

(2) Payment of unemployment compensation solely through public employment offices in the State; and

(3) Opportunity for a fair hearing, before an impartial tribunal, for all individuals whose claims for unemployment compensation are denied; and

(4) The payment of all money received in the unemployment fund of such State, immediately upon such receipt, to the Secretary of the Treasury to the credit of the unemployment trust fund established by section 904; and

(5) Expenditure of all money requisitioned by the State agency from the unemployment trust fund in the payment of unemployment compensation, exclusive of expenses of administration; and

(6) The making of such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Board may from time to time require, and compliance with such provisions as the Board may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports; and

(7) Making available upon request to any agency of the United States charged with the administration of public works or assistance through public employment, the name, address, ordinary occupation, and employment status of each recipient of unemployment compensation, and a statement of such recipient's rights to further compensation under such law.

(b) Whenever the Board, after notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency charged with the administration of the State law, finds that in the administration of the law there is—

(1) a denial, in a substantial number of cases, of unemployment compensation to individuals entitled thereto under such law; or

(2) a failure to comply substantially with any provision specified in subsection (a);

the Board shall notify such State agency that further payments will not be made to the State until the Board is satisfied that there is no longer any such denial or failure to comply. Until it is so satisfied, it shall make no further certification to the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to such State.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LORD: Page 18, after line 18, insert the following new title:

"TITLE IV—UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION

"DEFINITIONS

"SECTION 401. As used in this title, the term or terms—

"'Employer' shall mean any person, partnership, association, corporation, or the legal representative, trustee in bankruptcy, receiver, or trustee thereof, or the legal representative of a deceased person, who or whose agent or predecessor in interest has, within each of 20 or more calendar weeks in the taxable year, employed at least 10 persons in employment subject to this act, except that the term 'employer' shall not include the Federal Government, the governments of the several States, municipal corporations, or other governmental instrumentalities. In determining whether an employer employs enough persons to be an 'employer' subject hereto, and in determining the amount of a tax or contribution hereunder, he shall, whenever he contracts with any subcontractor for any work which is part of his usual trade, occupation, profession, or business, be deemed to employ all persons employed by such subcontractor on such work, and the tax or contribution hereunder shall be measured by wages paid to such persons for such work, except as any such subcontractor who would, in the absence of the foregoing provision, be liable to pay any part of such a tax accepts exclusive liability for the contractor's portion thereof under an agreement with such contractor made pursuant to regulations promulgated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

"'Employment' shall mean any employment in which all or the greater part of the person's work is or was performed within the continental United States under any contract of hire, oral or written, express or implied, whether such person was hired and paid directly by the employer or through any other person employed by the employer, provided the employer had actual or constructive knowledge of such contract; except that for the purposes of this act it shall not include—

"(1) Employment as an agricultural laborer;
"(2) Employment in the domestic service of any family or person at his home;
"(3) Employment as a teacher in any school, college, or university for the regular annual term for which such school, college, or university is in session;
"(4) Employment as a physician, surgeon, interne, or nurse in a hospital, sanatorium, or other similar private endowed institution not operated for profit;
"(5) Employment of a physically handicapped person by an institution financed largely by charitable donations and organized not for profit but primarily for the relief and rehabilitation of such handicapped persons;
"(6) Employment of the father, mother, spouse, or minor child of the employer;
"(7) Employment in the service of a common carrier subject to the provisions of the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act of 1933 (48 Stat. 211);
"(8) Any employment for which unemployment compensation shall have been provided directly by act of Congress.

"'Pay roll' shall mean the total amount of all wages paid by the employer during the taxable year to persons employed by him in employment subject to this act; except that pay roll shall not include the wages paid to a person employed by the employer within such year on a minimum fixed salary basis of $250 or more for each month in which the person was thus employed.

"'Wages' shall mean every form of remuneration for employment received by a person from his employer, whether paid directly or indirectly by the employer, including salaries, commissions, bonuses, and the reasonable money value of board, rent, housing, lodging, payments in kind, and similar advantages.

"'Compensation' shall mean the cash benefits payable under this act to employees for their unemployment.

"'Employee', as used in this act, shall mean any employed person who is or may become eligible for compensation hereunder.

"UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND

"SEC. 402. A Federal unemployment insurance fund is hereby created to consist of the taxes levied by this act on employers and employees and contributions hereunder by the United States Government. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall collect or receive such taxes and contributions and pay them into such fund, which shall be in the custody of the Secretary of the Treasury who shall invest them in such liquid securities that the amount of compensation chargeable at any time to such fund under this act shall be immediately available for payment thereof.

"ADMINISTRATION OF FUND

"SEC. 403. The Department of Labor shall administer the unemployment relief fund, and payments therefrom shall be made on its order. Such Department also shall carry out the provisions of this title and may make all needful rules and regulations therefor, which shall have the force and effect of law.

"TAXES AND CONTRIBUTIONS

"SEC. 404. (a) There shall be levied, assessed, and collected monthly from every employer subject to this act, for the taxable year beginning July 1, 1935, and for each taxable year thereafter, an excise tax measured by 1 percent of the employer's pay roll, as defined by section 402.

"(b) There also shall be levied, assessed, and collected, from and after July 1, 1935, from every employee eligible for compensation hereunder, an income tax of 1 percent of the wages paid him from time to time. The amount thereof shall be deducted, whenever the wages are payable, by the employer, who is hereby constituted an agent of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for such purpose. This subdivision shall not be construed to apply to an employee whose wages are not included in the pay roll, as defined by section 2, on which the employer is required to pay a tax.

"(c) The tax imposed on the employer and the tax collected by him from his employees shall be paid into the unemployment insurance fund at the close of each taxable month, except that the tax due from the employer may be so paid in quarterly installments, under rules promulgated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

"(d) The United States shall contribute to such fund, annually, at the close of each taxable year, an amount equal to 1 percent of each pay roll on account of which a tax is due hereunder from any employer.

"COMPENSATION FOR UNEMPLOYMENT

"SEC. 405. An employee eligible to compensation hereunder shall be paid from such fund, while out of work through no fault of his own, seven or more dollars each week, and at least his average wage earnings for 20 hours of work while he had employment, but such payments shall not extend over a total period of 30 weeks in any taxable year, nor begin prior to July 1, 1936.

"DEFICIT IN FUND; HOW MET

"SEC. 406. If, during any taxable year, such fund becomes exhausted, by withdrawals for payment of compensation, the United States shall contribute such additional amounts to such fund, from time to time, as may be necessary to pay compensation accruing during the remainder of the year.

"ELIGIBILITY FOR COMPENSATION

"SEC. 407. An employee who shall have been on a pay roll or on pay rolls for an aggregate period of 10 weeks, within any period of 12 months after June 30, 1935, shall be eligible to compensation hereunder. If the employment period shall be less than that above required, he shall be paid from such fund the amount of any tax he shall have paid hereunder during such 12 months."

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against this amendment on the ground that it is not germane to the title to which it is offered.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold his point of order to permit the gentleman from New York to be heard?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order if it will be any accommodation to the gentleman.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Chairman, the proposed amendment is a bill I introduced on the 16th of January to provide for unemployment insurance. It varies with the plan set forth in the pending bill in that my amendment assesses the tax equally on the employer, the employee, and the Federal Government; each bears one-third of the expense of administering this insurance benefit.

I believe that if we leave it to the States one State may provide a 3-percent contribution by the employer, another State may provide a 1-percent contribution on the part of the State, 1 percent by the employee, and 1 percent by the employer, and still another State may provide a different rate of contribution; or they may provide 1 percent to be contributed by the employer and 1 percent by the employee. So we shall find a difference of expense on manufacturers in different States which, of course, will have to be added to the price of their product. So as between manufacturers in different States we shall have one manufacturer assessed perhaps 1 percent, another 2 percent, and still another 3 percent. The manufacturer that pays only 1 percent will have a 2-percent advantage in price over the one that is paying 3 percent when he comes to sell his goods. The great trouble with the plan in the pending bill is the inequality between manufacturers. I believe, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that we should change this provision in order that the burden will fall equally on all manufacturers throughout the Nation so that when they come to sell their goods as between manufacturers in the different States they will have an equal chance. I believe that my amendment to the bill has many other features that are much better than the bill before us and should be adopted. The employee should, to my mind, contribute to the unemployment insurance and in that way help build up an annuity for the time when he is out of work.

Insurance providing an annuity for old age has become very popular and should be and is being encouraged. This is being built up by the individual at his own expense and should be carried by everyone that can afford to carry it.

This bill provides for an old-age pension that is to be built up over a term of years with contributions coming in part from the person that is to receive the benefit, and while it will be a great expense in the total, it will also be a lasting benefit to all in after years when it is expected to be self-supporting.

There are many bad features like the one that I am trying to amend in this bill, and I believe that this bill should have been in three separate measures, yet there are many good features in it and perhaps the good predominate. It can be amended later and is a start at any rate that has been too long neglected.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. Titles III, IV, V, and VI do not deal with taxation.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE IV—GRANTS TO STATES FOR AID TO DEPENDENT CHILDREN

APPROPRIATION

SECTION 401. For the purpose of enabling each State to furnish financial assistance assuring, as far as practicable under the conditions in such State, a reasonable subsistence compatible with decency and health to dependent children without such subsistence, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $24,750,000, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year thereafter a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of this title. The sums made available under this section shall be used for making payments to States which have submitted, and had approved by the Board, State plans for aid to dependent children.

STATE PLANS FOR AID TO DEPENDENT CHILDREN

SEC. 402. (a) A State plan for aid to dependent children must (1) provide that it shall be in effect in all political subdivisions of the State, and, if administered by them, be mandatory upon them; (2) provide for financial participation by the State; (3) either provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to administer the plan, or provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to supervise the administration of the plan; (4) provide for granting to any individual, whose claim with respect to aid to a dependent child is denied, an opportunity for a fair hearing before such State agency; (5) provide such methods of administration (other than those relating to selection, tenure of office, and compensation of personnel) as are found by the Board to be necessary for the efficient operation of the plan; and (6) provide that the State agency will make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Board may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as the Board may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports.

(b) The Board shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a), except that it shall not approve any plan which imposes as a condition of eligibility for aid to dependent children, a residence requirement which denies aid with respect to any child residing in the State (1) who has resided in the State for 1 year immediately preceding the application for such aid, or (2) who was born within the State within 1 year immediately preceding the application.

PAYMENT TO STATES

SEC. 403. (a) From the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has an approved plan for aid to dependent children, for each quarter, beginning with the quarter commencing July 1, 1935, an amount, which shall be used exclusively for carrying out the State plan, equal to one-third of the total of the sums expended during such quarter under such plan, not counting so much of such expenditure with respect to any dependent child for any month as exceeds $18, or if there is more than one dependent child in the same home, as exceeds $18 for any month with respect to one such dependent child and $12 for such month with respect to each of the other dependent children.

(b) The method of computing and paying such amounts shall be as follows:

(1) The Board shall, prior to the beginning of each quarter, estimate the amount to be paid to the State for such quarter under the provisions of subsection (a), such estimate to be based on (A) a report filed by the State containing its estimate of the total sum to be expended in such quarter in accordance with the provisions of such subsection and stating the amount appropriated or made available by the State and its political subdivisions for such expenditures in such quarter, and if such amount is less than two-thirds of the total sum of such estimated expenditures, the source or sources from which the difference is expected to be derived, (B) records showing the number of dependent children in the State, and (C) such other investigation as the Board may find necessary.

(2) The Board shall then certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount so estimated by the Board, reduced or increased, as the case may be, by any sum by which it finds that its estimate for any prior quarter was greater or less than the amount which should have been paid to the State for such quarter, except to the extent that such sum has been applied to make the amount certified for any prior quarter greater or less than the amount estimated by the Board for such prior quarter.

(3) The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon, through the Division of Disbursement of the Treasury Department and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, pay to the State, at the time or times fixed by the Board, the amount so certified.

OPERATION OF STATE PLANS

SEC. 404. In the case of any State plan for aid to dependent children which has been approved by the Board, if the Board, after notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of such plan, finds—

(1) that the plan has been so changed as to impose any residence requirement prohibited by section 402 (b), or that in the administration of the plan any such prohibited requirement is imposed, with the knowledge of such State agency, in a substantial number of cases; or

(2) that in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with any provision required by section 402 (a) to be included in the plan; the Board shall notify such State agency that further payments will not be made to the State until the Board is satisfied that such prohibited requirement is no longer so imposed, and that there is no longer any such failure to comply. Until it is so satisfied it shall make no further certification to the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to such State.

ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 405. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $250,000 for all necessary expenses of the Board in administering the provisions of this title.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 406. When used in this title—

(a) The term "dependent child" means a child under the age of 16 who is living with his father, mother, grandfather, grandmother, brother, sister, stepfather, stepmother, stepbrother, stepsister, uncle, or aunt, in a residence maintained by one or more of such relatives, as his or their own home;

(b) The term "aid to dependent children" means money payments with respect to a dependent child or dependent children.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I wish to propound a parliamentary inquiry, but I will do that more appropriately after amendments are offered, if there are any.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I offer this pro forma amendment for only one purpose, and will perhaps not occupy all of the time allotted to me. I take this opportunity to develop a point which I do not think was given sufficient emphasis in the discussion on yesterday or during general debate on the bill. It is perfectly apparent to everyone that with the exception of only a few wealthy States, the rest of the States of the Union will not participate in the old-age benefits of this bill. The tragedy of this situation, Mr. Chairman, is that the indigent aged in these States which have made no provision to comply with the plan outlined in this measure—and my State is in that category—will receive no benefits whatsoever pending such qualification and yet the taxpayers of the States thus discriminated against will have to bear their share of the $15 contribution which the Federal Government will make to the favored States. To me this is a rank and unwarranted discrimination, and that was my reason for supporting the various amendments offered yesterday to correct these evils.

In the course of a debate yesterday, someone, referring to this hardship, said it was a case of "robbing Peter to pay Paul." I think a much more appropriate comparison might have been made if the speaker had said that it is a case of "robbing Lazarus to pay Dives."

Mr. Chairman, the more I contemplate the consequences that will follow the enactment of this bill as is, without provision for the discontinuance of the discrimination I have just mentioned, the more I am horrified. Each day I am receiving an increasing number of letters from indigent aged constituents, asking me when they may expect to receive their first check, and some of them, doubtless thinking the bill has already become a law, ask me how to proceed to apply for pension and requesting the necessary blanks. Mr. Chairman, it is a melancholy situation which appeals to my sense of justice and humanity!

We can get some conception of the magnitude of the problem of misery when we take into consideration that according to data compiled by actuaries of the United States Government and the large life insurance companies of America that, out of the average 65 persons who attain the age of 65, only 1 is well-to-do, 4 are able to support themselves in ordinary comfort, 5 are able to maintain themselves only partially, and 54 are totally dependent on public or private charity or upon relatives or friends. In other words, four-fifths of the people who reach the age of 65 are wholly unable to support themselves. These figures speak for themselves and clearly exemplify the tremendous gravity of the problem.

Mr. Chairman, I have exerted every means in my power to help amend this bill so as to eliminate its hardships, its injustices, its inequities, but without avail. My conscience is clear. The blood is not on my hands. Whatever glory or ignominy that may attach to this measure belongs to the Democratic administration, because in all of my legislative experience I have never seen a steam roller operate with such facility and precision. Having failed in my efforts, along with others, to enact a just and equitable old-age-pension law that would be a blessing to the indigent aged of every State in the Nation, I shall, with more or less misgivings, vote for the bill, for two reasons: First, I shall vote for it in the hope that when it reaches the Senate that body will correct the unconscionable evils perfectly manifest to me. And second, I shall vote for it in the further hope that, if the Senate shall not substantially change its provisions and the bill becomes the law of the land, that at an extra session of the Tennessee Legislature, which, I understand, will certainly be called by the Governor of my State within the next 60 or 90 days, the necessary legislation will be enacted to comply with the requirements of this measure to the end that the aged of Tennessee may participate on an equal footing with the aged of other States of this Union.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SAUTHOFF: Page 20, lines 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25, page 21, lines 1 and 2, after the word "plan", strike out "not counting so much of such expenditure with respect to any dependent child for any month as exceeds $18, or if there is more than one dependent child in the same home, as exceeds $18 for any month with respect to one such dependent child and $12 for such month with respect to each of the other dependent children."

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in offering this amendment is on the theory that $18 a month for a mother with a minor child which she must look after is entirely inadequate. This means $9 a month for the mother and $9 for the minor child. That is apparently so insufficient that it seems to me it ought to be amended.

We are giving in this bill a maximum of $30 a month to people over 65 years of age. If there are two old people, this would mean $60 a month. Why give only $18 for a young mother with a minor child? The theory of aid to dependent children in my State and in other States that have this legislation, and Wisconsin has had it for years, is that we want to preserve the mother and keep her in the home with her young child, so she will not have to go out into industry in order to try to earn her own living.

I appreciate the fact, Mr. Chairman, the argument is made that this is based on the allowances under the Veterans' Act, but may I call attention to the fact that there is a pension of $30 a month for the mother in the Veterans' Act also. You will note that there is an additional $12 in case there is a second child, which means $30 a month for 3 of them, namely, the mother and the 2 infant children. This is $1 a day to take care of three people. To me it is inconceivable that such an amount could be considered adequate.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the fact that perhaps in some of the Southern States it might be possible to do that, although I do not know. You must remember, however, that we of the Northern States have to contend with about 5 months of the year when fuel must be had.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. What is the average grant to a child in Wisconsin?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. The average?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes. We were told in committee that for 1933 and 1934 the average monthly grant per child in Wisconsin was $10.13.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I may say to the gentleman that there is only one State in the Union that has more than $18 and that is Connecticut. It runs from this amount down to a minimum of $1.99 per child, with a number of States not having any dependent children statutes at all.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. May I say in answer to the gentleman that in my own State I aided in administering the first law in the county in which I reside back in 1915. We ran as high as $60 a month. I live in a wealthy county. We perhaps were more fortunately situated than other less fortunate counties. I also appreciate the fact that in my State there are northern counties that are today insolvent and could not pay. I presume this situation is true in many other States. I take it that States like Mississippi and Arkansas, for instance, would have the greatest difficulty in meeting any kind of payment, either under the old-age-pension plan or for dependent children.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. They have no dependent-children statutes in those States.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, I merely offer the amendment as a suggestion, because I feel that the present provision is inadequate, just like I felt that $30 a month for the aged people was inadequate. I am trying to get a little more benefit.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman overlooked the fact in the discussion of these various titles, I, III, and IV, the present one being IV, that they are simply grants in aid to the States, the primary duty being upon the States to take care of the unfortunates within their own boundaries. The Federal Government proposes to help to the extent set out in this bill.

The committee has given a great deal of time and consideration to this particular phase of the subject, and it was the unanimous opinion of the committee that we were very liberal in this allowance. The money provided in this bill is in addition to what the States themselves must put up if this aid is intended, and we ask that the amendment be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MOTT) there were—ayes 19, noes 100.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CARMICHAEL. Mr. Chairman, I am not conscious of favoring all the provisions of the bill under consideration. Probably I would not have initiated it. It is not for me to know who prepared the bill. The distinguished and very able Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means assures the House that the President did not do it. Probably I would have been better pleased with it and more sanguine in my support if I knew that he did it with his own hand. In a high degree the President is responsible for all of this legislation. It is his responsibility. He will have stars in his crown if there be a crown and if there be any stars.

I have not forgotten the three departments of government under our Constitution—executive, legislative, and judicial—but all over the world in every nation and every clime the executive is most important. The legislature rejoices if it can work in harmony with the Governor and the Congress is buoyant as it follows the President's lead. Thomas Carlyle said in his Heroes and Hero Worship:

If we will think of it, no time need have gone to ruin could it have found a man great enough, a man wise and good enough wisdom to discern truly what the time wanted and valor to lead it on the right road. This is the salvation of any time.

It seems to me that the President is that man. The people of the United States found him. "The common people hear him gladly." They have a definite good wish for him. In this great emergency they are not so much interested in the Constitution, though, for one, I believe in it as I do in the Apostles' Creed. They are not so much interested in the Democratic Party, nor the Republican Party, nor in the personnel of their Congressmen, much as we think of ourselves and of each other, but they are tremendously interested in a system of relief and of government that will guarantee life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, a system that will justify the continued existence of a government that was not built "in dim eclipse nor rigged with curses vile." This house was not built on the sand. We have millions of panicky people. They have wiped out the Indian trails. They have cast the mountains into the sea. They have left their homes. The church chimes no longer call them into their places of worship. They are hungry. They are transients. They have fallen among thieves, but this does not mean a dissolution of our indestructible union of States. It calls for a reenactment of the Golden Rule, another Good Samaritan, a going back home—

'Mid pleasures and palaces though we may roam,
Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home,
A charm from the sky seems to hallow us there,
Which, seek through the world is ne'er met with elsewhere.
An exile from home, splendor dazzles in vain,
Oh, give me that lowly thatched cottage again.
The birds singing gaily, that come to my call
And that peace of mind dearer than all.

We need a rededication of our lives and all that we are to the simple life, to the permanent and paramount doctrine of self-help. I never expect to see equality of men and women or of wealth or of achievement. "One star differeth from another star in glory", I do expect to see equal opportunities. Infinite "wisdom, a word that all men love", gave us the planets and stars, the mountains and valleys, the magnificent magnolia and the humble azalea, blondes and brunettes, all different, all the perfect product of His divine handiwork. All of these are beautiful in groups, in regimentation, if you please, but the milky way is blurred, let me see Venus. The Follies are alluring, but please let me see Janet Gaynor.

The Prince of Denmark was the creation of a lone worker. The Madonna smiles at the great painter who breathed into her the deathless life. I believe in groups and armies, but after all our country is the lengthened shadow of men, of one man if you please. I want every man, every woman, every child, and every corporation to have an opportunity to pluck fruit in a lawful way from the tree of life. But what are we going to do with these thousands of young men and women just out of college who are seeking destiny? What with these young men and women not college bred, who yield easily to temptation? What with these men and women who stand here in the market places all the day idle because no man hath hired them? What with these men and women of three score years and five, who have lived by the sweat of their brows, sons and daughters of toil, who have drunk the bubbling draft down to the dregs? What with these washed-out ones, who, without sin, have come on the stage without even a crutch? What with these prattling babes who are on the stage, some of them unattended? Whence came all of these? Like sheep without a shepherd. Who has sinned, who will be the good Samaritan, who will carry them to the inn?

Is it possible that our Government has been so conducted as that we have accumulated all of these sick ones, all of these naked ones, all of these hungry ones? Is this constitutional government?

My friends, the responsibility is that of the Democratic Party, that of patriots without regard to party. We can, as I believe, under the Constitution and without violating a jot or tittle of it, put all of these on this great Ship of State.

Sail on, thou Ship of State,
Sail on, oh Union, strong and great;
Humanity, with all its fears,
With all its hopes of future years,
Is hanging, breathless, on thy fate.

Mr. Chairman, I have not given this bill the careful and long thought and consideration which it has had by the very able Ways and Means Committee, and, for this reason and others that I might mention, my opinion of it is not so important. Let me say, however, in all candor, that I would not have initiated it in all its terms. Without any effort at all, it makes me happy to concur in many of its provisions; some of them give me pain. For lack of vision and courage, I would have made a poor record had I been cast into the den of lions, or into the fiery furnace; and yet the Book says that the angel locked the lions' mouths, and that the fourth man in the furnace chilled its fires. For the same reason, I would have been most unhappy had I been called on to follow Moses across the Red Sea; but the waters banked up and there was a safe, dry way into the land of Canaan. I would have been slow to have moved in a covered wagon with the forty-niners to the far West, but the gold that these pioneers uncovered still glitters in dollars and on diamonds. I would not have enlisted with Christopher Columbus in making that long voyage over the trackless seas, and yet his incomparable courage and sovereign imagination gave mankind a new world, a new heaven, and a new earth.

"All's well that ends well." I do not see any beaten tracks. I do not see any signboards; but President Roosevelt says in a loud voice, as did Emma Sansom when she was guiding the Confederate troops under the command of the great leader Forrest over swollen streams, "I will show you the way." His voice is loud and clear. I am following him. The responsibility is his. I shall vote for the bill in all its substantial provisions, remembering the language of the immortal Lincoln when he was suffering the agony which comes from the unrequited love of friends and the hate of enemies, "This, too, will pass." [Applause.]

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words regarding this proposed bill. I do not believe this Congress ought to send out any message to the depressed people in America that they are getting an old-age-pension bill that will be of any service to them, at least for the coming year, or the fiscal year beginning July 1.

This bill figures, on the assumption that every person estimated to be of the age mentioned in the bill is eligible, $6.63 per person for the year ending June 30, 1936. In my State of Oklahoma I estimate there are 150,000 people over the age limit of this bill. This means that we will get probably $1,000,000 out of the $49,750,000 provided, and, of course, the people in my State, if they all qualify—and they cannot all qualify—will receive the princely sum of $6.63 for the first year of the operation of this bill.

We ought to be frank about it. We ought not to try to deceive these people. The distinguished Chairman of the Rules Committee got up here yesterday and made the statement that there were a lot of decent, destitute, but deluded people in America—those who favor the Townsend plan. I do not think the chairman ought to have made that statement. He does not know the people in my country. They are not deluded. I will tell you what he might have said. He might have said that they are denuded, because they have not anything to eat or anything to wear, and you can see how Dr. Townsend can get the immense following throughout the Nation that he has aroused in support of his pension plan.

A great deal of derision has been cast upon Dr. Townsend, and I think it should not have been done. He has aroused the public conscience of America and he has brought more forcefully to this Congress than anybody else that I know the articulate demands of the poor people of this country, and I will say this to you: I voted for the modified Townsend plan or the McGroarty plan, and I did it intentionally, and I did it for the purpose of trying to provide something for the people who are now hungry, without clothes, and in distress throughout this Nation.

I do say this about the pending bill: I think in all probability, after this coming year, there may be some relief for these people, but we ought not to deceive them.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this title and all amendments thereto do now close.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, I just sent to the desk an amendment to title IV. I understand it is in order, and I would like to be heard on the amendment.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I modify my request and ask unanimous consent that all debate on this title and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I think this is an appropriate time for me to submit my parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. At the conclusion of the debate on this title I wish to offer the amendment which I referred to 2 or 3 days ago, making provisions for the blind. I wish to offer this amendment as a new title to the bill and I wish to ask whether the proper time to offer this amendment will be after the vote on title IV?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; if it is offered as a new title.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It should be offered at the conclusion of the consideration of title IV?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, very briefly, speaking for a portion of the minority, it is difficult, indeed, to know how to vote on this measure. It is useless to talk about the constitutionality of it, as many have, including the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED], but we will leave that for the Supreme Court to possibly give its approval as to its constitutionality—not like the gold decision, place a curse upon it.

It is useless for the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] to talk about the fund of $33,000,000,000 and how it may be wisely used or manipulated by the fiduciary of such a tremendous power for the good or evil of our Government.

I pay tribute to the chairman of the committee and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL], whose arguments I have read, regarding State responsibility, which has been disappearing rapidly.

I am considerably troubled as to whether industry must absorb this expense or hand it along to the consumer. Secretary Wallace, in his insulting speech on Wednesday, declared that our textile plants did not absorb the processing tax, but does hand it on, as all other expenses are included in the selling price.

Certainly we should now thank the farmers of the country. Wonderful indeed is their willingness to sanction section II. They are not included in this section, and if industry can hand on the 6 percent as a part of the expenses, the farmers of the country will loyally pay the bill, and, of course, the farmers' Representatives here must know and apparently approve of it.

That very fact that the farmers will now come to the aid of industry and will willingly pay higher prices for their purchase, brought about by the taxation features of this bill, makes me willing to vote for this measure, but great is my surprise that it is being endorsed by those usually so watchful of their interests.

But what will the farmers say to their Representatives? Are you prepared to tax them to this extent to keep industrial workers only?

I should thank you cordially for this action, because it appears to be a measure that will pay a very great price.

The thought I want to convey is this: State responsibility is rapidly disappearing. Massachusetts has an old-age pension and many other social-relief measures. Wisconsin also has many such progressive laws. The Milwaukee Journal, however, says that Wisconsin has already gone too far in these matters.

Like Massachusetts, Wisconsin has made the belated discovery that social legislation may proceed too rapidly for the common good. Wisconsin has enacted a great many laws which are beneficial in themselves, but, as a whole, have handicapped her industries in their competition with those elsewhere. The consequences have been similar to those in Massachusetts. As the Milwaukee Journal expresses it:

"We have a preposterously inflated ambition to apply locally what can only be applied, without crippling ourselves, on a national scale. * * * Wisconsin isn't competent to move forward or leftward, alone or independent, too far in advance of the American parade. * * * A steady stream of additional uncertain forms * * * is bringing confusion and a creeping paralysis in Wisconsin industry. * * * Industry slowly is disintegrating under this onslaught * * * is oozing out of the State. We can "kid" ourselves all we want, but the overtures of these other more favorable localities are being given more consideration as the depression continues and the selling competition in the national market continues harsh."

For many years our Commonwealth has been enacting social laws more advanced than those of our New England and southern competitors. Local industry is now suffering from the cumulative effects. As in Wisconsin, it is seeking fields where the rules of the game apply equally to everybody. In considering new social legislation, therefore, our general court will do well to act with extreme care and to examine the statutes of our rivals.

The Wisconsin discussion centers on the enactment of a 30-hour-week bill. The argument applies equally to measures in our own legislature.

Mr. Chairman, Wisconsin says that, like Massachusetts today, she is now in dire straits in her industries. The National Government must now do it. Our poor old Federal Government! With a ceiling of $50,000,000,000 debt already in sight! But, if industry can really pass this on to the farmer, why should we from the industrial States vote against this measure? During the last several years we have tried to do much for the farmer. Also, I repeat, and in spite of the warning of our friend Mr. HUDDLESTON on yesterday—who wants now to speak plainly about it—that this is only another long step toward a central government. Let us get ready to give up our statehood rights. Consider the Florida situation: Fifty-five million last year without matching a dollar! She exempts homes from any taxation up to $5,000! Practically all municipal treasuries are empty!

Of course, the Federal Government will take care of Florida, but Florida's Senators will still desire to write the tariff bill for New England, will they not? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JENKINS: Page 23, after line 23, insert the following new title:

"TITLE V—GRANTS TO STATES FOR AID TO BLIND INDIVIDUALS

"APPROPRIATION

"SECTION 501. For the purpose of enabling each State to furnish financial assistance assuring, as far as practicable under the conditions in such State, a reasonable subsistence compatible with decency and health to blind individuals without such subsistence, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $9,950,000, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year thereafter a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of this title. The sums made available under this section shall be used for making payments to States which have submitted, and had approved by the Board, State plans for aid to blind individuals.

"STATE PLANS FOR AID TO BLIND INDIVIDUALS

"SEC. 502. (a) A State plan for aid to blind individuals must (1) provide that it shall be in effect in all political subdivisions of the State, and, if administered by them, be mandatory upon them; (2) provide for financial participation by the State; (3) either provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to administer the plan, or provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to supervise the administration of the plan; (4) provide for granting to any blind individual, whose claim for aid is denied, an opportunity for a fair hearing before such State agency; (5) provide such methods of administration (other than those relating to selection, tenure of office, and compensation of personnel) as are found by the Board to be necessary for the efficient operation of the plan; and (6) provide that the State agency will make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the board may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as the board may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports.

"(b) The board shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a), except that it shall not approve any plan which imposes as a condition of eligibility for aid to blind individuals, a residence requirement which denies aid with respect to any blind individual who has resided in the State for 5 years immediately preceding the application for such aid.

"PAYMENT TO STATES

"SEC. 503. (a) From the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has an approved plan for aid to blind individuals, for each quarter, beginning with the quarter commencing July 1, 1935, an amount, which shall be used exclusively for carrying out the State plan, equal to one-half of the total of the sums expended during such quarter under such plan, not counting so much of such expenditure with respect to any blind individual for any month as exceeds $30.

"(b) The method of computing and paying such amounts shall be as follows:

"(1) The board shall, prior to the beginning of each quarter, estimate the amount to be paid to the State for such quarter under the provisions of subsection (a), such estimate to be based on (A) a report filed by the State containing its estimate of the total sum to be expended in such quarter in accordance with the provisions of such subsection and stating the amount appropriated or made available by the State and its political subdivisions for such expenditures in such quarter, and if such amount is less than one-half of the total sum of such estimated expenditures, the source or sources from which the difference is expected to be derived, (B) records showing the number of blind individuals in the State, and (C) such other investigation as the board may find necessary.

"(2) The board shall then certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount so estimated by the board, reduced or increased, as the case may be, by any sum by which it finds that its estimate for any prior quarter was greater or less than the amount which should have been paid to the State for such quarter, except to the extent that such sum has been applied to make the amount certified for any prior quarter greater or less than the amount estimated by the board for such prior quarter.

"(3) The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon, through the Division of Disbursement of the Treasury Department and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, pay to the State, at the time or times fixed by the board, the amount so certified.

"OPERATION OF STATE PLANS

"SEC. 504. In the case of any State plan for aid to blind individuals which has been approved by the board, if the board, after notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of such plan, finds—

"(1) that the plan has been so changed as to impose any residence requirement prohibited by section 502 (b), or that in the administration of the plan any such prohibited requirement is imposed, with the knowledge of such State agency, in a substantial number of cases; or

"(2) that in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with any provision required by section 502 (a) to be included in the plan;

the board shall notify such State agency that further payments will not be made to the State until the Board is satisfied that such prohibited requirement is no longer so imposed, and that there is no longer any such failure to comply. Until it is so satisfied it shall make no further certification to the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to such State.

"ADMINISTRATION

"SEC. 505. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $50,000 for all necessary expenses of the board in administering the provisions of this title.

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 506. When used in this title—

"(a) The term 'blind individual' means a blind person over the age of 16 and under the age of 65;

"(b) The term 'aid to blind individuals' means money payments to blind individuals."

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, this amendment which I have offered is worthy of the most careful consideration of all of you and also of your espousal and of your vote. This is an amendment to title IV. Title IV, as you know, provides $25,000,000 for aid to dependent children. This is, in effect, a relief for widows and children. This amendment that I am offering is in the same language and provides the same system of administration in every detail that is provided for dependent children. It provides for an appropriation of $10,000,000 for aid to the poor and needy blind of our whole country. This is the most deserving class of people that we know anything about and I am appealing to the sense of fairness of the Democratic leaders to permit their membership the freedom to vote as their conscience dictates for once at least. My friends, I ask you, Who comes under the glance of your eye that needs assistance any more than the poor blind man that holds out the tin cup on the street corner? Who is it that elicits your sympathies more than the poor blind beggar? I am sure that you agree with me that there is no affliction worse than blindness when accompanied with poverty. All my life I have maintained that there should be no poor blind. In this great land of plenty we should see to it that no man afflicted with blindness is compelled to beg for his morsel of bread or for the pennies with which to buy his food. In this bill relief is extended to the aged and to the crippled children and to the mothers, but the poor blind man is the forgotten man. God pity us if we do not on this, one of the greatest days in the year—Good Friday, feel some of that compassion that the Savior showed toward the poor blind with whom He came in contact. With the rich man flying by in his limousine, with the athlete skipping by in the full flower of health, with the grand lady in her rustling silks passing by with her vain superiority complex, with the happy care-free children, and with the great concourse of humanity, some care-free and some care-encumbered passing and repassing, in sunshine and in shadow, there sits the poor blind man with his little tin cup extended. Are you going to leave him on the street or will you assist me to put him upon his feet?

Should there be any prejudice because this amendment is offered by a Republican I am perfectly willing to ask unanimous consent to withdraw my name from it and insert the name of any Democrat that you select.

There is no doubt that you have all had sympathy for the blind man with the tin cup on the street corner, and no doubt you have resolved if the time ever came that you could relieve his poverty or his affliction you would like to do something for him in a big way. Here is your chance. Include him within the provision and protection of this bill. What is it going to cost? Just a little measly $10,000,000. There was a time when this would be considered a large sum but not since Franklin D. Roosevelt came upon the scene. If the experts say that is too much, we will cut it down one million or two million and if they say that is not enough, we will add a million or two. All I want to do is to do something for the poor blind man and the poor blind woman.

Let them have a little bit of consideration from the time they are 18 years old until they are 65. We are not even asking that this bill carry them beyond 65, because then we feel that they will then be eligible to an old-age pension. Surely they are entitled to that when they get to be 65 years of age. What can be wrong with this amendment? Why not vote for it? Why not pass it? I know that those charged with the responsibility of securing the passage of this bill have great pride in their skill and technique in parliamentary maneuvering, but that should not be enough to keep you from doing your duty by the poor blind man who holds out the tin cup to you today. Pride of a capable congressional leader in his handiwork does not restore the sight of the poor blind man nor appease his hunger. I, too, have pride in this bill. I spent many weeks in the committee hearings working on it. I think this bill is put together from the standpoint of English and correct legal language better than any bill that has ever come into this House. It is almost a perfect bill in that respect. As you know, I have been on the floor for days as we have been considering this bill, and I have fought two titles of this bill as vigorously as I could, and I have no apology to make to anybody in the world for that. If I had any more capacity, I would use it against title II and title VIII, but I am going to vote for this bill regardless of title II and title VIII. Why do you leaders not have some consideration? Why can you not go along and give the blind man a chance? Why not add this amendment and give the blind man the same consideration that is given all others?

This amendment is drawn exactly like the amendment for widows and children. There are no parliamentary obstacles. You cannot challenge it on a point of order. It appeals to your sense of fairness and justice. It grips your heart in the vise of sympathy. It will meet with the universal approval of the people. Why then, in the name of common sense, cannot we put an amendment like this into this bill? Is there any reason why you cannot provide a substitute for the nickel or the dime for the tin cup of the blind man on the street corner? I am going to leave it to you, and if you do not raise up to meet your responsibility I am going to be deeply disappointed, because I know, in your hearts, that you have compassion. I also know that you have the votes, and I know that the President in the White House will not castigate any of you for asserting yourselves and doing something on this great day—Good Friday—that will be an honor to you and to your country, and a benefit to the most pitiable group that any of us know.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I am going to vote for the amendment because I think a blind man is in worse shape than an old man with two good eyes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I am glad one Democrat has stood up and said he would vote for the amendment. I hope all of you will do the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] has expired. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS]. The gentleman from Ohio is a diligent, able, and faithful member of the Ways and Means Committee, as well as one of the ablest men of this House. I know he is sincere and modest in this matter, but this question was thoroughly considered in the committee, and if at that time the gentleman's sympathy had been aroused to the degree of emotion that it is at present, my memory does not serve me well—although, of course, we always have the privilege of amending our thoughts or changing our position.

This question was discussed at length in our committee. The reason that the provision containing the substance of the amendment was not adopted in committee was that it was represented in committee that the blind people, on whom the hand of affliction for some unknown reason, has been laid so heavily and for whom we have the deepest and most profound sympathy, were, perhaps, better taken care of now, more adequately and more humanely taken care of, than any other class of people in the United States. Now, that was not disputed. That fact was not controverted. I think the gentleman from Arkansas, a member of the committee, brought up the question, and it was debated at length. It was represented that in practically all States there are homes in which the blind are humanely and adequately cared for. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] knows this. The appeal which this class of unfortunate people makes to the human instincts and impulse, regardless of party, is a stronger appeal than that made, perhaps, by any other class of people. For that reason the States have taken great pains to care for and provide for this unfortunate class of people.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. If I withdraw my name from this amendment and ask that the name of the gentleman from North Carolina be substituted, will the gentleman accept it?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Oh, does the gentleman think it is jealousy? That is interpreting my position on most too low an estimate. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that statement, and I hope he would not think I am opposing this only because of pride of authorship. I know the gentleman does not feel that way about it. I know the gentleman knows we cannot take care of every deserving class of people in this bill. We cannot go all the way at one journey. We are doing more than has ever been done in any piece of legislation for unfortunate people. This is one class of unfortunate people that it was explained fully to the committee were better taken care of than any other class of people. As far as concerns the State, which I have the honor in part to represent, I know the blind are well taken care of in contrast or comparison with other classes of dependent humanity.

Another thing, we do not have the data. We have no information about this. This amendment has been brought up here on the spur of the moment. To consider an amendment having this far-reaching effect, we should have all the facts. I am sure that with the influence my friend has, he can have it put on in the other body.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JENKINS of Ohio) there were ayes 54 and noes 100.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE V—GRANTS TO STATES FOR MATERNAL AND CHILD WELFARE

PART 1—MATERNAL AND CHILD HEALTH SERVICES

Appropriation

SECTION 501. For the purpose of enabling each State to extend and improve, as far as practicable under the conditions in such State, services for promoting the health of mothers and children, especially in rural areas and in areas suffering from severe economic distress, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $3,800,000. The sums made available under this section shall be used for making payments to States which have submitted, and had approved by the Chief of the Children's Bureau, State plans for such services.

Allotments to States

SEC. 502. (a) Out of the sums appropriated pursuant to section 501 for each fiscal year the Secretary of Labor shall allot to each State $20,000, and such part of $1,800,000 as he finds that the number of live births in such State bears to the total number of live births in the United States.

(b) Out of the sums appropriated pursuant to section 501 for each fiscal year the Secretary of Labor shall allot to the States $980,000 (in addition to the allotments made under subsection (a)), according to the financial need of each State for assistance in carrying out its State plan, as determined by him after taking into consideration the number of live births in such State.

(c) The amount of any allotment to a State under subsection (a) for any fiscal year remaining unpaid to such State at the end of such fiscal year shall be available for payment to such State under section 504 until the end of the second succeeding fiscal year. No payment to a State under section 504 shall be made out of its allotment for any fiscal year until its allotment for the preceding fiscal year has been exhausted or has ceased to be available.

Approval of State plans

SEC. 503. (a) A State plan for maternal and child-health services must (1) provide for financial participation by the State; (2) provide for the administration of the plan or the supervision of the administration of the plan by the State health agency; (3) provide such methods of administration (other than those relating to selection, tenure of office, and compensation of personnel) as are found by the Chief of the Children's Bureau to be necessary for the efficient operation of the plan; (4) provide that the State health agency will make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Secretary of Labor may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as he may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports; (5) provide for the extension and improvement of local maternal and child-health services administered by local child-health units; (6) provide for cooperation with medical, nursing, and welfare groups and organizations; and (7) provide for the development of demonstration services in needy areas and among groups in special need.

(b) The Chief of the Children's Bureau shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a) and shall thereupon notify the Secretary of Labor and the State health agency of his approval.

Payment to States

SEC. 504. (a) From the sums appropriated therefor and the allotments available under section 502 (a), the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has an approved plan for maternal and child-health services, for each quarter, beginning July 1, 1935, an amount, which shall be used exclusively for carrying out the State plan, equal to one-half of the total sum expended during such quarter for carrying out such plan.

(b) The method of computing and paying such amounts shall be as follows:

(1) The Secretary of Labor shall, prior to the beginning of each quarter, estimate the amount to be paid to the State for such quarter under the provisions of subsection (a), such estimate to be based on (A) a report filed by the State containing its estimate of the total sum to be expended in such quarter in accordance with the provisions of such subsection and stating the amount appropriated or made available by the State for such expenditures in such quarter, and if such amount is less than one-half of the total sum of such estimated expenditures, the source or sources from which the difference is expected to be derived, and (B) such investigation as he may find necessary.

(2) The Secretary of Labor shall then certify the amount so estimated by him to the Secretary of the Treasury, reduced or increased, as the case may be, by any sum by which the Secretary of Labor finds that his estimate for any prior quarter was greater or less than the amount which should have been paid to the State for such quarter, except to the extent that such sum has been applied to make the amount certified for any prior quarter greater or less than the amount estimated by the Secretary of Labor for such prior quarter.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon, through the Division of Disbursement of the Treasury Department, and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, pay to the State, at the time or times fixed by the Secretary of Labor, the amount so certified.

(c) The Secretary of Labor shall from time to time certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amounts to be paid to the States from the allotments available under section 502 (b), and the Secretary of the Treasury shall, through the Division of Disbursement of the Treasury Department, and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, make payments of such amounts from such allotments at the time or times specified by the Secretary of Labor.

Operation of State plans

SEC. 505. In the case of any State plan for maternal and child-health services which has been approved by the Chief of the Children's Bureau, if the Secretary of Labor, after notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of such plan, finds that in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with any provision required by section 503 to be included in the plan, he shall notify such State agency that further payments will not be made to the State until he is satisfied that there is no longer any such failure to comply. Until he is so satisfied he shall make no further certification to the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to such State.

PART 2—SERVICES FOR CRIPPLED CHILDREN

(b) The amount of any allotment to a State under subsection (a) for any fiscal year remaining unpaid to such State at the end of such fiscal year shall be available for payment to such State under section 514 until the end of the second succeeding fiscal year. No payment to a State under section 514 shall be made out of its allotment for any fiscal year until its allotment for the preceding fiscal year has been exhausted or has ceased to be available.

(b) The Chief of the Children's Bureau shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a) and shall thereupon notify the Secretary of Labor and the State agency of his approval.

Payment to States

(b) The method of computing and paying such amounts shall be as follows:

(1) The Secretary of Labor shall, prior to the beginning of each quarter, estimate the amount to be paid to the State for such quarter under the provisions of subsection (a), such estimate to be based on (A) a report filed by the State containing its estimate of the total sum to be expended in such quarter in accordance with the provisions of such subsection and stating the amount appropriated or made available by the State for such expenditures in such quarter, and if such amount is less than one-half of the total sum of such estimated expenditures, the source or sources from which the difference is expected to be derived, and (B) such investigation as he may find necessary.

Until he is so satisfied he shall make no further certification to the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to such State.

PART 3. CHILD-WELFARE SERVICES

SEC. 521. For the purpose of enabling the United States, through the Children's Bureau, to cooperate with State public-welfare agencies in establishing, extending, and strengthening, in rural areas, public-welfare services for the protection and care of homeless, dependent, and neglected children, and children in danger of becoming delinquent, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $1,500,000. Such amount shall be allotted for use by cooperating State public-welfare agencies, to each State $10,000, and such part of the balance as the rural population of such State bears to the total rural population of the United States. The amount so allotted shall be expended for payment of part of the costs of county and local child-welfare services in rural areas. The amount of any allotment to a State under this section for any fiscal year remaining unpaid to such State at the end of such fiscal year shall be available for payment to such State under this section until the end of the second succeeding fiscal year. No payment to a State under this section shall be made out of its allotment for any fiscal year until its allotment for the preceding fiscal year has been exhausted or has ceased to be available.

PART 4—VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION

SEC. 531. (a) In order to enable the United States to cooperate with the States and Hawaii in extending and strengthening their programs of vocational rehabilitation of the physically disabled, and to continue to carry out the provisions and purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment", approved June 2, 1920, as amended (U. S. C., title 29, ch. 4; U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 29, secs. 31, 32, 34, 35, 37, 39, and 40), there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1936, and June 30, 1937, the sum of $841,000 for each such fiscal year in addition to the amount of the existing authorization, and for each fiscal year thereafter the sum of $1,938,000. Of the sums appropriated pursuant to such authorization for each fiscal year, $5,000 shall be apportioned to the Territory of Hawaii and the remainder shall be apportioned among the several States in the manner provided in such act of June 2, 1920, as amended.

(b) For the administration of such act of June 2, 1920, as amended, by the Federal agency authorized to administer it, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1936, and June 30, 1937, the sum of $22,000 for each such fiscal year in addition to the amount of the existing authorization, and for each fiscal year thereafter the sum of $102,000.

PART 5—ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 541. (a) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $425,000, for all necessary expenses of the Children's Bureau in administering the provisions of this title.

(b) The Children's Bureau shall make such studies and investigations as will promote the efficient administration of this title.

(c) The Secretary of Labor shall include in his annual report to Congress a full account of the administration of this title, except section 531.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PETERSON of Florida: Page 25, line 15, after the word "State", strike out the semicolon and insert the following: " or political subdivisions thereof ".

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, the proposed amendment is for the purpose of allowing participation by States which, under their constitution, cannot participate as States. There are certain State constitutions which place certain limitations and, in some instances, certain specific duties upon political subdivisions of the State. In my own particular State—Florida—section 3 of article XIII of the constitution reads as follows:

The respective counties of the State shall provide in the manner prescribed by law for those of the inhabitants that by reason of age, infirmity, or misfortune may have claims upon the aid and sympathy of society.

In certain portions of this bill it is generally stated that the local contribution will be contribution by political subdivisions, but in the plan itself, not only in this place but in the preceding title with reference to old-age pensions and in the subsequent section on page 30, line 12, it provides for financial participation by States.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think the gentleman is properly calling to the attention of the House a very pertinent matter—whether or not some States will be precluded from participating under this bill—whether or not under their constitution they have the power to submit a State plan is a very important question. Of course, none of us want any State excluded. However, the gentleman and his colleagues are to be complimented for calling this matter to our attention and having it rectified if necessary. I will say, however, the committee had given consideration to this question. Also, as a result of a talk which I had with the gentleman from Florida yesterday, I have looked into the matter further, and I have been assured that this does not exclude any State. I understand that while Florida cannot contribute directly to beneficiaries and that it must be done through the counties, nevertheless Florida can contribute something toward the administration, and if the State constitution precludes direct participation or direct aid to its own citizens, but provides that it must be done through the political subdivisions, yet if it can contribute something toward the administration of the plan, that, in my opinion, will meet the provisions of this law. I am assured that Florida, under those conditions, can participate. Other States are similarly situated.

I do not know how many of the present States with old-age-pension laws have similar constitutional provisions. I understand that some have, and the constitutional provisions have not prevented the passage of such legislation. The matter is being further investigated, however, and if there is any doubt I will join with the gentleman, and I know I can speak for my colleagues of the committee in seeing that an appropriate amendment is put in the bill in the Senate; but we have been assured that the present provision does not preclude any State in the Union from submitting a State plan.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Do I understand from the gentleman's statement that it is the intention of the committee which held the hearings upon this subject and which drafted this bill, that the verbiage of this title shall be construed as including participation even to the extent of $1 or by local subdivisions?

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly; if any State contributes even $1 toward administration, it meets that provision of this bill on administration. I have been assured that if a State, the constitution of which prohibits direct contribution, contributes any amount for administration it complies with the provisions of the bill.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Does it apply equally to administrative costs and contributions to beneficiaries?

Mr. McCORMACK. My understanding is—and my information came only this morning, but it came from one in whom I have confidence and one who has advised the committee—that it applies to the administrative cost. There will be this reservation, however, so that the gentleman will not press his amendment now, that the matter is being further looked into. While I cannot speak for the other members of the committee, not having talked to them on the subject, I am sure I bespeak their favorable consideration; and I will join with the gentleman in trying to have a proper amendment put into the bill to take care of the situation in the Senate, if later we find it necessary.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts, in view of the explanation he has given, which will, in the event of construction by the courts, throw light on the intent of the provision, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: Page 26, line 5, after the semicolon, strike out the word "and"; and in line 7, after "need", insert a semicolon and the following: "and (8) provided that the services furnished under the plan shall not extend to any child over 1 year of age."

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like the attention of the members of the committee for just a minute. This section, of course, reminds us of the Sheppard-Towner Act; it is back here, but in a little different form. The Sheppard-Towner Act was discontinued by Congress. I was opposed to the continuance of the Sheppard-Towner Act. It had served its purpose by stimulating action in the States. During the period that the act was in force I made quite an extensive investigation as to what the money was being spent for. So did the American Medical Association. The legal definition of "infant" or of "child" is "one under 21 years of age." Unless we provide in this bill a definition within the meaning of the act, so we can designate what the money under this section can be spent for, we shall find the same situation as we did under the Sheppard-Towner Act. For instance, the State of Pennsylvania used the money that was supposed to take care of the mother and child at the time of birth, to fix the teeth of school children 15 years of age; and other States used the money for various purposes other than those contemplated by the act, or at least what those responsible for the act thought the money was to be used for. Therefore, as in common law, any person under the age of 21 is a child or an infant. I simply seek to place in the bill a proviso that, so far as this money is concerned, it cannot be used except for the purpose intended. I know you cannot strike out the word "child." If you wish the money used for the purpose intended, adopt my amendment limiting the spending of this money on a child not over 1 year of age. That will accomplish the purpose. I think it is a good amendment; it is simply a clarifying amendment, and I hope the committee will agree to it. If there are objections to the amendment, I should like to hear from some member of the committee.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Missouri is one of the most capable men serving in this body. He has stated the purpose of his amendment; but the amendment, of course, is much broader than he contemplates. Part I, to which he offers this amendment, is that portion of the bill which deals with maternal and child health services; it is under the general title of grants to States for maternal and child welfare. The amendment the gentleman offers, it seems to me, quite seriously endangers the use of this money for maternal care; and I know the gentleman does not have that in mind.

Mr. COCHRAN. I am following the suggestion of the legislative counsel, the one who assisted the committee, in offering the amendment at this place.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I am speaking of the language of the amendment. I do not believe the gentleman quite appreciates the extent of the effect of his amendment. The point is that part I provides for grants in aid, Federal contributions, to a State or States.

The age of the child should not be fixed by the Federal Congress. That is a matter which is left to the discretion of the legislatures of the States. In other words, there may be a difference in the age in one State from the age in other States.

Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the committee to the fact that under section 502 (a) you have a Federal grant, $20,000 annually per State; then you have an appropriation of $1,800,000 that must be matched by the States. I believe that the Congress can well leave it to the discretion of the States to define who are children, and to fix in the State law the age of the children that would be affected by the money with which they match the Federal money. In section (b) you have $980,000 that does not have to be matched. This money is distributed according to the financial needs of each State for the assistance contained in this section of the bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman well knows there are various States of the Union that are absolutely opposed to this class of legislation. If I am not mistaken, the State of Massachusetts took the Sheppard-Towner Act to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I may say to the gentleman that any State opposed to this character of legislation does not have to provide one single thin dime to match a thin dime of Federal money.

Mr. COCHRAN. If the State of Pennsylvania, for instance, not approving of the Sheppard-Towner Act to which I just referred, used that money to take care of school children's teeth, what is going to prevent it from doing so unless there is some proviso in here limiting the age of the child to be taken care of?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That is a question for the State of Pennsylvania to decide what it wanted to do.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman has an objective. Does he want the State of Pennsylvania to set that objective aside and get the money to be used by them for purposes that are not intended by this bill, by the committee or Congress?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. We do not intend to invade the State jurisdiction and State discretion. I believe I know the gentleman and his philosophy well enough to know that he is on our end of the single tree in this respect.

Mr. COCHRAN. I agree with the gentleman as to that, but I do not think the States of the Union should be permitted to use money which the Government is going to advance for purposes other than the purposes for which this bill is passed. That is my reason for offering the amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PFEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PFEIFER: On page 24, line 12, change "$3,800,000" to "$5,000,000"; line 19, change "$20,000" to "$50,000", and change "$1,800,000" to "$2,000,000"; and in line 24 change "$980,000" to "$1,000,000."

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PFEIFER. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this title and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. PFEIFER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment does not materially change the purposes of the bill. It only increases the amount to that which is absolutely necessary to take care of unfortunate mothers and children, the real foundation of our country. The sum of money that this bill calls for, $3,800,000, will not take care of those unfortunates who are entitled to that which is necessary for the welfare of this country.

Mr. Chairman, may I go back to the record for a minute and say that in 1933 the birthrate was 16.6. Over 2,000,000 babies were born in the United States. To be exact, the number was 2,082,000. That is less than any time since 1916. However, the death rate was 10.7. In other words, 1,342,000 babies died, more than half of the number which were born. The small amount of money that this bill calls for in order to take care of those unfortunate victims is far below that which is essential to serve the purposes of this bill. I, therefore, ask for your consideration in connection with an adequate sum of money in order to carry out the purposes set out in the bill.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment, and will take only a moment.

Mr. Chairman, these amounts have been arrived at after a most careful and thorough consideration by the committee. The Chief of the Children's Bureau, and other officials connected or related with this work, gave us the benefit of the best information available on this subject, and we arrived at the amount set out in this bill after a careful and thorough consideration of all these matters. We therefore ask, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment be rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PFEIFER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KENNEY: On page 35, line 2, after the word "and", insert the word "also."

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, the insertion of the additional word will not change the meaning of this particular part of the bill. It will, however, add emphasis, and I think that we ought to be a little more emphatic with respect to vocational rehabilitation.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I did not get the place where the gentleman's amendment applies.

Mr. KENNEY. On page 35, line 2.

Mr. Chairman, the insertion of the word will, I believe, bring home to the States more emphatic approbation of the wonderful accomplishments that are being had under vocational rehabilitation. Because I think it is very pertinent, I should like to read a letter which I received from the efficient, humane director of the New Jersey Rehabilitation Commission, Mr. J. J. Toohey, Jr. The letter is as follows:

STATE OF NEW JERSEY,
REHABILITATION COMMISSION,
Newark, N. J., April 17, 1935.

Hon. EDWARD A. KENNEY,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The New Jersey Rehabilitation Commission, as you perhaps know, comprises the following members: Dr. Fred H. Albee, Mrs. A. Harry Moore, Mr. Joseph G. Buch, Dr. Charles H. Elliott, Hon. William J. Ellis, Mr. Thomas F. Martin, Mr. Bernard Hollander, and myself.

It is the obligation of our commission to cooperate with those citizens of our State who are crippled and who may be subject to physical and vocational rehabilitation, to the end that they may ultimately become self-supporting and self-sustaining.

You undoubtedly appreciate the fact that our State has established a most favorable reputation throughout the Nation as relating to the rehabilitation of our crippled children and adults. This fine work has been due to the coordination of the efforts of the service clubs of the State, the State boards of freeholders, the medical profession, and the cooperation our commission receives from the State's crippled children's commission.

I am writing you in this regard because the New Jersey Rehabilitation Commission is intensely interested in part 4, vocational-rehabilitation section, of the general security bill, H. R. 7260.

Rehabilitation of the crippled citizens of our State has never been a controversial subject. It affects the welfare of approximately 35,000 physical handicaps in New Jersey.

The Federal Government since 1920 has cooperated with New Jersey and other States in this humanitarian field of endeavor, and in behalf of our commission I am respectfully asking your support of part 4 of the aforementioned bill.

Would you be good enough to kindly advise me in this regard?

Sincerely,

J. J. TOOHEY, Jr.,
Director New Jersey Rehabilitation Commission.

I am happy right now to advise our solicitous director from the floor of this House that this part of the bill meets with my hearty approval, and I am going to vote for it along with the other worthy provisions of the bill.

In matters of vocational rehabilitation and adult and child welfare New Jersey commands a leading position, and no word of our progress in these things would be complete without paying tribute to a man who has been foremost in our endeavors along these lines and in his regard and solicitude for our crippled children—A. HARRY MOORE, United States Senator from New Jersey.

As our Governor, he has never lost interest in the little children. In his honor and for all that he has done for the afflicted little ones, there stands today in Jersey City a home which houses many of the most needy of them. It bears his name and is widely known as "The A. Harry Moore Home for Crippled Children." Senator MOORE stands out for his many accomplishments as Governor of our State, and he is beloved and held in highest esteem because of what he did for those injured in industry and for the mothers and crippled children of our State. In the Senate of the United States he will, I am sure, prove to be the leading proponent of the humane works and deeds he so nobly carried out in New Jersey and for which he holds a very warm spot in the hearts of all of the people of our State. By his presence in the Senate, this provision of the bill will be friended as will all humane legislation of its kind; and, in consequence, this country will profit. [Applause.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE VI—PUBLIC HEALTH WORK

APPROPRIATION

SECTION 601. For the purpose of assisting States, counties, health districts, and other political subdivisions of the States in establishing and maintaining adequate public-health services, including the training of personnel for State and local health work, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $8,000,000 to be used as hereinafter provided.

STATE AND LOCAL PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICES

SEC. 602 (a) The Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall, at the beginning of each fiscal year, allot to the States the total of (1) the amount appropriated for such year pursuant to section 601; and (2) the amounts of the allotments under this section for the preceding fiscal year remaining unpaid to the States at the end of such fiscal year. The amounts of such allotments shall be determined on the basis of (1) the population; (2) the special health problems; and (3) the financial needs of the respective States. Upon making such allotments the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service shall certify the amounts thereof to the Secretary of the Treasury.

(b) The amount of an allotment to any State under subsection (a) for any fiscal year remaining unpaid at the end of such fiscal year shall be available for allotment to States under subsection (a) for the succeeding fiscal year in addition to the amount appropriated for such year.

(c) Prior to the beginning of each quarter of the fiscal year the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service shall, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, determine in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by such Surgeon General after consultation with a conference of the State and Territorial health authorities, the amount to be paid to each State for such quarter from the allotment to such State, and shall certify the amount so determined to the Secretary of the Treasury. Upon receipt of such certification, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, through the Division of Disbursement of the Treasury Department and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, pay in accordance with such certification.

(d) The moneys so paid to any State shall be expended solely in carrying out the purposes specified in section 601 and in accordance with plans presented by the health authority of such State and approved by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service.

INVESTIGATIONS

SEC. 603. (a) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $2,000,000 for expenditure by the Public Health Service for investigation of disease and problems of sanitation (including the printing and binding of the findings of such investigations), and for the pay and allowances and traveling expenses of personnel of the Public Health Service, including commissioned officers, engaged in such investigations or detailed to cooperate with the health authorities of any State in carrying out the purposes specified in section 601: Provided, That no personnel of the Public Health Service shall be detailed to cooperate with the health authorities of any State except at the request of the proper authorities of such State.

(b) The personnel of the Public Health Service paid from any appropriation not made pursuant to subsection (a) may be detailed to assist in carrying out the purposes of this title. The appropriation from which they are paid shall be reimbursed from the appropriation made pursuant to subsection (a) to the extent of their salaries and allowances for services performed while so detailed.

(c) The Secretary of the Treasury shall include in his annual report to Congress a full account of the administration of this title.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, for several months, and during a large part of the time when this splendid Ways and Means Committee was working on this social-security bill which is now before the House and also during a large part of the time when the Committee on Economic Security, appointed by President Roosevelt, pursuant to his message to Congress of June 8, 1934, was working on this same vital subject, Members of Congress have been deluged with letters and petitions by the advocates of the so-called "Townsend plan."

The originator of the Townsend plan, Dr. Townsend, had furnished a plan whereby each of its beneficiaries would have $200 a month for the rest of their lives, and the only condition required, in addition to their age and need, was that they must immediately spend the said $200 a month. Hundreds of thousands of people approaching the twilight of their lives were led to believe in this as they believe in God. Many of them, in anticipation, have in their imaginations already been spending the money. The fallacy, the utter sham of the Townsend plan, is shown by the fact that the maker and proponents of the plan have had to revise it once, twice, and now, I think, three times, so that now, in the consideration of the social-security bill, we had before us a Townsend plan which its makers even are compelled to admit would not furnish $200 a month to its beneficiaries, but would furnish only, at the most, $50 a month and with no sound, just, and practical means provided for even raising that amount of money.

After the many able speeches that have been made by the members of the Ways and Means Committee who brought out this real social-security bill, and the explanation made by them and other supporters of the bill, there is little in the very limited time that I have been able to devote to the study of the bill and the voluminous hearings and reports made by the Committee on Economic Security and the Ways and Means Committee or in the brief space of time at my disposal today that would add anything to clarify or explain this bill or strengthen its support. I do want to congratulate the Ways and Means Committee on the splendid work they have done. Where so many have contributed so much, to single out any one person who has helped to give us this bill, or to make comparisons between them, would be idle and unjust; but I cannot refrain from speaking of a few whose labors for the benefit of the Congress and the benefit of the country stand out. Two from my own State of New York, Senator WAGNER and Secretary of Labor Perkins, were among the pioneers. Secretary Perkins' statement before this committee was classical in its simplicity and clearness and the comprehensive grasp shown of the whole subject. On this committee the able chairman, Mr. DOUGHTON, Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL, of Washington, my good friend Mr. LEWIS of Maryland, Mr. COOPER of Tennessee, Mr. VINSON of Kentucky, Mr. MCCORMACK, of Massachusetts, have all given us a splendid service. I have read in the RECORD, after listening to them on the floor, two great speeches made by two members of the Ways and Means Committee on this bill, one by Mr. LEWIS of Maryland and one by Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. It is a good bill for the beginning of raising the structure of economic and social security. It is, of course, not the finished edifice; as Mr. LEWIS of Maryland has said, "you have to have the foundation before you can erect the building."

I have read only a small part of the several thousand pages of the report of the Committee on Economic Security and of the hearings of the Ways and Means Committee on this bill, and I can add little on the bill. There are some things, however, for the benefit of the country that ought to be said about this Townsend plan and some of its advocates. So far as I could find, there has been more sound than sense, and more oratory and rhetoric than reason and facts and figures produced by its advocates.

I have no respect for the man who will delude the people with false hopes. "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick." It was a cruel thing for Dr. Townsend to make some hundreds of thousands of people, nearing the twilight of their lives, believe that they would soon receive a comfortable living, and that all they have to do is to spend the money. The original Townsend plan, it was estimated by its advocates, would cost at least $20,000,000,000 a year. There is only one place from which taxes can come in the last analysis, and that is from our total earnings as a people. Our total income is probably a little less than fifty billions a year. A plan that provides for taking 40 percent of our total income would, of course, have meant the end of our economic structure, and the fact that it is disguised by being a tax on transactions only conceals but does not take away its utter unsoundness. I suppose a great many of the Members of Congress have been petitioned by thousands of people, honest, well-meaning, and well-intentioned, but led astray by the originator and advocates of this plan.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. I am not quite sure whether the Townsend plan was simply a vague, beautiful dream or whether it was a racket designed to take money out of the pockets of those already impoverished. At any rate, I propose to make it known to my constituents and to as many of the Townsend victims as possible that I contended against a gag rule on this bill and for an open rule, and I propose to make it known, as far as tongue and pen can do it, that I would have voted against the Townsend plan or any of the other unsound plans had they come to a record vote. I thought an open rule on this bill would serve the same purpose as sometimes is served by the surgical operation necessary to remove a malignant growth from the physical body.

The people of my district elected me to represent them and to represent all the people of this country, as is the case with all the other Members of this body. And in order to do this they intended me to be governed by reason, and not by propaganda, and to use my own best judgment; and before I will fail in that duty and violate the oath I took, by voting for and helping to fasten upon my country a thing which would destroy its economic system, a thing which I know to be unsound, I will, if necessary, let the people retire me at the end of this term or any other term and go back to my little law shop and practice law.

The able Chairman of the Rules Committee of this House, Mr. O'CONNOR, of New York, said, in bringing out and explaining this very liberal and open rule on this bill which the Rules Committee reported, that he hoped that the Townsend plan would be held to be germane to this bill in order that it might be voted on and in order that he might vote against it. That was true leadership. [Applause.] I am glad to follow such leadership, because that is the way to preserve the integrity of our party, the integrity of this House, the integrity of our country and its economic structure, and to bring false prophets and unsound leadership and unsound plans out into the light of day, where the spurious may be detected from the genuine.

I claim no superior virtue. I believe what I claim for myself is true of the vast majority of the Members of this body on both sides of this aisle. But I have heard Members speak here against this bill and in support of the Townsend plan who obviously did not study the bill, or if they had, had not profited by their study, like the gentleman from California, where the Townsend plan originated, who was talking about a title of this bill which he had not even read.

But I felt more hopeful of the integrity and soundness of this body when I saw how courageously my good friend FRANK BUCK, in that same State of California, stood up in debate against this Townsend plan and racket, even though it might well be that he was sacrificing his political life to serve his country, while some Townsend advocate or orator might conceivably even succeed to this place of public trust, because he had succeeded—to paraphrase the words of Lincoln—in fooling some of the people some of the time. The debate on this bill, the result of the votes on this bill and upon the unsound plans offered in place of this bill, furnishes hope to the people of this country and will go far to allay the apprehensions of those who feared that this Congress might be either so unsound or so supine as to yield to the clamor and threats to which it has now for some months been subjected. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE VII—SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD

ESTABLISHMENT

SECTION 701. There is hereby established a Social Security Board (in this act referred to as the "board") to be composed of three members to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Each member shall receive a salary at the rate of $10,000 a year and shall hold office for a term of 6 years, except that (1) any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed, shall be appointed for the remainder of such term; and (2) the terms of office of the members first taking office after the date of the enactment of this act shall expire, as designated by the President at the time of appointment, 1 at the end of 2 years, 1 at the end of 4 years, and 1 at the end of 6 years, after the date of the enactment of this act. The President shall designate one of the members as the chairman of the board.

DUTIES OF SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD

SEC. 702. The board shall perform the duties imposed upon it by this act and shall also have the duty of studying and making recommendations as to the most effective methods of providing economic security through social insurance, and as to legislation and matters of administrative policy concerning old-age pensions, unemployment compensation, accident compensation, and related subjects.

EXPENSES OF THE BOARD

SEC. 703. The board is authorized to appoint and fix the compensation of such officers and employees, and to make such expenditures as may be necessary for carrying out its functions under this act.

REPORTS

SEC. 704. The board shall make a full report to Congress, at the beginning of each regular session, of the administration of the functions with which it is charged.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 39, line 3, after the word "established", insert "within the Department of Labor."

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is simply to put all of these functions under the Department of Labor. All your employment service is under the Department of Labor, and this will coordinate with it.

Secondly, the Secretary of Labor is mentioned again and again in the bill. Therefore it seems to me that it is extremely desirable that we have uniformity and that we should place this under the Department of Labor.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PFEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 39, line 5, after the word "members" insert "one of which shall be a member of the medical profession."

Section 701 will then read in part as follows:

"There is hereby established a Social Security Board (in this act referred to as the board) to be composed of three members, one of whom shall be a member of the medical profession, to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

Mr. PFEIFER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this amendment will not alter the bill in any way except to provide for a member of the medical profession to be placed on the board.

We realize that all through the bill the intent is for the welfare of the unfortunates. These functions call for the aid of the medical profession—providing medical, surgical, and other services and care and facilities for diagnosis, hospitalization, and everything pertaining to health.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. If the gentleman will yield, titles I, II, III, and IV are under this security board.

Mr. PFEIFER. You read further and, on page 29, referring to the services to crippled children, it calls for the care of indigent by this board.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That is under the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor. Title V is under the Surgeon General's Department of Public Health.

Mr. PFEIFER. Disregarding all that, I still maintain that section 1 is for the welfare of the unfortunates. A medical man should be placed on the board for their welfare.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. In addition to the statement made by the gentleman from Washington, does not the gentleman from New York feel that the President of the United States can be trusted to select the best possible available men to be placed on the board? Is he not willing that the President of the United States may exercise his discretion in selecting the proper personnel for the board. I am sure if the gentleman will present his views to the President, the President will give them full consideration.

Mr. PFEIFER. I do not question the President's good intent, but the insertion of just five words calling for the appointment of a medical man will make it certain.

Mr. MEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PFEIFER. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. I realize that the distinguished Representative from my home State is one of the eminent surgeons of this country, and I would like to ask him what action the medical fraternity have taken in regard to this bill?

Mr. PFEIFER. They have requested the board and begged for the provision that a medical man should be placed on the board.

The medical profession recognizes the necessity under conditions of emergency for Federal aid in meeting basic needs of the indigent; the house of delegates of the American Medical Association deprecates, however, any provision whereby Federal subsidies for medical services are administered and controlled by a lay bureau. While the desirability of adequate medical service for crippled children and for the preservation of child and maternal health is beyond question, the house of delegates deplores and protests those sections of the bill which place in the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor the responsibility for the administration of funds for these purposes.

The house of delegates condemns as pernicious that section of the bill—section 701, title VII—which creates a social insurance board, without specification of the character of its personnel to administer functions essentially medical in character and demanding technical knowledge not available to those without medical training.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The present president of the American Medical Association, Dr. William L. Bierring, appeared before the committee and endorsed the health title of this bill.

Mr. MEAD. Did he represent the American Medical Society?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. He was speaking as its president, I understood.

Mr. MEAD. I believe the gentleman's request is a reasonable one.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. PFEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I am constrained to object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE VIII—TAXES WITH RESPECT TO EMPLOYMENT

INCOME TAX ON EMPLOYEES

SECTION 801. In addition to other taxes, there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the income of every individual a tax equal to the following percentages of the wages (as defined in section 811) received by him after December 31, 1936, with respect to employment (as defined in section 811) after such date:

In addition to other taxes, every employer shall pay an excise tax, with respect to having individuals in his employ, equal to the following percentages of the wages (as defined in sec. 811) paid by him after December 31, 1936, with respect to employment (as defined in sec. 811) after such date:

(1) With respect to employment during the calendar years 1937, 1938, and 1939, the rate shall be 1 percent.

(2) With respect to employment during the calendar years 1940, 1941, and 1942, the rate shall be 1½ percent.

(3) With respect to employment during the calendar years 1943, 1944, and 1945, the rate shall be 2 percent.

(4) With respect to employment during the calendar years 1946, 1947, and 1948, the rate shall be 2½ percent.

(5) With respect to employment after December 31, 1948, the rate shall be 3 percent.

ADJUSTMENT OF EMPLOYERS' TAX

SEC. 805. If more or less than the correct amount of tax imposed by section 804 is paid with respect to any wage payment, then, under regulations made under this title, proper adjustments with respect to the tax shall be made in connection with subsequent wage payments to the same individual by the same employer.

REFUNDS AND DEFICIENCIES

SEC. 806. If more or less than the correct amount of tax imposed by section 801 or 804 is paid or deducted with respect to any wage payment and the overpayment or underpayment of tax cannot be adjusted under section 802 (b) or 805 the amount of the overpayment shall be refunded and the amount of the underpayment shall be collected, in such manner and at such times (subject to the statutes of limitations properly applicable thereto) as may be prescribed by regulations made under this title.

COLLECTION AND PAYMENT OF TAXES

SEC. 807. (a) The taxes imposed by this title shall be collected by the Bureau of Internal Revenue under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury and shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as internal-revenue collections.

(b) Such taxes shall be collected and paid in such manner, at such times, and under such conditions, not inconsistent with this title (either by making and filing returns, or by stamps, coupons, tickets, books, or other reasonable devices or methods necessary or helpful in securing a complete and proper collection and payment of the tax or in securing proper identification of the taxpayer), as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

(c) All provisions of law, including penalties, applicable with respect to any tax imposed by section 600 or section 800 of the Revenue Act of 1926, and the provisions of section 607 of the Revenue Act of 1934, shall, insofar as applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this title, be applicable with respect to the taxes imposed by this title.

(d) In the payment of any tax under this title a fractional part of a cent shall be disregarded, unless it amounts to ½ cent or more, in which case it shall be increased to 1 cent.

RULES AND REGULATIONS

SALE OF STAMPS BY POSTMASTERS

SEC. 809. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall furnish to the Postmaster General without prepayment a suitable quantity of stamps, coupons, tickets, books, or other devices prescribed by the Commissioner under section 807 for the collection or payment of any tax imposed by this title, to be distributed to, and kept on sale by, the various postmasters in the United States. The Postmaster General may require each such postmaster to furnish bond in such increased amount as he may from time to time determine, and each such postmaster shall deposit the receipts from the sale of such stamps, coupons, tickets, books, or other devices, to the credit of, and render accounts to, the Postmaster General at such times and in such form as the Postmaster General may by regulations prescribe. The Postmaster General shall at least once a month transfer to the Treasury as internal-revenue collections all receipts so deposited.

PENALTIES

SEC. 810. (a) Whoever buys, sells, offers for sale, uses, transfers, takes or gives in exchange, or pledges or gives in pledge, except as authorized in this title or in regulations made pursuant thereto, any stamp, coupon, ticket, book, or other device prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue under section 807 for the collection or payment of any tax imposed by this title shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 6 months, or both.

(b) Whoever, with intent to defraud, alters, forges, makes, or counterfeits any stamp, coupon, ticket, book, or other device prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue under section 807 for the collection or payment of any tax imposed by this title, or uses, sells, lends, or has in his possession any such altered, forged, or counterfeited stamp, coupon, ticket, book, or other device, or makes, uses, sells, or has in his possession any material in imitation of the material used in the manufacture of such stamp, coupon, ticket, book, or other device, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. VINSON of Kentucky: Page 45, lines 2 and 3, strike out "the various postmasters in the United States" and insert: "all post offices of the first and second classes, and such post offices of the third and fourth classes as (1) are located in county seats, or (2) are certified by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Postmaster General as necessary to the proper administration of this title."

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, this is a committee amendment to which no objection was interposed. The provisions of the amendment are agreeable to the Treasury and to the Post Office Department.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am sure there is no objection on this side to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Beginning on page 40, in line 10, strike out all of title VIII down to and including line 19 on page 47.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. REED of New York. Yes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this title and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object. I suggest to the gentleman that he withdraw that and let the debate run along on the amendment of the gentleman from New York, temporarily.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the request.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I believe that a bill as important as this should demand the attention of the House, especially if there is matter in the bill with which Members should be familiar before they cast their votes. One of the most important matters contained in this bill, affecting the individual citizen, is deliberately concealed within the language of the bill. There is a portion of this bill which gives to the Secretary of the Treasury power to issue regulations for the administration of this tax. Do you gentlemen realize that this is one of the bills of regimentation of the "brain trust"? Do gentlemen realize that this tax does not go into effect until the 1st of January 1937, while the unemployment-insurance tax goes into effect in 1936? Why is that? It is political and nothing else. Do gentlemen realize that under the terms of this bill on the 1st of January 1937, 25,804,000 wage earners of this country will have to submit themselves to a Federal bureau to be fingerprinted before they can walk across the threshold of any employer of labor in this country?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. No. Wait a minute.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. There is nothing in the bill to that effect.

Mr. REED of New York. Oh, yes, there is.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Show it to us.

Mr. REED of New York. Under section 808 there is a provision giving the Secretary of the Treasury power to issue regulations. The gentleman who interrupted me, Mr. HILL, and every man on the committee knows that a member of the "brain trust" came before our committee and inadvertently dropped the word that the provisions of title II and title VIII could not be carried out without subjecting the employees to a fingerprint test. It means the setting up here in Washington of a Federal bureau with a fingerprint test of regimentation not only comparable to but greater than anything of its kind to be found in Russia, Germany, or Italy under the three dictators. It means absolute regimentation, and if you gentlemen, when you come up the Avenue, will look at the buildings on that side of the street, you will find the sign on the window the whole length of the building, "Fingerprint department."

So, you are going to fingerprint 25,804,000 wage earners after the election in 1936. You would not do it before. You delay it for a month after election, hoping that you can corrupt the electors of this country with your $5,000,000,000 slush fund, and then put this compulsory tax and the fingerprint system into operation. Then the lash of the dictator will be felt, and 25,000,000 free American citizens will for the first time submit themselves to a fingerprint test and have their fingerprints filed down here with those of Al Capone and every jailbird and racketeer in the country. That is what it means, and it means that no man can go to an employer and get a job until he goes there with a card issued by the Bureau and can answer the questions and prove that he has been fingerprinted; and if he is not, and they employ him, he is subject to a fine of $1,000 or 5 years imprisonment, or both. That is what you are trying to do in this bill, and it is in harmony with the dictatorship program launched under the new deal and to be carried on by it. It is carrying out a program of Karl Marx from beginning to end, the domination of the citizen and the destruction of private industry. This is only one more effort under a dictatorial program to regiment labor and make them submit themselves to this Federal test before wage earners can go to an employer and get a job to earn their daily bread.

I was taught and the people I have the honor to represent believe that the greatest heritage of a free people is the right to transmit that freedom to their children. I loathe this attempt to deceive and betray industry and labor and further fasten upon them this foreign system of regimentation. I shall not—I will not—vote for this bill if title II and title VIII remain in this measure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] has expired.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the only reason for my assuming the floor at this time is to call the attention of the House and the committee to the fact that this bill imposes upon the Post Office Department a tremendous burden. By the terms of the bill it will be the collecting and distributing agency, and it will in no wise be recompensed for this added volume of work.

The Post Office Department in recent years has taken on other burdens. Only a short time ago it assumed the custodial work in connection with the Federal buildings of the country at a cost to the Department of several million dollars annually for which it is not compensated.

Under this bill, as I understand it, all the postmasters of the United States will be supplied with the necessary stamps by the Internal Revenue Bureau, and they will in turn dispose of them to their patrons who come under the provisions of this law. They will make sales of stamps, coupons, books, and so forth, and be responsible for the money from those sales while it is within their keeping and until they turn it back to the Treasury of the United States. That will entail a large added volume of work, and some arrangement ought to be made in the bill to compensate the Department.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I want to say to my friend, the Chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, that the matter to which he refers was submitted to the Ways and Means Committee, but we felt that that was completely and exclusively within the jurisdiction of the gentleman's committee, and we refrained from taking any action relative thereto. We took the same position as to the added cost incident to this work. We felt that it was a matter for the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. MEAD. I know the gentleman is very friendly to the objective I have in mind, but I recognize also the fact that if it is within the province of the committee to direct the Post Office Department to do the collecting and to have the care of this property, it is also within the jurisdiction of the gentleman's committee to provide that they be compensated for the work. In view of the fact that the gentleman's committee favors it, I want the support of the committee and the House when that legislation is reported from our committee.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Of course, it was within our jurisdiction to direct the Postmaster General and the postmasters to cooperate and participate in the sale of these stamps as a tax proposition.

Mr. MEAD. And it would also be within the jurisdiction of the gentleman's committee to make a suitable allowance to the Post Office Department to compensate them for their work.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That is an appropriation matter.

Mr. MEAD. However, authority for that allowance could be contained in this bill and then the Appropriations Committee could, by reason of that authorization, include in the Post Office Department appropriation bill an item sufficient to cover this added expense.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Just reiterating what the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] said, it was within the jurisdiction of the gentleman's committee.

Mr. MEAD. I deeply appreciate that; but let me respectfully remind the members of the Ways and Means Committee that you have invaded the province of our committee frequently in the past, and again only recently. You levied a charge on first-class mail of 3 cents instead of 2 cents.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. And we did it with your acquiescence and your approval.

Mr. MEAD. I appeared before your committee in the first instance and asked that you leave it with our committee. I also brought to your attention the fact that our committee was in opposition to the increase; but after the matter had been reported by your committee and had been included in the emergency taxes, I told you that as long as it was but a temporary measure we would refrain from voicing our objection. However, it was certainly within the province of our committee, and the fact that you took it away from us establishes a precedent for your consideration of the minor matter I am just bringing to your attention. If you order the Post Office Department to do the work, you should order someone to pay the bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

If I could encourage this fight between these two distinguished Democrats, I would like to do it; but I am afraid that if I did they would both jump on me. But before we pass on this motion to strike out title VIII, permit me to say that my good friend and able colleague from New York [Mr. REED] was not able to discuss the question of the constitutionality of that section in the time allotted to him. I am not going to do it, but I just want the RECORD to show at this place that we still maintain as strongly as ever that this section is unconstitutional.

While I have 5 minutes, I would like to ask a question of somebody on the Democratic side with reference to the table which appears on page 6 of the committee report. I do this because I want to know. I do not ask it in any critical manner or with any critical intention in my mind or heart. You will notice that in the column showing the amount added to the reserve the amount increases until 1955, when it commences to drop and continues to drop almost to the vanishing point. If it continues at that rate, the whole colossal reserve of thirty-three thousand million would be wiped out. On the right-hand side of table 4, on page 6, the contributions are increased gradually from 1937. Those are the Government's contributions. Naturally, the interest will increase. Naturally, the benefits that will be paid will increase. They increase until the first column amounts to $2,000,000,000. The interest amounts to $1,000,000,000 a year, and the benefits to be paid are merely $3,000,000,000 a year. I am worried about the last three figures in next to the last column. It will be noticed that in 1960 the amount carried over to reserve is $1,032,000,000. In the next 5 years you lose $400,000,000. In the next 5 years years you lose $400,000,000 more. Now, if you carry that figure on down another 5 years at that proportion, you would be down beyond the point where the expenditures would exceed the receipts.

You would be cutting into your reserves. If this continues it will not be more than 20 or 30 years at the outside until your big reserve is greatly threatened. What is the solution; what is the answer?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. If the gentleman will yield, my attention had not been called to these figures, but it occurs to me the explanation is that as we approach the period 1970, we approach the peak of those who receive benefits, so that the reserves and the accretions to the reserves will be more nearly in balance with the payments to the beneficiaries.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will not the gentleman extend his remarks in the RECORD at this point and explain the matter in more detail? It is for the benefit of all of us.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Maybe I can get the information for the gentleman right now if the gentleman will be so kind as to state his question again. I will try to get some facts and extend them in the RECORD.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Near the end of the last column it will be observed that the loss is $400,000,000 a year. If this is kept up it will not be many years before the reserve will be gone entirely and the whole big financial structure will bust up.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. It is my opinion the reserve will take care of it; but we shall not have such a big piling up in the reserve in future years.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman at this point extend his remarks and give an explanation?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I will see if I can get the information, but I shall not make any rash promises.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I think a few further observations are proper at this time in corroboration of the statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] relative to fingerprinting. The representative of the majority, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL], was correct, I think, in saying there is no direct reference to fingerprinting in the bill. There purposely is not; but there is authority in the bill for the Secretary of the Treasury to make rules and regulations:

SEC. 808. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall make and publish rules and regulations for the enforcement of this title.

I respect executive sessions of a committee. At the same time, this permission granted to make rules and regulations is the result of a request coming to us from the Treasury Department and from the Internal Revenue Bureau to set up a fingerprinting system as part of the regulations for the enforcement of the compulsory contributory annuity system set up under titles II and VIII. This is the authority of my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] for making the statement he did.

I want, in perhaps the last remarks I shall make on this bill, to call attention once more to the effect of the tax that is contained in title VIII, which title I am in favor of striking out, and its effect on the wage earners and the taxpayers. The majority, of course, have a right to say that no evidence was submitted to us of a very definite nature in opposition to these taxes. I severely censure and blame big industries, employers of thousands of people, for not having appeared here in opposition to this tax, because we know that if they have any sense at all as business people they are opposed to it; and they should have come here and told the Ways and Means Committee they were opposed to it. You could not even get insurance companies to testify in opposition to it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Why not?

Mr. TREADWAY. Because they would be regimented out of business, just like employees are going to be regimented here. They were perfectly willing, so far as they are concerned, to allow the Government to set up an insurance scheme against them. Business did the same thing. Here is a pay-roll tax. You call it in one instance an excise tax and in another instance an income tax, but it is the same old tax. You are levying a tax to the extent of 3 percent against the pay roll of the employer, and you are levying another tax of 3 percent on that same pay roll when it gets into the hands of the employee.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I dislike to, but I will.

Mr. KVALE. In this connection title IX provides for a further tax of 3 percent which makes a total tax of 9 percent.

Mr. TREADWAY. The tax provided in title VIII is a tax on employer and employee. With the additional pay-roll tax provided in title IX it makes a total tax of 9 percent.

I want to read certain figures, Mr. Chairman. They are a matter of record. I am reading from a table in the majority report on page 15, table 9. I am going to read it all:

TABLE IX.—Revenue estimates (from taxes on employees and employers imposed by title VIII, secs. 801 and 804)[1]

Combined rate of tax	Fiscal year received into Treasury	Estimated fiscal year receipts
2 percent	1937	$278,800,000
2 percent	1938	560,200,000
2 percent	1939	565,600,000
3 percent	1940	714,600,000
3 percent	1941	864,800,000
3 percent	1942	873,000,000
4 percent	1943	1,028,800,000
4 percent	1944	1,185,900,000
4 percent	1945	1,196,900,000
5 percent	1946	1,359,400,000
5 percent	1947	1,523,300,000
5 percent	1948	1,536,900,000
6 percent	1949	1,706,300,000
6 percent	1950	1,877,200,000

[1] Each of the 2 taxes is estimated to produce one-half of the total receipts shown.

I also want to read the table showing the number of workers who will be taxed under title VIII, which is as follows:

TABLE VIII.—Estimate of number of employees covered under the tax provided in title VIII

[Based upon 1930 census]

Total number of gainful workers		48,830,000
Total number of owners, operators, self-employed (including the professions)		12,087,000
Total of workers excluded because of occupation (farm labor, domestics, teachers, and governmental and institutional workers)		9,389,000
Total number of workers in eligible occupations		27,354,000
Excluded:
Casuals	500,000
Over 65	1,050,000
		1,550,000
Estimated coverage		28,804,000

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. You will notice there are progressive increases in the tax every year until 6 percent is reached in 1949, with a yield of $1,706,300,000. The yield in 1950, at the same rate, would be $1,877,200,000.

If this is not of interest to the business world and they do not want to come here and tell their Representatives in Congress to oppose such taxation on their business, they should swallow their medicine. As Andy says, "I'm regusted."

I am "regusted" at the attitude of business in that it has not shown the proper interest in protecting itself by stating its case before Congress. I cannot conceive why, unless it is because, as the gentleman from Ohio indicated a while ago, they are scared blue, but they might as well tell their story when they are scared blue as to be absolutely bankrupt before they get around to telling us. They will tell us all right when we go home and inform them that such a bill as this has been passed by the Congress. My answer to them is, "Why did you not come down and tell us while it was time to tell us?" That is going to be my answer.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I wonder if the gentleman is not mistaken as to the attitude of business and industry toward this legislation?

Mr. TREADWAY. No; I think I am stating the case absolutely correct. They have not shown the interest they should have. I know what the gentleman is going to say. He may say that they do not mind the tax. But you tell the people they are going to be taxed to the extent of $278,000,000 to $1,800,000,000 more than they are being taxed at the present time and see whether they like it or not. That may be the gentleman's answer, but it is a false answer.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. They are not usually modest about protecting their own interest.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman thinks it is so blamed small they are not going to pay any attention to it. The gentleman should not fool himself.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman cite a single instance in his long and splendid service here when industry which was objecting to a tax did not flood Washingto with personages and a lot of propaganda?

Mr. TREADWAY. That is what they should have done here, and they would have done a good job if they had continued it in this case, but that is no proof they are not going to be sadly fooled and much opposed to it when they get to paying this tax.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Perhaps the gentleman from Massachusetts thought that business may have concluded that they were killed, anyhow.

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes. I may say that New England industry feels that way today.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is it not very possible they thought that we had good judgment and common sense?

Mr. TREADWAY. We represent them and they should tell us their views, but they have not done so.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this title and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I tried to get the floor for 4 or 5 hours yesterday and since I have been here today. I would like to know whether the gentleman will give me 5 minutes in which to discuss this title?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I modify my request and ask unanimous consent that all debate on this title and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will time be allowed to discuss title IX?

The CHAIRMAN. The request of the gentleman from North Carolina applies only to title VIII.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I am not surprised that the members of the Ways and Means Committee on the majority side have not replied to the charge made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED], that this bill was designed to fingerprint and enslave every worker of this land. Never in the history of the world has any measure been brought in here so insidiously designed as to prevent business recovery, to enslave workers, and to prevent any possibility of the employers providing work for the people.

Mr. Chairman, is it not about time that every one of us woke up and realized our constitutional responsibility to pass on legislation intelligently, on its merits, or, as in this case, on its absolute lack of merit, throwing those things out that are absolutely vicious? Do any of you suppose that you can go back home and justify the 6-percent pay-roll tax under title VIII, and the 3-percent pay-roll tax under title IX, and the fingerprint provision under section 808? Oh, that the membership of this House might appreciate its responsibility, that it might stand for the preservation of American liberty, that it might stand for giving the people of America an opportunity to work out their salvation instead of enslaving them and preventing forever an opportunity for America to rise and triumph over this trouble. I hope that the House of Representatives, represented by its Committee of the Whole here today, will vote to strike out title VIII and pass the motion which has been offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman, if a big, heavy truck passes down Pennsylvania Avenue here in the city of Washington and side swipes from one side to the other, and damages various automobiles on the highway, including your own, what would you expect? You would look forward to recovery from the owner of the truck of the amount of your loss resulting from the damage his truck inflicted upon your machine.

In this bill, we are doing just the opposite. We are proposing a tax on the employed instead of a tax on mass-production machinery which is the very vehicle which causes unemployment. The modern machine, with its resultant mass production, is forcing more people out of employment than any other agency. In this bill under discussion, in order to relieve the situation, we are proposing to tax the workmen, the very individuals who are suffering because of mass production, rather than the agency responsible for their plight.

Mr. Chairman, I have in my hand a clipping quoting a famous economist to the effect that we are going to have unemployment permanently. Mr. Hopkins, Director of Federal Emergency Relief, made the statement recently that we are bound to have at least 5,000,000 or more unemployed at all times. I vehemently disagree with the statement of the economist, as well as with the statement of Mr. Hopkins. There is no necessity for a permanent list of unemployed of 5,000,000 or more in these United States.

As a "new dealer", perhaps Mr. Hopkins might follow in the footsteps of the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace, who ordered the destruction of pigs and crops in order to relieve the market from an oversupply of these products. I do not believe in destroying any of God's products; neither do I believe in the theory that the only way we can solve the unemployment problem would be through a similar process of destruction applied to our people, thus reducing the competition in the labor market.

The new deal has been credited with having "brain trusters" at the helm, yet none of them, to my knowledge, has yet advanced a single plan to remove the basic causes of the depression. To meet the situation I have proposed an adequate tax to control the modern machine which displaces labor and the control and extension of credit through a central Government bank, with subsidiaries in every State. These plans offer a practical and constructive means of solving our present difficulties.

The bill which we are voting on today, in my opinion, is a monstrosity and I propose to vote against it. The Townsend plan has been described as "cock-eyed" and "fantastic" but no one has ever seriously questioned the honesty and sincerity of its objective, or its efficacy as a recovery measure.

I am especially opposed to the unemployment insurance features of this bill. Mr. Stephenson, former president of the American Bankers' Association, is quoted as saying:

> Unemployment insurance is, in fact, merely an industrial dole.

Speaking further, he says:

> I believe industry's real contribution to this problem can, and should be one of prevention of general unemployment rather than an attempt to patch up with doles a situation created largely by lack of industrial foresight.

Lack of industrial foresight exists in this Congress of the United States. Not only have we, as Representatives, closed our eyes to the human significance of modern machine development, but the Democratic administration has failed to recognize the menace of the machine which is creating unemployment in increasing numbers.

We evidence our archaic attitude by following the old-deal methods of voting tax-exempt bonds in order to obtain funds to give a crust of bread to the unemployed and their families, and we obtain these funds from the very agency—that is, entrenched wealth—which controls the machines and which, in this manner, constantly adds to our unemployment problem. Until we adequately tax the machine which displaces human labor we will continue to grope in the dark for a solution of our unemployment problem.

New deal! Where is the new deal in this bill? The theory and plan of this measure is predicated upon the experiences and practices of Europe. Instead of traveling to Europe last year to survey conditions there, why did not Mr. Hopkins stay here in the United States and go into the industrial centers and to the farms to investigate conditions, consult with the unemployed, and hear their stories? Instead, he journeys abroad and comes back here with a European monstrosity! The social-security bill is not a new deal, but merely a copy from European systems.

If we are going to have a new deal, let it be a real new deal! Let us tax the agency which creates unemployment and control the juggernaut which is leaving widespread destruction in its wake as it ruthlessly casts aside increasing numbers of men and women from employment.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I yield.

Mr. WOOD. Is it not a fact that the gentleman, as well as most of the other Members who have spoken against this title, voted for the Railroad Men's Retirement Act, which was passed in the last session? The gentleman voted for that, did he not?

Mr. HOEPPEL. Certainly, I voted for that act, because it included in its benefits one of the largest and most substantial groups in America. If this bill included in its unemployment protection everyone in these United States and if it proposed to obtain the funds for this protection from the control of the juggernaut of the modern machine, I would favor it, but I do not believe in taxing the underpaid worker to provide protection against unemployment resulting from further machine progress, the profits of which are monopolized by entrenched wealth.

Mr. WOOD. The gentleman voted for that act and this provision is practically identical with the railroad men's retirement law. It is not exactly the same as to the contributions, but it is based on the same principle.

Mr. HOEPPEL. I cannot argue with the gentleman on the principles of the railroad men's retirement law, which I favor.

Mr. WOOD. One is called a regimentation of labor and the other is called the "Railroad Men's Retirement Act." Is that it?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I am not in favor of reducing the purchasing power of the masses of the workers, which this bill will do, inasmuch as it will exact up to 3 percent from already inadequate pay. What we need in America is an expanded consuming and purchasing power, not a restricted or decreased purchasing power, which is called for in this bill.

Mr. WOOD. Does the gentleman know of any labor organization that is opposed to this legislation?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I do not know of any labor organization which has endorsed this bill. I cannot believe that the workers would approve of a deduction from their already inadequate pay for the purpose of protecting them from unemployment while, at the same time, they are cognizant of the fact that the owner of the modern machine, which creates unemployment, takes to himself the profit, as a result of which we have the present inordinate concentration of wealth. [Applause.]

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, we are asking for a vote on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] to strike out title VIII. There is nothing new to be said. The Committee is opposed to the amendment and we ask that it be voted down.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. REED of New York) there were—ayes 65, noes 128.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE IX—TAX ON EMPLOYERS OF TEN OR MORE

IMPOSITION OF TAX

SEC. 901. On and after January 1, 1936, every employer (as defined in sec. 907) shall pay for each calendar year an excise tax, with respect to having individuals in his employ, equal to the following percentages of the total wages (as defined in sec. 907) payable by him (regardless of the time of payment) with respect to employment (as defined in sec. 907) during such calendar year:

(1) With respect to employment during the calendar year 1936 the rate shall be 1 percent;

(2) With respect to employment during the calendar year 1937 the rate shall be 2 percent;

(3) With respect to employment after December 31, 1937, the rate shall be 3 percent.

CREDIT AGAINST TAX

SEC. 902. The taxpayer may credit against the tax imposed by section 901 the amount of contributions, with respect to employment during the taxable year, paid by him (before the date of filing his return for the taxable year) into an unemployment fund under a State law. The total credit allowed to a taxpayer under this section for all contributions paid into unemployment funds with respect to employment during such taxable year shall not exceed 90 percent of the tax against which it is credited, and credit shall be allowed only for contributions made under the laws of States certified for the taxable year as provided in section 903.

CERTIFICATION OF STATE LAWS

SEC. 903. (a) The Social Security Board shall approve any State law submitted to it, within 30 days of such submission, which it finds provides that—

(1) All compensation is to be paid through public employment offices in the State;

(2) No compensation shall be payable with respect to any day of unemployment occurring within 2 years after the first day of the first period with respect to which contributions are required;

(3) All money received in the unemployment fund shall immediately upon such receipt be paid over to the Secretary of the Treasury to the credit of the unemployment trust fund established by section 904;

(4) All money withdrawn from the unemployment trust fund by the State agency shall be used solely in the payment of compensation, exclusive of expenses of administration;

(5) Compensation shall not be denied in such State to any otherwise eligible individual for refusing to accept new work under any of the following conditions: (A) If the position offered is vacant due directly to a strike, lockout, or other labor dispute; (B) if the wages, hours, or other conditions of the work offered are substantially less favorable to the individual than those prevailing for similar work in the locality; (C) if as a condition of being employed the individual would be required to join a company union or to resign from or refrain from joining any bona fide labor organization;

(6) All the rights, privileges, or immunities conferred by such law or by acts done pursuant thereto shall exist subject to the power of the legislature to amend or repeal such law at any time.

The Board shall, upon approving such law, notify the Governor of the State of its approval.

(b) On December 31 in each taxable year the Board shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury each State whose law it has previously approved, except that it shall not certify any State which, after notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency, the Board finds has changed its law so that it no longer contains the provisions specified in subsection (a) or has with respect to such taxable year failed to comply substantially with any such provision.

(c) If, at any time during the taxable year, the Board has reason to believe that a State whose law it has previously approved, may not be certified under subsection (b), it shall promptly so notify the Governor of such State.

UNEMPLOYMENT TRUST FUND

SEC. 904. (a) There is hereby established in the Treasury of the United States a trust fund to be known as the "Unemployment Trust Fund", hereinafter in this title called the "Fund." The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to receive and hold in the Fund all moneys deposited therein by a State agency from a State unemployment fund. Such deposit may be made directly with the Secretary of the Treasury or with any Federal reserve bank or member bank of the Federal Reserve System designated by him for such purpose.

(b) It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to invest such portion of the Fund as is not, in his judgment, required to meet current withdrawals. Such investment may be made only in interest-bearing obligations of the United States or in obligations guaranteed as to both principal and interest by the United States. For such purpose such obligations may be acquired (1) on original issue at par, or (2) by purchase of outstanding obligations at the market price. The purposes for which obligations of the United States may be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, are hereby extended to authorize the issuance at par of special obligations exclusively to the Fund.

Such special obligations shall bear interest at a rate equal to the average rate of interest, computed as of the end of the calendar month next preceding the date of such issue, borne by all interest-bearing obligations of the United States then forming part of the public debt; except that where such average rate is not a multiple of one-eighth of 1 percent, the rate of interest of such special obligations shall be the multiple of one-eighth of 1 percent next lower than such average rate. Obligations other than such special obligations may be acquired for the Fund only on such terms as to provide an investment yield not less than the yield which would be required in the case of special obligations if issued to the Fund upon the date of such acquisition.

(c) Any obligations acquired by the Fund (except special obligations issued exclusively to the Fund) may be sold at the market price, and such special obligations may be redeemed at par plus accrued interest.

(d) The interest on, and the proceeds from the sale or redemption of, any obligations held in the Fund shall be credited to and form a part of the Fund.

(e) The Fund shall be invested as a single fund, but the Secretary of the Treasury shall maintain a separate book account for each State agency and shall credit quarterly on March 31, June 30, September 30, and December 31, of each year, to each account, on the basis of the average daily balance of such account, a proportionate part of the earnings of the Fund for the quarter ending on such date.

(f) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay out of the fund to any State agency such amount as it may duly requisition, not exceeding the amount standing to the account of such State agency at the time of such payment.

ADMINISTRATION, REFUNDS, AND PENALTIES

SEC. 905. (a) The tax imposed by this title shall be collected by the Bureau of Internal Revenue under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury and shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as internal-revenue collections.

(b) Not later than January 31, next following the close of the taxable year, each employer shall make a return of the tax under this title for such taxable year. Each such return shall be made under oath, shall be filed with the collector of internal revenue for the district in which is located the principal place of business of the employer, or, if he has no principal place of business in the United States, then with the collector at Baltimore, Md., and shall contain such information and be made in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may by regulations prescribe. All provisions of law (including penalties) applicable in respect of the taxes imposed by section 600 of the Revenue Act of 1926, shall, insofar as not inconsistent with this title, be applicable in respect of the tax imposed by this title. The Commissioner may extend the time for filing the return of the tax imposed by this title, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, but no such extension shall be for more than 60 days.

(c) Returns filed under this title shall be open to inspection in the same manner, to the same extent, and subject to the same provisions of law, including penalties, as returns made under title II of the Revenue Act of 1926.

(d) The taxpayer may elect to pay the tax in four equal installments instead of in a single payment, in which case the first installment shall be paid not later than the last day prescribed for the filing of returns, the second installment shall be paid on or before the last day of the third month, the third installment on or before the last day of the sixth month, and the fourth installment on or before the last day of the ninth month, after such last day. If the tax or any installment thereof is not paid on or before the last day of the period fixed for its payment, the whole amount of the tax unpaid shall be paid upon notice and demand from the collector.

(e) At the request of the taxpayer, the time for payment of the tax or any installment thereof may be extended under regulations by the Commission with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, for a period not to exceed 6 months from the last day of the period prescribed for the payment of the tax or any installment thereof. The amount of the tax in respect of which any extension is granted shall be paid (with interest at the rate of one-half of 1 percent per month) on or before the date of the expiration period of the extension.

(f) In the payment of any tax under this title a fractional part of a cent shall be disregarded unless it amounts to one-half cent or more, in which case it shall be increased to 1 cent.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE

SEC. 906. No person required under a State law to make payments to an unemployment fund shall be relieved from compliance therewith on the ground that he is engaged in interstate commerce, or that the State law does not distinguish between employees engaged in interstate commerce and those engaged in intrastate commerce.

RULES AND REGULATIONS

SEC. 908. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall make and publish rules and regulations for the enforcement of this title, except sections 903 and 904.

Mr. STUBBS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STUBBS: Strike out the word "ten" in line 4, page 56, section 907, and insert in lieu thereof the word "four."

Mr. STUBBS. Mr. Chairman, I have a letter from the Merchants Association of Bakersfield, Calif., in my district, in which they state that—

The Wagner-Lewis social-security bill has had our serious consideration, and while endorsing the general principles of the proposed legislation, we are very much opposed to this section of the bill and we believe that the exemption of employers of not more than 10 workers as provided in H. R. 7260 will result in rank discrimination and great injustice so far as the workers are concerned, and will, furthermore, create an intolerable, competitive situation.

They furnish me no detailed statement regarding their objection to this provision, but they request that this amendment should be brought to the attention of the Congress, and in that spirit I offer the amendment at this time.

The amendment by the Merchants Association was sent to me by a committee composed of Alfred Harrell, Malcolm Brock, George B. Crome, A. Weill, John F. O'Neill, and other distinguished citizens of Bakersfield, for whose good judgment I have the greatest respect. It is apparent that they not only speak for the business men of that thriving community but also for business men in general of my district, and I ask the House to concur in this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. STUBBS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, there are many provisions in this bill that I do not like, but I intend to vote for the bill on its final passage, if for no other reason than to get the principle of old-age pensions and unemployment insurance on the statute books so that we can get something workable to aid and help these aged persons and help the unemployed.

I never did and do not now like the pay-roll tax. I think you are going to come back, if not next session of Congress in another session of Congress, and abolish the proposed law as to the pay-roll-tax provisions—you will be back here later with something like the Deane plan, prepared by Albert Deane, now assistant to Mr. Moffatt in the Housing Corporation.

The Deane plan took from the employers a tax—not the employees—it did not take money from the employee to help support himself but money paid by the employers.

Mr. Deane brought that whole matter before the President last year. It was a matter of great regret to me that the Ways and Means Committee did not report the Deane plan instead of this plan. It was drawn up after years of work on it, and I think it is the best plan offered for unemployment insurance.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman explain what that plan is?

Mr. CONNERY. I would be glad to, but it is lengthy, and I have not the time now.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman place it in the RECORD?

Mr. CONNERY. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Was the bill which the gentleman refers to placed before the Ways and Means Committee?

Mr. CONNERY. No; it was never put in the House as a bill. The President referred the plan to the Secretary of Labor, and the Secretary of Labor sent it to me and I brought it before my committee and let Mr. Deane explain the whole plan, but nothing came of it because this security legislation was referred to the Ways and Means Committee and not the Labor Committee. If it had been referred to our committee I believe we would have reported favorably on the Deane plan as part of security legislation.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Does the gentleman know of any bill embracing the Deane plan that was referred to the Ways and Means Committee?

Mr. CONNERY. No; but I know that the Members of the Ways and Means Committee must be familiar with the Deane plan.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I never heard of it.

Mr. CONNERY. I do not understand how the President of the United States and the Secretary of Labor could have had it under consideration without the members of the Ways and Means Committee knowing something about it.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. The gentleman understands, of course, that on the very point raised by him here, the same thing is carried in this bill.

Mr. CONNERY. Oh, no. You are taking the wages of the employee himself who is in industry. You have exempted the farmer and the domestic and you are taking this out of the industrial workers of the United States, and making them pay part of their own unemployment insurance. As suggested by my good friend from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE], I will place in the RECORD at this point a suggested bill providing required legislation to effectuate the Deane plan, to which I have referred.

SUGGESTED BILL PROVIDING REQUIRED LEGISLATION TO EFFECTUATE THE "DEANE PLAN"

An act to promote the general welfare of the people, to foster their constitutional guaranties, to restore and maintain the normal flow of interstate commerce, to encourage and foster national industrial and social recovery, and to provide a permanent plan which encourages and regulates employment; to appropriate money and to secure revenue

Be it enacted, etc.—

TITLE I. EMPLOYMENT REGULATIONS

SECTION 1. DECLARATION OF POLICY

This Congress recognizes and hereby declares:

A. That the existing general unemployment of the people:

1. Is hurtful to society and inimical to their general welfare;

2. Endangers the rights of the people in contravention of their constitutional guaranties;

3. Endangers the peace, tranquillity, prosperity, health, and safety of the people;

4. Interferes with the normal flow of interstate commerce by reducing the purchasing power of the people and otherwise stifling industry;

5. Creates industrial and social evils and emergencies.

B. That such general unemployment is due to the indiscriminate, arbitrary, and inequitable distribution of the total work-hour requirements of the Nation.

C. That the total purchasing power of the people expended for all types of products, manufactured goods, and services creates the total work-hour requirements of the Nation.

D. That such total work-hour requirements of the Nation determine the amount of the national purchasing power distributed to the people, which in turn determines the value of all property, goods, investments, and accumulations, and, therefore, constitutes such total work-hour requirements a great national resource.

E. That by making available to all the people some portion of this great national resource, their general welfare will be promoted, their constitutional guaranties will be fostered, the normal flow of interstate commerce will be restored and maintained, and industrial and social recovery will be encouraged.

F. That due to the inherent nature of our productive, manufacturing, distributing, and service processes, the employers automatically and of necessity are the custodians of this great national resource, and, therefore, the custodians of certain constitutional rights of the people and certain rights specifically granted to Congress by the Constitution. Therefore, it is the purpose and policy of this Congress to relieve unemployment and to so regulate this custodianship that there will be made available to all the people some portion of the total work-hour requirements of the Nation. To effectuate this purpose and policy it is provided:

The Corporation shall designate the types of "other services" falling within the aforesaid category, which designations may, from time to time, be changed by it.

Such master insurance policy shall provide that the Corporation will forthwith upon demand reimburse all qualified employers for any supplemental compensation paid by them to their workers; shall guarantee all qualified workers the payment to them of such supplemental compensation; and such other benefits as are authorized in this act. Workers engaged in work for the Corporation, whether employed by the Corporation or by independent employers working under contract for the Corporation, may waive the payment to them of such supplemental compensation during the period of such employment.

SEC. 12. UNEMPLOYED WORKERS

The Corporation is authorized and empowered to furnish employment to all unemployed registered workers and, to further this end, may negotiate and cooperate with any State, county, municipality, or local governing body, and may use its funds to employ any unemployed registered workers for such public uses and purposes as it may determine.

In the event the Corporation is unable to pay upon demand, when due, such obligations, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the amount thereof, which is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and thereupon, to the extent of the amount so paid, the Secretary of the Treasury shall succeed to the rights of the holder of such obligations. Any Federal Reserve bank is authorized to lend the Corporation such moneys within the prescribed limits herein set forth as said Corporation may request, and the notes representing such loans shall be eligible as security for circulating notes issued under the provisions of the 6th paragraph of section 18 of the Federal Reserve Act as amended by section 401 of the National Emergency Banking Act to the same extent as notes, drafts, bills of exchange or bankers acceptances acquired under the provisions of the Federal Reserve Act.

TITLE III

SEC. 26. TAXES LEVIED

To obtain revenue for the purposes of this act, the following taxes are hereby levied:

(a) On all employers in the continental United States a tax equal to 100 percent of the hourly compensation of any worker employed by them for each hour in any work-week by which the total employed hours of such worker exceed the 10-year or monthly average, whichever is lower: Provided, That there may be deducted from this tax the amount of any extra compensation (exclusive of supplemental compensation) paid to such worker by such employers over and above the hourly compensation of such worker but not to exceed 50 percent of such hourly compensation for each excess hour.

(b) (See note.) On all employers in the continental United States, a tax equal to 50 percent of the hourly compensation of any worker employed by them for each hour by which the 10-year average exceeds the monthly average during the week employed: Provided, That there may be deducted from this tax the amount of any supplemental compensation due to such worker under any policy of insurance issued by the Corporation and advanced to such worker by such employers at the close of any such week.

SEC. 27

The taxes provided under section 31 of this title shall be collected at the close of each calendar month by the Bureau of Internal Revenue under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. Such taxes shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, but shall not be covered into the general funds but shall be credited on the books of the Treasury to the Corporation.

(NOTE.—The purpose of this provision is to insure a uniform practice of employers advancing supplemental compensation to their employees when due, for which they would be reimbursed by the Corporation (see sec. 7, title 1). It will be noted that the amount of the allowable deduction is the same as the tax, so that conformity with the practice laid down would eliminate the payment of any net tax.)

SEC. 28. EMPLOYERS' STATEMENTS

Every employer shall transmit to the collector of internal revenue at the end of each month a statement upon a form approved by the Corporation, showing the number of workers employed during the month, the number of hours of their employment, and the total compensation paid them, and such other information as may be required by the collector of internal revenue and/or the Corporation.

TITLE IV—PENALTIES

SEC. 29. FINE AND/OR IMPRISONMENT PROVIDED

Any employer who shall knowingly fail to transmit to the collector of internal revenue such reports or statements as may be required to effectuate the provisions of this act, or who shall knowingly fail to pay the tax provided under title III, section 26, of this act, when due, shall for each offense be punishable by a fine of not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment for a period of not more than 1 year, or both. Any employer who knowingly shall submit to the Corporation a fraudulent statement shall for each such statement be punishable by a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment of not more than 2 years, or both. Any employer who shall knowingly fail to carry out any of the duties imposed upon him by this act or shall conspire to defeat the purpose of this act shall for each offense be punishable by a fine of $1,000 or imprisonment of not more than 1 year, or both. Where a corporation is subject to any of the penalties herein provided each officer of such corporation who shall be a party to the act or omission for which such penalty is imposed is hereby made personally liable to the same extent as the corporation.

TITLE V. MISCELLANEOUS

SEC. 30. RIGHT TO ALTER AND AMEND

The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved. If any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall for any reason be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder of this act, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

ADD TO TITLE I, SEC. 4

In determining the monthly average as provided under this section, the Corporation shall make adjustments for seasonal variations in employment. Such adjustments shall be made on the basis of percentage tables, reflecting the percentage of annual production normally produced each month; said tables to be secured from the regularly constituted code authority or authorities existing under the National Industrial Act. In the absence of such code authorities for any industry classification, the Corporation shall determine the seasonal percentage tables for such industry classification.

TITLE I, SEC. 5

The Corporation shall, as soon as practicable after the enactment of this act, fix and publish the 10-year average for each industry classification, for the calendar year 1934, giving weight, so far as practicable, to the present productive efficiency in each industry classification as reflected in volume of production per man-hour for workers employed therein.

During the month of January of each year, from 1935 to 1943, inclusive, the Corporation shall fix and publish the 10-year average for each industry classification, which shall reflect its determination of the average weekly hours of employment of all workers during the previous consecutive calendar years commencing with the year 1934.

During the month of January 1944 and during the month of January of each year thereafter, the Corporation shall fix and publish the 10-year average by industry classifications, which shall reflect the average weekly hours of employment of all workers during the previous 10 calendar years.

In determining the 10-year average as provided under title I, section 5, of this act, the Corporation shall make adjustments so far as practicable, for fluctuations, if any, in volume of production per man-hour for workers employed in the respective industry classifications.

TITLE I, SEC. 5A

The Corporation is authorized and empowered to change from time to time the number of calendar years which shall be averaged in making its determination of the long-time average: Provided, That in no event shall the weekly hours of employment during less than 5 nor more than 10 calendar years be averaged, except as otherwise provided under title I, section 5, of this act.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment, simply to point out to the gentleman from Massachusetts that this bill provides for a 3-percent excise tax on the pay rolls of industry, to be paid by the employer. On that point Mr. Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, appeared before the committee in the consideration of this bill and before a subcommittee during the last Congress, of which I had the privilege of being a member, on the so-called "Wagner-Lewis bill", and stressed the point that the tax should be levied upon the employer, pointing out that it would be passed on to consumers, and the laboring people, constituting a great consuming class, would have to pay their part. He also insisted that so-called "private reserves" not be permitted; and both of those conditions pointed out by him have been specifically provided in this bill just in the form stated.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. But you are making the employee, in taking part of his wages, pay part of the unemployment insurance.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Not at all.

Mr. CONNERY. In title VIII, what do you do?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. We are talking about title IX. Title VIII has nothing to do with unemployment insurance.

Mr. CONNERY. We are talking about your pay-roll tax. You are going to tax the pay rolls in the first place, and the result of that will be to make the employer have the smallest kind of a pay roll that he can have for a starter.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. CONNERY. If he has 3,000 men and he can cut down to 2,000 men, he will not have to pay so much, by using the labor-saving machinery that the gentleman from California [Mr. HOEPPEL] was talking about, labor-saving devices, the speed-up and stretch-out system, and so forth, and he does not have to pay so much tax. The second thing is that he can cut the wages of his employees, and pass on to the consumer the price of his product, with which to pay the tax.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I rose to point out to the gentleman that he is evidently confusing what is in title IX. The entire amount of the tax imposed is levied on the employer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 57, line 12, after the word "compensation", strike out "all the assets of which are mingled and undivided, and in which no separate account is maintained with respect to any person."

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, this is in many respects, from the point of view of Wisconsin, the most necessary amendment to this bill. Unless this amendment is adopted, Wisconsin will have to scrap its unemployment compensation law, refund the money already collected from employers, and begin all over again. By the end of the present fiscal year nearly $6,000,000 will have been paid by employers into unemployment reserve accounts, which will be available for the payment of compensation to their unemployed workmen after July 1 of this year. This money is the individual property of the employers and so cannot be transferred to a pooled unemployment compensation fund, such as it is necessary to set up if this bill becomes law without this amendment. All the advantage to workmen in Wisconsin through the enactment of an unemployment compensation law in advance of other States will be lost and employers will be out the costs of administration during the current year.

The theory under this entire title—relating to unemployment compensation—is that the States shall be free, with but few restrictions, to determine what sort of an unemployment compensation law they want. The clauses which it is proposed to strike out in this amendment, however, destroy freedom of choice with respect to one of the most important features of unemployment compensation, namely, whether they wish to have an unemployment-insurance system in which the contributions of all employers are commingled or an unemployment reserve system in which there is a separate account for each employer for the exclusive benefit of his own employees.

Many arguments can be made for a pooled unemployment insurance fund in which all contributions are commingled and from which all payments are made, but there are good arguments also for an unemployment reserve system. Individual employer accounts may become exhausted and their employees thereafter get nothing when they become unemployed. But pooled unemployment insurance funds also may become exhausted and unemployed workmen thereafter get nothing. In that event even employees in plants and industries having low rates of unemployment will get nothing, although they would have been fully protected had their employers been permitted to have individual accounts. Pooled unemployment insurance funds are advantageous to employees in industries which have a great deal of unemployment, but disadvantageous to employees in plants and industries which have a minimum of unemployment.

Individual employer accounts undoubtedly furnish a much stronger incentive to employers to regularize their employment than does a pooled unemployment-insurance fund. Where the employer is charged with the cost of the compensation payable to workmen he lays off, he naturally will make greater efforts to avoid having to lay off anyone, through reducing hours of labor and attempting to regularize his business, than under a system where discharges cost him nothing, all payments of compensation coming from the pooled unemployment-insurance fund. An unemployment reserves system furnishes an incentive to prevent unemployment; a pooled unemployment-insurance system may operate to actually increase unemployment.

In his special message of January 17 on economic security, President Roosevelt stated that in his opinion any unemployment compensation system that is established should afford an incentive to the prevention of unemployment rather than the reverse. In the bill as it stands there is no such incentive.

Employers very generally feel that a real incentive to the prevention of unemployment is created only when they are permitted to have individual unemployment reserve accounts, and are also allowed to stop or reduce their contributions to those accounts when they have built up—and while they maintain—reserves adequate for the payment of all compensation for which they might become liable. These employers, including many Wisconsin employers, objected to the provision in the original bill under which, while States might permit individual employer accounts, employers were to be excused from paying the Federal tax only while their reserve accounts equaled or exceeded 15 percent of their pay roll, and then only on condition that they must continue to pay 1 percent of their pay roll into a pooled State fund. In effect, this section of the original bill would have required Wisconsin to set up a pooled fund to which employers would contribute 1 percent on their pay roll, but would have enabled the State to continue the 2-percent contributions by employers to their own accounts. Employers were anxious to amend this provision to allow them exemption from the Federal tax without being required to make any contributions to a pooled fund.

There is much to be said for the employer's position, but I believe that it is best to ask—at least in the House—only for permission to the States to allow individual employer accounts if they so desire, without, at this time, asking for additional credits to employers who have built up adequate reserves. It will be several years before any employers will have built up reserves sufficient to entitle them to any additional credits against the Federal tax, even if they have no unemployment in the meantime. It is far less important now to determine on what conditions employers shall get additional credits than to permit the States with regard to the establishment of individual reserve or pooled insurance systems.

Dropping all consideration of additional credits against the Federal tax for employers who have built up adequate reserves will remove the main objection advanced against freedom to the States to allow individual employer accounts if they wish to do so, namely, that this will result in nonuniform rates of taxation. If only the amendment suggested is adopted employers in States which permit individual accounts will have to make the same contributions as employers in States with pooled systems, and no claim can be made that they are favored or that the principle of uniformity in taxation is violated.

The real issue raised by this amendment is one of freedom of State action. This is the theory of the bill, and is also in accord with sound policy. Of the four States which have unemployment compensation laws, not only Wisconsin but also Utah provides for individual employer accounts; moreover, there are a considerable number of large employers in other States who have voluntarily established unemployment reserve systems. If the bill passes as it now stands, these two laws, and also the voluntary systems, will have to be scrapped and the employers will lose the protection afforded by the reserves already accumulated. Employers generally will bitterly resent any law which absolutely bars employer accounts and will do everything they can to get such a law repealed. Refusal to permit the States to allow individual employer accounts if they wish will endanger the entire future of unemployment compensation in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WADSWORTH: Beginning on page 47, line 20, strike out all of title IX down to and including line 2 on page 58.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I realize perfectly well that this bill is going to pass the House of Representatives, after being favorably reported by the Committee of the Whole, without any substantial change, and nothing that I can say will prevent it or even tend to prevent it, in view of the determination of the majority.

It is not my purpose to discuss it in detail. Indeed, I do not have time in the 5 minutes allotted to me, but I am going to endeavor to glance a little toward the far future and analyze some one or two things which seem to me to be susceptible of analysis, and certainly worth serious thought on the part of Members of the House regardless of their political affiliations.

First, as to the financing of the major portion of this program. As I understand it—and I have listened attentively to the debate—these funds are to be established in the Treasury Department, through the collection of pay-roll taxes. In one instance, 3 percent upon wages and 3 percent upon the employer, a total of 6 percent; in another instance a 3 percent tax upon the employer. The bill provides in general that those moneys shall be invested solely in the bonds of the Government of the United States or bonds guaranteed as to principal and interest by the Government. As I read the report and have listened to the discussion on the floor, it is apparent that the proponents of this bill expect that this fund will grow from time to time, year after year, until about 1970, if I am not mistaken, the fund will approximate $32,000,000,000, every penny of which must be invested in Government bonds.

It is apparent that unless the national debt of the United States goes far, far beyond $32,000,000,000 in the time over which this calculation is extended, by the time this fund has been built up to any considerable degree it will become a fund large enough to absorb at least a major portion of the national debt, and finally absorb it all.

The bill provides, in effect, that the funds shall be invested in these bonds, but the bonds and special securities authorized by the bill shall net not less than 3-percent interest to the fund. Thus it would seem that when the thing gets started at full blast and goes on year after year, the national debt of the United States must be floated to the fund and only to the fund, and must pay 3 percent.

Now, that may seem an effective and adequate way to finance the Government's financial activities in all the years to come. I am trying to look to the future. Heretofore the Government has financed its undertakings primarily and fundamentally as the result of the confidence of the individual citizen in the soundness of the Government's undertaking, but from this point on we are apparently going to abandon that philosophy of public confidence and resort to a very different practice. The Government is to impose a pay-roll tax through one of its agencies, collect the money into the Treasury Department, then the Treasury Department with its left hand on the proceeds of these taxes is to turn around and buy bonds of the United States Government issued by the right hand of the Treasury Department. Thus the Government of the United States, after this thing gets going, is no longer to be financed directly by its citizens, confident in the soundness of the Government, but it is to be financed instead by arrangements made within the bureauracy—an undemocratic and dangerous proceeding.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] has expired.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, this may not seem important at this moment. I may be old-fashioned. Indeed, I have been charged with being such a good many times, and sometimes the word "Democrat" added to the epithet "old-fashioned", in which case I am very, very lonely in the House of Representatives. [Laughter.] It seems to me that we are moving away from democracy in this new and manipulative method of financing the obligations of the United States. I do not question the integrity and the honor of the men who are going to manage this fund or the men who will be Secretaries of the Treasury down through the years to come, but there is something offensive to me in the spectacle of one branch of the Treasury Department having collected a fund by taxing the working people of America, and then using that money for the floating of its own bonds. It seems to me to present the possibility of a vicious circle, and is certainly removing the financial support of the Government of the United States far from the people themselves and confining it to an inner ring, bureaucratic in character. I am trying to look ahead and visualize what that may mean in the preservation of democracy.

Another point and I am done.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I only have a few minutes. The gentleman can answer me in his own time.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I want to point out to the gentleman that he is making an able argument, but it does not relate at all to the title he has moved to strike from the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Perfectly true. I am discussing the general policies of this bill relating to Government finances, and, probably, strictly speaking, I am out of order for not speaking to the amendment I have offered.

One other thing looking toward the future, Mr. Chairman. I know the appeal this bill has to every human being, that it appeals to the humane instincts of men and women everywhere. We will not deny, however, that it constitutes an immense, immense departure from the traditional functions of the Federal Government for it to be projected into the field of pensioning the individual citizens of the several States. It launches the Federal Government into an immense undertaking which in the aggregate will reach dimensions none of us can really visualize and which in the last analysis, you will admit, affects millions and millions of individuals. Remember, once we pay pensions and supervise annuities, we cannot withdraw from the undertaking no matter how demoralizing and subversive it may become. Pensions and annuities are never abandoned; nor are they ever reduced. The recipients ever clamor for more. To gain their ends they organize politically. They may not constitute a majority of the electorate, but their power will be immense. On more than one occasion we have witnessed the political achievements of organized minorities. This bill opens the door and invites the entrance into the political field of a power so vast, so powerful as to threaten the integrity of our institutions and to pull the pillars of the temple down upon the heads of our descendants.

We are taking a step here today which may well be fateful. I ask you to consider it, to reexamine the fundamental philosophy of this bill, to estimate the future and ask yourselves the questions, "In what sort of country shall our grandchildren live? Shall it be a free country or one in which the citizen is a subject taught to depend upon government?"

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], has just presented a motion which, were it to be adopted, would leave in the bill provisions establishing an unemployment compensation law but take out of the bill the machinery by and through which such provisions would go into operation and have effect. The gentleman has not informed us yet whether he is opposed to unemployment compensation. I yield to the gentleman to find out definitely.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman from New York is going to vote against this bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman has not yet answered my question whether or not he is opposed to unemployment compensation. I will be very glad to yield to the gentleman from New York to answer.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], is amply able to take care of himself. I will be very glad to yield to the gentleman to answer the specific question whether or not he is opposed to unemployment compensation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Under Federal auspices, yes. [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman says he is in favor of unemployment compensation under State auspices, but he is opposed to the Federal Government exercising its powers and its influence to meet this epidemic, this disease from a national angle.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, this is a State system we are providing here.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman had better correct the first two or three sentences of his statement, else he will go on record as being against this from the standpoint of constitutionality.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I do not need any correction from my friend. I am quite capable of forming my own opinions and expressing my own thoughts. [Applause.]

The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], takes the position in favor of State unemployment compensation. With 48 States in the Union he favors it being dependent upon each State assuming the responsibility; and he says he is opposed to the Federal Government encouraging the institution by the State governments of systems by legislation which will meet this evil, this disease, this epidemic which is national. The gentleman does not go the full distance, however, for if this title were stricken out we will have still remaining a national employment compensation law but would have stricken out the power and the methods by and through which it could be put into operation.

If we are confronted with a national problem—and unemployment is a national problem as well as a State problem—are we to have it administered strictly in accordance with our State systems of government, by one State passing a law requiring a 3-percent contribution, a second State passing a law requiring 5- or 6-percent contribution, and a third State passing a law requiring contribution on still another basis? States with a rural and agricultural background would be engaging in competition to gain advantage over each other. States with an industrial background would engage in the same policy with reference to each other of trying to obtain an advantage over each other.

We are confronted with a national question, but the distinguished gentleman from New York takes the position that the powers and the agencies and the influence of the Federal Government should not be exerted to meet this clearly national problem.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. And until such time as the States adopt an unemployment-insurance plan, what happens to these funds which are collected through the 3-percent tax? They go into the general funds of the Treasury, do they not?

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. And may be used for anything?

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course. This bill holds out encouragement to the States to pass unemployment-compensation laws, which they will do because of the taxation features.

The gentleman talked about the Secretary of the Treasury and his use of these funds. He talks about a departure from the traditional functions of the Federal Government. That is the argument that has been advanced against every piece of progressive legislation of the past. It was advanced against the 48-hour law. Also in my State and in other States it was opposed as imposing additional burdens upon industry. It has been the argument against every piece of progressive legislation in State and Nation. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HIGGINS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I recognize the argument submitted by Members on the other side of the aisle. I, like my colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY], am not in sympathy with the machinery that is set up to provide money for financing the undertaking proposed in this bill. However, the merits of the bill outweigh its weak features, and accordingly I am going to vote for it. The thing I want to call the attention of the Committee on Ways and Means to is the fact that I hope that for the next year they are going to give this matter attention and undoubtedly attempt to perfect what, to my mind, is a fairly decent structure for the so-called "social-security plan." May I call to their attention the fact that unless the article in this bill is changed providing and stipulating to a State that a man need only have 5 years of residence in a State in order to become eligible to be a recipient of the old-age-pension plan, Massachusetts will become a Utopia. Under this provision, and I submit this to my colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], who always has the welfare of our State at heart, the State of Massachusetts will literally become the Utopia for every pensioneer in the country. We have today a perfected system in Massachusetts which provides for 20 years of uninterrupted residence in our State before one is entitled to the benefit of old-age assistance.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HIGGINS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Does the gentleman think that after a person arrives at the age of 65 he is going to move to the State of Massachusetts and lose 5 years?

Mr. HIGGINS of Massachusetts. No; but I think a man who is 60 will be encouraged to spend the next 5 years of his life in Massachusetts. That fact has been evidenced to the Members of this House. Ask any gentleman from California in reference to the migration to California within a year because of the publicity given to the Sinclair EPIC plan. New York and Massachusetts have perfected a system. Now, what is going to stop the residents of Vermont, Rhode Island, Maine, and every other State in the Union from moving into Massachusetts, where we pay the highest pensions of any State to our residents?

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HIGGINS of Massachusetts. I yield to my friend and colleague from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. This is not the E. P. I. C. plan.

Mr. HIGGINS of Massachusetts. I appreciate that.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman I am sure does not subscribe to the necessity of a 20-year residence in a State in order to obtain some old-age benefits?

Mr. HIGGINS of Massachusetts. Not at all, but at the same time I want Massachusetts money to be provided for Massachusetts residents, not given to carpetbaggers who move into the State to get the benefit of our high pension rates.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HIGGINS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Inasmuch as the gentleman mentioned California, I may say that they went there, not on account of the E. P. I. C. plan, but on account of the salubrious climate.

Mr. HIGGINS of Massachusetts. Yes; but the gentleman knows also that there have been thousands move into California on the strength and the attraction of the so-called "E. P. I. C. plan."

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HIGGINS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman realizes there are other requirements than the residence requirement in this old-age-pension plan?

Mr. HIGGINS of Massachusetts. Yes; and the other requirements for a pension are left to the States, except the important restriction which placed upon the States in title I, which says that no State can bar any applicant who has lived in the State for 5 years. I am in accord with the provision if it will help any bona fide resident of Massachusetts, but would want it changed because it permits men and women who have no connection or ever lived previously in Massachusetts to come into our State, live 5 years in the State, and be recipient of a pension. Proper thing to do would be to let Massachusetts Legislature determine the period of time required.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The man must be destitute and in need.

Mr. HIGGINS of Massachusetts. Yes. I am in favor of aiding the needy but they must be Massachusetts men and women who are needy.

Mr. DOUGHTON. If he moves from New York to Massachusetts and he is 60 years old, as well as being dependent, what is he going to live on?

Mr. HIGGINS of Massachusetts. He will not move from New York to Massachusetts because they have two similar and perfected systems.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Or from any other State.

Mr. HIGGINS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the overwhelming expressions of opinion in favor of the so-called "social-security bill" by Members of the House reflects the opinion of the American people on this subject. There is no more appealing subject to the mind of the people of all classes than the tragedy and misfortune of men and women too old to work and without a dollar of income and the example of men and women physically able and willing to work, but who, because of the present set-up of our industrial system, are unable to obtain work. The need of security against poverty in old age and the hazard of unemployment is obvious. We have neglected the problem for years notwithstanding the fact that while our industrial development, with the adoption of age limits for employment by many firms was decreasing the years of remunerative employment, the period of old age, and the number of our citizens in that classification was on the marked increase. The need for security has been accentuated during the depression and after resisting these social changes for over a half century that they have been in operation in other countries, it is only after the collapse of our social system during the past 5 years that the need of such legislation has attracted our attention.

Conditions are changing and our laws pertaining to these social and economic changes should be brought abreast of the times, for laws that are archaic and not in harmony with the needs of the people make a nation unhappy and its people difficult to govern. The greatest good for the greatest number of our people should be the only standard whereby our laws should be formulated. The program for old-age assistance in the present bill divides the subject into three distinct divisions, all with the same objective of eliminating the insecurity attached to old age:

(a) A Federal subsidy to help States pay old-age pensions at once, the Government to contribute 50 percent of the pensions, but not more than $15 a month per person, provided State laws meet certain minimum standards.

(b) The inauguration of a compulsory contributory plan of old-age insurance, with contributions by employees and their employers, to provide for the aged of the future, the system to be administered as a national plan by the Federal Government.

(c) A system of voluntary old-age insurance for those whose incomes excludes them from the compulsory plan, administered by the Federal Government and paid for by regular individual premiums.

The program of old-age insurance recognizes the fact that old age is a universal hazard and makes provisions in one of the three above-described classes for every citizen. The plan distinguishes between the problem of relieving the conditions of persons already of advanced years and the insurance against old age of those citizens now in the prime of life. The magnitude of the problem of financing old-age pensions in years to come may be appreciated by a compilation of the actual and estimated minimum number of persons aged 65 and over compared to the total population from 1860 to 2000.

Year	Total population	Number aged 65 and over	Percent aged 65 and over
1860	31,443,000	849,000	2.7
1870	38,558,000	1,154,000	3.0

1890	62,622,000	2,424,000	3.9
1900	75,995,000	3,089,000	4.1
1910	91,972,000	3,958,000	4.3
1920	105,711,000	4,940,000	4.7
1930	122,775,000	6,634,000	5.4
1940	132,000,000	8,311,000	6.3
1950	141,000,000	10,863,000	7.7
1960	146,000,000	13,590,000	9.3
1970	149,000,000	15,066,000	10.1
1980	150,000,000	17,001,000	11.3
1990	151,000,000	19,102,000	12.6

It is quite obvious that if the plan of Federal subsidy whereby the Government contributes 50 percent of the pension to States, but which in no event will the grant by the Government exceed $15 per month, regardless of what pension amount is allowed by the State, were to stand alone, gratuitous old-age pensions would be an impossible financial burden on the Government within the next 30 years, because, as indicated in the table, of the increasing number of aged. To curb the cost of federally aided State pensions, this bill provides for the two other plans, (b) and (c) above, applicable to those who have not reached old age, both of which embrace the contributory feature by younger gainfully employed persons who will thus be assured of more liberal old-age pensions through this system of contributory insurance. For reasons that are obvious after an analysis of the reduced long-time cost of this system, I am willing to vote for an amendment that will increase the gratuitous grants by the Government to the State so that men and women who are in old age today will receive a pension sufficient to permit them to spend their declining years in happiness and contentment, with a decent income, divorced in every sense from the tinge of dole or pauperism.

The policy of providing public money for the care of dependent children, maternal, and child-welfare and public-health service expansion to prevent sickness and disability is well recognized as an obligation of all divisions of government and is merely a furtherance of the principle of human charity. The core of any social plan must be the child, for in less than a generation these children will constitute the adults who must carry the burdens of our social system and the responsibilities of our Government. The child-welfare program, mothers' aid, and provisions against sickness and disability provided for in the bill are so manifestly human that I cannot conceive anyone opposing these features of the bill.

The real difference of opinion on this bill among Members has been on the subject of unemployment-insurance compensation. In considering this important part of the general security plan we must admit that its purpose is to alleviate the shock of unemployment and to increase the continuity of employment. The need of unemployment insurance in any country is a challenge to those in command of our industry and commerce, for it is hard to conceive the spectacle of 18,000,000 American citizens receiving Government relief in one form or another in the midst of an industrial system which I conclude, if properly organized and administered, would yield dividends to the American people in the form of social security that would pale into insignificance the benefits we seek to obtain by this bill under consideration today. Unemployment remains as a problem of industry, and unemployment insurance is a necessity in our modern industrial life.

Any measure designed to insure against unemployment must be permanent, uniform, and national. The plan before us embraces these three essentials and provides for a tax on pay rolls, beginning at 1 percent January 1, 1936, and reaching 3 percent by 1938 and 5 percent by 1957, with employers receiving a 90-percent credit on contributions they make to approved State unemployment-insurance systems. The payment to persons out of work would be $15 a week. On a 3-percent contribution basis, the maximum benefit period would be 15 weeks. The objection to the unemployment-insurance feature of the bill has been the anticipated burden upon industry. The opponents contend that the plan is unworkable, fantastic, and ruinous to industry. However, to my mind, the building up of unemployment reserves, providing for the protection of labor, is similar to the provisions made by capital establishing reserve funds for corporations. There can be no doubt that the depression for the past 5 or 6 years has made inroads into the income and the standard of living of the working classes. In contrast with this condition has been the record of dividend and interest payments by American corporations, particularly during the first 2 years of the business depression.

It is quite obvious and grossly inequitable that industrialists should be protected by the accumulation of these reserves which tend to stabilize the money incomes of these individuals through strained economic times. To them it is a perfectly correct policy to stabilize their incomes. If that policy is applicable to the money classes, what, then, is wrong with the creation of such reserves to protect the income of the working classes and the low-salaried men and women in industry in order to insure them against being thrown out of work and deprived of their current earnings? A system in which one group is so well protected cannot continue to function with any degree of effectiveness and without harmonious coordination. With these facts admitted, it is ironical for a class whose incomes are stabilized to object to any system of unemployment insurance that will guarantee a reserve for the laboring man in times of economic distress.

It is quite evident to all who have studied this problem that any system of unemployment insurance should be compulsory. The objection raised by men who are opposed to this bill is that it will add a great financial burden to industry, which they claim is already staggering under a financial tax load. However, if we are to have a system of unemployment insurance, it must be mandatory, because long experience has taught us that private enterprise, except in rare cases, has not embraced the principles of unemployment insurance on a voluntary basis. It has been said that we have approximately 31,000,000 wage earners in occupations other than agriculture who need the protection of unemployment insurance, and it is apparent that after 15 years of voluntary experimentation by private industrial plans, commencing with the inauguration of the Dennison plan in 1916, the result has been that only about two-thirds of 1 percent of those exposed to the hazard and risk of unemployment are covered by insurance. The interest displayed by far-sighted industrial firms, such as Dennison, Columbia Reserve, Procter & Gamble, and others, is not taken seriously by their fellow industrialists, and there has been no evidence of a willingness on the part of other firms to follow this movement of voluntary unemployment insurance. The pioneers in industry who have established voluntary systems have done commendable service in getting the public mind oriented to the problem by their cumulative experience that will be of aid to any new plan. Yet, it is more than that; if the money of the American worker is to be protected, it must be by some form of mandatory insurance which will make it obligatory upon industry to carry it into effect.

There is a wide difference of opinion as to who will make contributions to the reserve fund set up by a new unemployment system. The potential sources of contribution are three—employers, workers, and the State. In the European systems we find varying combinations of these possibilities. For example, in the Ghent system of voluntary insurance the State and the worker are the contributors and the employers are exempted from payment except for such slight contribution as they make in Denmark. In Italy the employer and the worker alone contribute to the compulsory insurance of that country. In Great Britain the employers, workers, and the State contribute to the reserve set up by the system, but in the case of Great Britain the Government merely bears the total expense of extended benefits which are paid after the twenty-sixth week to those in need. In Germany the contributions are made by the worker and employer and the Government merely bears the expense of emergency benefits. In Russia, as one would expect, the exclusive cost of benefits is charged to the employer, but the word "employer" in this sense does not mean the same as in capitalistic countries, but employers are rather what we call state trusts.

It is with the plan of unemployment insurance in this bill I am not in accord. I agree there must be contributions by the employer because unemployment has its origin in our unorganized industrial system and by the Government which has the duty to provide for the well-being of our citizens. If the Government is to compel contributions by the employee and act only as a custodian of the funds, then the contribution by the worker should be a nominal one, and the State should pay extended benefits. The money needed for the Government to pay such extended benefits could be obtained by some such plan as provided by—

FIRST. INCOME TAXES OF INDIVIDUALS

If the United States were to apply merely the tax rates of Great Britain upon all individual incomes of $5,000 or over, a considerable sum would be available for social insurance. These rates in 1928 would have yielded the Federal Government five and three-fourths billion dollars as against slightly over one billion actually collected. In 1932, a year of low income, we would have collected on the same basis $1,128,000,000, as against the actual receipts of $324,000,000.

SECOND. CORPORATION INCOME TAX

Compared with other countries also our corporation tax is very low. Taking a flat rate of 25 percent, we would have raised in 1928 the amount of $2,600,000,000 instead of $1,200,000,000.

THIRD. INHERITANCE OR ESTATES

Here again the United States is very lenient. In 1928, on a total declared gross estate of three and one-half billion dollars, the total collected by Federal and States taxes was only $42,000,000, or a little over 1 percent. If an average of 25 percent were taken, this would have been raised in 1928 to $888,000,000.

FOURTH. TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES

Exact figures on the total are not available, but here is an important source of large additional returns which should be available for the general welfare.

FIFTH. TAX ON CORPORATE SURPLUS

In 1928 the corporate surplus, representing the accumulation by corporations of funds which have not been distributed to labor and capital, amounted to $47,000,000,000, and even in 1932 it was over thirty-six billions. Made possible as it is by the cooperation of labor and capital, thus surplus which is now set aside to meet capital's claim for exigencies certainly should be also a source of funds for labor's social insurance in the exigencies of unemployment. The Department of Commerce has showed in its study of the national income that labor has lost a larger percent of its earned income in the depression than capital has lost in interest charges, because capital has been sustained by drawing both on current income and on accumulated surplus. The great economist, Adam Smith, 150 years ago called the industrial system a "collective undertaking." Thus it is both logical and just to provide a tax on corporate surpluses as a source for social insurance.

Another regrettable feature of the present bill is that it makes no provision for the countless millions that are presently unemployed. This great army of men and women must first be absorbed by industry before they become eligible to participate in the plan. Under the method in the bill before Congress the worker, in addition to paying his own assessment, will also, as a consumer, pay the employers' contribution. Maximum payments of $15 a week for 16 weeks, after a waiting period of 4 weeks, cannot by the widest stretch of the imagination be termed extravagant.

I appreciate my time is limited, Mr. Speaker, and I must conclude with a general observation that there is imperative need of unemployment protection. Neither the present bill or a bill that would embrace the thoughts I have expressed on the subject can be termed an impractical or Utopian scheme. The bill in its present form, I am confident, will pass, and it is my intention to vote for its enactment because of the many appealing features of old-age pensions, mothers' aid, and public health, together with a structure at least for an unemployment-insurance plan which, even though not ideal today, will be perfected I hope by a continued study and amendment to the bill by future Congresses. Passage of this act today will establish a new milestone in future economic security of our citizens.

(Mr. HIGGINS of Massachusetts asked for and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this title and all amendments thereto close in 8 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, in a very few minutes the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union will rise and recommend that this bill, upon which we are now concluding more than 30 hours of debate and to which 42 amendments have been offered and rejected, do pass. The Committee will recommend that this bill, the President's Social Security Act, covering 60 printed pages and 10 different titles, or subjects, be passed exactly as it was sent to us, word for word, without a single amendment, without a single betterment and without a single change.

These 42 amendments have been offered from the floor not by Republicans alone, but by some of the most distinguished Members on the Democratic side, Members whose knowledge and experience in this class of legislation is recognized both by the Congress and by the country. Some of these amendments were so worthy, so admittedly valuable, that no word of criticism could be offered to them, and none was offered. And yet every one of these amendments have been defeated, every one of them shouted down regardless of their merit, by practically solid Democratic votes.

Nor is that all. When the Committee rises and reports that it has succeeded in throwing out every suggestion for the betterment of this bill that has been offered by any of the 435 Members of the House—except two insignificant changes agreed to in advance by the administration and opposed by no one—the Committee will then ask the House to approve and adopt its report. And the 332 Democrats of the House, including those whose amendments have been spurned, will vote solidly and unanimously to approve and adopt the report, and thus put in order the passage of this bill which, I venture to say, does not satisfy 10 percent even of the Democrats of the House.

As an outstanding example of this administration's perfect and absolute control of its 3-to-1 Democratic majority in Congress the progress of this bill through the House has been unique. Reports have gone out from time to time recently that the administration was beginning to lose its iron grip upon majority Members in this body and that Democrats in the House could be expected in the future to begin to show some signs of independent thinking and independent voting. Mr. Chairman, I regret to say that the hopes of the country raised by those reports have been effectively blasted during the past 30 hours.

Never in this session of the Congress, nor in the preceding one, have I seen the administration machine so well oiled. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, there has been no real consideration of this bill. The reading of it for amendment under the 5-minute rule may just as well have been dispensed with. All of the amendments, regardless of their merit, were intended by the Democratic leaders from the very first to be defeated and they were voted down solidly on that side of the House just as fast as they were offered. Most of the good amendments, on the other hand, as the division and teller votes will show, were supported by the Republican side of the House, without regard to whether those amendments were offered by Democrats or Republicans.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I am sorry, but I have only 5 minutes, which barely gives me time to say what I want to say at this point.

Mr. SISSON. What would the gentleman call "real consideration"?

Mr. MOTT. I repeat, I am sorry, but I must decline to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, that was the case in all of the amendments offered, with the exception of one or two. Even the vote on the revised McGroarty old-age-pension bill amendment and the Scrugham-Greenway old-age-pension amendment was almost a party vote. I call attention to what I consider the rather remarkable fact that on an amendment so far-reaching as the one to substitute the McGroarty bill for the old-age-pension provisions of the administration bill, more than half of the Republicans present on the floor at that time voted "yes" and they stood up and were counted. Thirty-eight of them voted "yes" and that is more than one-third of the entire Republican membership of the House, while only 18 Democrats out of a total of 168 present, and out of a total Democratic membership of 332, voted in favor of that amendment. [Applause.]

Why, Mr. Chairman, even the amendment offered by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], to include a small Federal contribution to States to aid them in providing for their indigent blind people, was voted down by a solid party vote. Just two gentlemen on the Democratic side voted "yes" and stood up to be counted on that vote, while every Republican voted for it. Do my Democratic friends mean to tell me that they did not want to vote for that amendment? We know you wanted to. We saw many of you looking toward the leader's table with a look almost of longing in your eyes. Why, Mr. Chairman, every gentleman in this House knows that a single nod from the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee seated at the table across the aisle would have brought every Democrat to his feet in approval of that amendment. But the nod did not come, Mr. Chairman, and the indigent blind man will continue to beg with his tin cup on the street corner.

It is not what you did in this bill that is so wrong. It is what you did not do that will disappoint and dissatisfy the country. You had such a wonderful chance in this legislation to give us a real solution to the problem of old age and unemployment. The country was hoping for it. It was waiting for it. It was expecting it. You have not done your duty either by the country or by yourselves.

Mr. Chairman, there is a little good in this administration bill as well as some bad. Its greatest faults are those of omission rather than of commission. In considering how one should vote upon a bill as inadequate and unsatisfactory as this one is, a Republican is confronted with the same old situation and the same old question that has confronted him in every major piece of administration legislation that has been offered in the last two sessions of the Congress.

In most of this major legislation there has been a crumb of good, and in order to get that crumb we have had to take the bad along with it. Never have you permitted us to improve one of your major bills. Never has your 3 to 1 majority allowed us to substitute a better bill for it. Never have you gone the whole way upon the solution of any problem, even when the majority of the individual membership on both sides of the House desired it. We have been given always what the executive department wanted us to consider, and we have been allowed to consider nothing else on that particular subject. With less than one-third of the membership of the House on the minority side we have been rendered helpless against your overwhelming majority.

And so, as usual, we must determine now in this bill whether the good outweighs the bad. When I say "we" I am referring to Republicans. I know, of course, that our Democratic friends are not burdened with that kind of a problem because they will vote upon this bill as they have voted on all of them; that is, as a party measure.

Mr. Chairman, although this bill is entirely inadequate, although it gives the aged poor of our country only a pauper's pension, still I am confronted with the fact that without this bill they will not even get that, so far as the Federal Government is concerned. This is the only bill we will have at this session on the subject of old-age pensions, and for the time being it is a case of this or nothing. And so, after having put up as good a fight as I could for something better, having supported as strongly as I could all worthy amendments that have been offered and having seen them all defeated, I intend to vote for the bill now [applause], but I vote for it solely upon the ground that it is better than nothing. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether I dare intrude upon the patience of this body at this time, even to the extent of 3 minutes, but I would like to address myself to the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

The gentleman from Massachusetts quite properly pointed out that the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], to strike out all of title IX would be rather futile inasmuch as it would still leave the companion title, title III, in the bill which sets up the necessary machinery.

I sincerely hope therefore that some member of the Committee on the minority side will offer a motion to recommit the bill and include instructions to strike out both said titles of the bill, and for this reason: I have long been an advocate of unemployment insurance, and I shall so continue, but I cannot feel good about the provisions of this bill which relate to unemployment insurance and old-age insurance, or accept them as the best thought to incorporate in permanent legislation.

The provisions of this bill will not apply until 1942. Why, then, all this haste about the unemployment-insurance provision of the measure? We can keep intact the other commendable portions of this measure and give further thought and study to the advisability of erecting a permanent structure for unemployment insurance such as the one now before us, which makes the load fall entirely upon labor and upon the consumer.

This omnibus bill holds out nothing to the present unemployed, and the Committee does not try to deceive us on that point. They state this frankly in their report. The unemployed has no help in any part of this measure and neither has an employed person anything very cheerful to look forward to. All he has to face is a small added penalty which increases as the years roll on. If the employer does not pass the tax on to him in the form of wage reductions, the employer will pass it on to him in his capacity as a consumer. He cannot escape. He may get it both ways.

Agriculture, in addition to being left entirely out of the picture, faces the possibility of a reduction in national purchasing power that does not bode well for his commodity prices.

If the motion to recommit might prevail, I could support the measure gladly, because of its belated recognition of governmental responsibilities for which I have long and consistently fought, even though none of its provisions can be termed adequate or commensurate with what we might like to provide.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to include, as an extension of my remarks, a statement which has been prepared by the American Association for Social Security, of 22 East Seventeenth Street, New York City. It briefly and ably analyzes the provisions of the revised measure.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The statement follows:

The revised bill is a vast improvement over the original Wagner-Lewis-Doughton bill. Unlike the jumble of confusion in the original draft, this bill is clearly written, and its provisions are lucid. It is logically arranged, and its aims are clearly set forth.

It is still an omnibus bill. It contains 10 titles and covers 9 different subjects:

(1) Old-age pensions.
(2) Old-age insurance.
(3) Unemployment insurance.
(4) Dependent children.
(5) Infant and maternal welfare.
(6) Welfare services for children.
(7) Vocational rehabilitation.
(8) Care of crippled children.
(9) Federal public-health services.

It makes 9 appropriations and sets up 3 different taxation systems: 1 on employees and 2 on employers.

The appropriations are made to three different agencies:

(1) To the Federal Social Security Board: (a) For subsidies to State old-age-pension systems; (b) for subsidies to State plans for dependent children; (c) for aid in the administration of State unemployment-insurance systems; (d) for administrative expenses of the Board.

(2) To the United States Department of Labor: (a) For promotion of the health of mothers and children, especially in rural areas; (b) for services to crippled children and the provision of medical, surgical, and corrective care for them; (c) for establishment, extension, and strengthening of public-welfare services in rural areas for children; (d) for extending and strengthening programs for vocational rehabilitation.

(3) To the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service: (a) For the establishment and maintenance of public-health services.

OLD-AGE-INSURANCE TAXES

The bill sets up a tax on wages for old-age insurance, euphoniously called an "income tax." This tax is levied on all employees regardless of their wages or salaries, but not more than $3,000 a year is taken as the basis for contributions. Exempted are agricultural laborers, domestic servants in a private home, casual laborers, crews of ships, Government employees, and workers in educational and charitable institutions. This tax, to be collected from wages, will be equal to 1 percent of wages during 1937–39, 1½ percent during 1940–42, 2 percent during 1943–45, 2½ percent during 1946–48, and 3 percent beginning with 1949 and thereafter.

Employers are to pay similar contributions for the same purpose.

UNEMPLOYMENT-INSURANCE TAX

An excise tax on all employers of 10 or more workers (including officers of a corporation) is set up for unemployment insurance. This tax is at the rate of 1 percent of the total wages paid in 1936, 2 percent in 1937, and 3 percent from 1938 on. Similar classes of employees are exempted as under the old-age insurance plan.

Employers making contributions to approved State unemployment-insurance funds are relieved up to 90 percent of the Federal tax.

SOCIAL IMPLICATIONS OF REVISED BILL

OLD-AGE PENSIONS

The revised bill does not set up as desirable standards as conditions for Federal subsidies to State old-age pension systems as were contained in the original bill. The problem is nevertheless met adequately. The passage of this part of the bill will mean the greatest step forward in social security. It can definitely be expected to bring about a Nation-wide system of old-age security for our destitute aged. The needs of the aged can be adequately met through this bill.

DEPENDENT CHILDREN

The same applies to the Federal subsidy for dependent children. It is thoroughly sound and will help the States to meet this problem. If necessary the Federal Government can later increase its share of the cost, now fixed at only one-third.

OTHER WELFARE PROVISIONS

The various appropriations made to the Children's Bureau and the Surgeon General for maternal and child care, crippled children, public-health services, vocational rehabilitation, etc., are necessary and should be enacted. They have little to do with the Social Security Board created under this bill, and there was no real necessity for including these features in the bill.

OLD-AGE INSURANCE

From a social point of view the most vulnerable feature of the bill is involved in the contributory old-age-insurance system which is pregnant with many social dangers:

(1) The bill puts the entire burden of the future support of the aged upon the workers and industry. Since industry is bound to pass on its contribution to the consumers it means that the employees, in their dual role of workers and consumers, are to be made to bear practically the entire burden of support of the aged. Beginning 5 years hence the burden of old-age support will be increasingly shifted upon that part of the population least able to bear it. The wealthier groups in the community will be gradually relieved of their share toward old-age support since the contributions from the workers will more and more assume the responsibility for the care of all the aged even if the latter have contributed for only short periods. No nation has ever put into operation a contributory old-age insurance plan without placing at least some of the burden on the State in order to make possible the sharing of the costs by the higher income groups. Even 50 years ago the German Government assumed a definite share. This has been followed by all other industrial countries.
